A few years ago, when we had before us a bill of some considerable domestic importance having to do with holding companies—I say it was a matter of considerable domestic importance merely to emphasize the fact that it did not involve the safety or the life of the United States—Congress was assailed by a great lot of propaganda on both sides of the legislation, and the then senior Senator from Alabama, now Justice Black of the Supreme Court of the United States, offered a resolution, which was adopted by the Senate, creating a committee to investigate lobbying. Many witnesses were brought before the committee, and they disclosed some rather startling facts as to the organization of propaganda to influence the Congress. The committee spent much money on the investigation, and I dare say the money was well spent.

Just a year or two later the President had a bill introduced in the Congress for the purpose of packing the Supreme Court of the United States. It was a matter of very violent controversy, striking straight across party lines throughout the United States, and there was a great deal of propaganda on both sides of that question. The old lobby committee was called together again, still being in existence, and it proceeded to investigate an organization which was alleged to be a propaganda organization, and I think it was a propaganda organization, although I always thought it was a rather ineffectual one. It happened to be on the same side of the controversy I was on. It was an organization headed by Mr. Gannett, up in New York, and the committee proceeded to investigate that organization.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I know the Senator wants to have the record correct——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do, and if I have made an error, I trust the Senator will correct me.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The investigation of the Gannett organization was in the spring of 1938.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was about to come to that. Perhaps the Senator is correct. I was about to say that then the reorganization bill came along, and Mr. Gannett got up another propaganda organization. I again thought that this was rather ineffectual, but it was called a lobbying organization, a propaganda organization, organized for the purpose of influencing governmental action, and it was haled before this great tribunal of the Senate.

The Lobby Committee is still in existence. I do not think they have much in the way of funds left, but the committee is still in existence. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] is chairman of it; the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] is a member; and I think the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] is now a member. I have forgotten who the other members are. Undoubtedly they are eminent and distinguished Senators.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is on the committee, and the late Senator Gibson was a member of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is on the committee, as the Senator has said, and the late Senator Gibson, of Vermont, was a member of the committee. I suggest that in dealing with the propaganda organizations which have been investigated by the committee—and the investigations were very ably conducted—the committee has dealt with no subject, not even the Supreme Court question, comparable with the efforts of the propaganda organization which I am about to discuss, formed for the purpose of dragging the United States, willy-nilly, into a fearful foreign war.

I suggest to the Senator from Washington, and I would suggest to the Senator from Indiana except that he happens to be temporarily absent from the floor, that I think the existing Lobby Committee might very well start in to investigate this, the most dangerous and insidious form of propaganda that has ever operated in the United States during my lifetime.

I also say that, failing that, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate might well see fit to report out and let the Senate vote on a resolution which I offered more than a year ago, even if they report it adversely, a resolution which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations several months ago, designed to provide for an investigation of all propaganda, from any source, organized for the purpose of changing the neutral position of the United States and getting us into war.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOWNEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator knows that for years people have been coming to our country from Europe to lecture our people. I do not know who pays them. They are here to stir up the emotions of the American people, so as to get us to enter the war. Does not the Senator think that his resolution would cover these lecturers who come to our country?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it is my idea that anyone who is seeking to influence the position of the United States and to drag us into war on either side should have the light turned on him, so that the American people would know who is doing it, and why he is doing it. If the American people in their wisdom desire to get into a war, that is the business of the American people, and, as an American citizen, I would bow to the will of the majority in that respect. But the American people should know how public thought and the avenues of public opinion are being poisoned through the processes of propaganda.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator's resolution would cover these people who come to our country from various countries to do missionary work, to drag us into war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That was my intention. For instance, if my resolution were adopted, in my opinion it would cover such cases as that of Sir George Paish, who lobbied in the United States for years before the present war for the purpose of having the United States remit the war debts of various European countries. He came to see the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and, as the Senator from Montana testified on this floor a few days ago, he more or less threatened him by telling him that the American people had always done everything he, Sir George Paish, asked them to do. He was asking not only that we send destroyers, but that we send men and money and anything else which might be necessary.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If my resolution were adopted, and I had anything to do with enforcing it, it would lead to the investigation of such persons as Sir George Paish. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator think any other government would tolerate having foreigners come into their countries and stir up war sentiment among the people?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I doubt very much if there is another country in the world in which some of the agitators who have been trying to get us into war, coming in from the outside of the country, might not have been finally lined up against a wall in front of a firing squad.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is evident from the newspapers that some of the so-called prominent people are receiving these foreign agitators with open arms.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think there is any question about that. Some of the members of these propaganda organizations which I shall discuss in a moment were born abroad, some of them have worked abroad, and many of them have their roots abroad, instead of in the institutions of the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will yield further, many of them have held public office under foreign governments, were public officials, and have come here and talked to our people from the standpoint of the policy of a foreign country, telling us what our foreign policy should be.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think there can be no question about that fact.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is astonishing to see how many Americans take their ideas from abroad, instead of formulating their own ideas, based upon our own best interests.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield for a comment on that point?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. As an instance of that, Duff Cooper came to this country and lectured, and was entertained by officials of the United States, returned to England, and was made head of the Ministry of Information.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I dare say he was getting plenty of information while he was here, too.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator's resolution would touch such men as Noel Coward, who can reach certain strata of our social life that should be reached better than any other man in America. In other words, he has a silk hat and can get into Park Avenue.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield again?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Since Duff Cooper has been mentioned, I may say that he came to Minneapolis, in my State, and addressed the teachers of the graded schools in Minneapolis. I do not believe those people at that time knew he was the chief of the propaganda service of the British Government. Just think of it, a man whose business for a great and powerful government is to get every country he can to join his country in war, is permitted to come here and talk to our children in the public schools and, by implication or by propaganda, instill into the minds of the teachers who teach our schools what our policy should be in foreign relations. I think it is one of the most disgraceful things that ever happened in my State; and there has been no outcry. Everyone knew that he was here as the chief propaganda agent of the British Government to get any country he could to join in the war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will also observe the fact that the propaganda allies in this country of the British propaganda minister, Duff Cooper, are very free to accuse anyone who happens to own his own soul, and to owe allegiance only to the United States of America, and to the flag of the United States, and who is opposed to our getting into the war, as a "fifth columnist."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I want the Senator to know about another man who has come here, and who had a conference with the President of the United States. I checked the Washington papers, I checked the Baltimore papers, I checked the Philadelphia papers, and I checked the New York papers. This man had a conference with the President of the United States, and not one single, solitary word appeared in a single newspaper in the United States about his conference with the President. I refer to Sir Campbell Stuart, who was in charge of propaganda in enemy countries during the World War, as another instance in the propaganda drive. Why should he have secret conferences with the President of the United States and no newspaperman in this country know of it?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NYE. As the Senator knows, I have large interest in his resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate propaganda. I am conversant with the effort he made, a very successful effort, to get unanimous-consent approval of the resolution by the Committee on Foreign Relations. Will the Senator state whether or not there has been any explanation afforded as to why the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has not seen fit to report the resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have not, except that the chairman of the committee stated to me very frankly on numerous occasions that he was opposed to it.

I have pressed for hearing on numerous occasions, and, as a matter of fact, various times may have been agreed upon, but for one reason or another, sometimes because of the convenience of the committee, that is because of the duties of some member of the committee in connection with the Appropriations Committee, for example, and once or twice because of my attendance on other committees, there has never been a hearing. As I have frequently stated to members of the committee, I would infinitely prefer to have the resolution reported to the Senate, even if adversely, so that we might have some discussion in the Senate on it than to have it killed in a committee whose function I do not believe it to be to pass upon the question of whether investigation should be made.

Mr. NYE. I am sure that if that were done, as I think the Senator will agree, there is little doubt as to what the action of the Senate would be on the resolution.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. If I may make a suggestion to the Senator from Missouri, so that the record of his speech may be clear, I suggest that at this point in his remarks he place in the RECORD the resolution, to show that its full purpose is to investigate foreign propaganda to involve us in war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be very glad to do that if I may have unanimous consent, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, consent is granted.

The resolution (S. Res. 186) submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on September 28, 1939, and reported with amendments from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate on March 27, 1940, as proposed to be amended, is as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the activities of any person, firm, or corporation acting for any foreign nation, by way of propaganda or otherwise, having as their ultimate goal or tending to cause, directly or indirectly, a change in the neutral position of the United States in the conflicts now being waged abroad. The committee shall report to the Senate the results of its study and investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ and to call upon executive departments for clerical and other assistance, to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents; to make such investigations, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to incur such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, as I said at the outset of my remarks, I have no desire or disposition to thresh over old straw or to revert to a discussion of the destroyer deal, except as it may be an indication of events to come. As I said, we have been put on notice by possibly the most powerful interlocking set of propaganda agencies this country has ever seen that they intend next to move to send overseas the flying fortresses of the United States, then the torpedo boats of the United States, the mosquito fleet of the United States, then the bomb sight; and, of course, no one can doubt that it will then be necessary, in the estimation of these agencies, to send our battleships—all the battleships we have—and to send men, and absolutely denude this country of any defense of its own. That these same propaganda agents, some of whom have already actually declared in public advertisements in favor of immediate declaration of war, will be turned loose to influence not only Congress but, far more sinister than that, to influence the executive agencies of this Government to plunge us into war without the authority of the Congress is hardly subject to doubt.

Mr. President, in what I am about to say about this propaganda, this interlocking system of propaganda agencies, the public front of which is Mr. William Allen White, of Emporia, Kans., I should like it to be understood that I do not intend in any way to reflect upon the character or the integrity of the men and women who make up that organization, particularly of Mr. William Allen White himself. I have known Mr. White ever since I was a little boy. Among my most cherished books is the first book that Mr. White ever wrote, called The Court of Boyville, which he gave to my father to give to me when I was a little boy. A few years ago I had the pleasure of taking a trip to the Orient with Mr. White and his lovely wife, and I entertain for Mr. and Mrs. White love and affection and respect, wrong as I think Mr. White is in these activities.

Mr. President, this is a question of too momentous importance to the American people to allow personalities or personal friendship to enter into the matter.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator knows that at the meeting when the question was discussed of setting up this organization those present wanted to find out who they could put out in front, so they first said, "We should get somebody from the Midwest in order not to have the eastern tie-up. Second, we should get a small-business man, not one connected with big corporations. Third, we should get a Republican, so it would not look like an administration matter." They found in Mr. White the answer to all three conditions. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that that was actually discussed by those who formed the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. White met with all three requirements, particularly the latter, because, even while Mr. Roosevelt was announcing the destroyer deal, Mr. White announced his very vigorous support of Wendell Willkie for President of the United States.

On Monday I inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD, by permission of the Senate, an article appearing in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch last Sunday, which I described at that time as being, in my opinion, one of the most important and one of the most illuminating articles from a factual standpoint that has appeared in many years in this country in any newspaper or magazine. It was written by Mr. Charles G. Ross, former editor of the editorial page of the Post-Dispatch, and now contributing editor. The article undertakes to draw no conclusions of any sort, but from the standpoint of a display of facts is a remarkable piece of reporting. I wish every Member of the Senate might have had the opportunity and the time to read that article, which was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last Monday. He describes this interlocking system of propaganda, and he begins the article by describing this "William Allen White committee to get us into war," as I call it, or, as he calls it, "to defend America by giving away our weapons to somebody else," or something of the sort. I never can remember the name of it because it is misleading. Mr. Ross begins his article by a quotation from Mr. White. Mr. White himself defined his own organization in a radio speech on a national hook-up as "this engine of publicity and propaganda."

Mr. President, have we come to such a pass in this Nation that the United States can be plunged into war, that our boys can be conscripted, that our taxpayers must bend their backs under the tremendous burden of taxation necessary to build up the defenses of the United States, and have those defenses then taken away from them and given to somebody else at the behest of, as Mr. White himself calls it, an "engine of publicity and propaganda"?

Mr. President, have we in the United States come to the time when we have actual government by propaganda?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to call attention to an editorial which appeared in the New York Daily News, which, as the Senator knows, is one of the strongest supporters of the administration. The editorial is entitled "Anti-Semitism in This Country."

I shall read part of it, as follows:

William Allen White's Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, from which we received 155 postcards over the week end asking us to root for release of 25 flying fortresses and 20 mosquito boats to Great Britain, lists very few Jews on its roster of more than 600 eminent sponsors—as well as very few persons of draft age. And the White committee is the most active single agency pushing us toward the war.

Then the editorial proceeds to say:

The United States has one foot in the war and the other on a banana peel; true.

It continues:

After we woke up from the World War nightmare, we took to blaming the munitions makers—"merchants of death"—and the international bankers for having got us into that fight.

We tried to insure against any more of such villainy by passing the Johnson Act against United States loans to foreign nations in default here, and the Neutrality Act to prevent war-material shipments to any belligerent nation or nations.

Came the war of 1939–19—?; and now, at the end of its first year, we are well on our way into it.

The President has procured revision of the Neutrality Act to allow cash-and-carry arms shipments. The Johnson Act is under increasing attack and will probably go when England's cash begins to run low. We've released 50 destroyers to England, in addition to a lot of World War left-over guns and ammunition; and now the 25 flying-fortress deal is warming up. Plenty of us wish we had more "merchants of death." The loss of the Hercules powder plant is generally regretted.

All this is being done, we are persuaded, with the approval of the majority of Americans.

Or if it isn't the majority have no chance to register disapproval.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Lynchings frequently take place with the same "approval of a majority of the citizens."

Mr. WHEELER. The editorial continues:

Both Presidential candidates are interventionists; there is no choice between them on this point, as there might have been if the Republicans had nominated Dewey instead of Willkie.

We think we are going into this war for the same deep, underlying cause that took us in last time—a cause which has nothing to do with the Jews, the bankers, or the "merchants of death." We believe the American people have a subconscious conviction that as long as Britain and the United States together have the world's biggest combined naval power these two nations can run the world; that we've got to hang together or we're likely to be hanged separately. Indeed, this war may be fought for the principal purpose of finding out if air power can conquer seapower. Once again we seem to have given England a blank check, to draw on as needed. The outlook is dark indeed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact, as will appear from a letter from Mr. White which I intend to read presently, that the only rhyme or reason in selecting 25 flying fortresses, 50 destroyers, or 20 mosquito boats for purposes of agitation and propaganda was, as Mr. White says in a letter to his local chairman, that it was more convenient to have a particular number which they could iterate and reiterate, repeat, and bear down on, so that everybody could understand the number. Mr. White missed by more than 50 percent the number of flying fortresses the Government actually has. He thought we had 75. As a matter of fact we have only 46. He picked out what he thought was a third of the number of flying fortresses, and fixed on 25 as a number which could be hammered and hammered and hammered in propaganda for the purpose of converting them to the use of a foreign power. For the same reason he adopted the number 20 as the number of mosquito boats which we should turn over, not because he knew anything of the military or naval necessities of the United States, or cared anything about the military or naval necessities of the United States, but because 20 was a convenient number.

I am reminded of an occasion when I went fishing when I was a boy. A colored boy who had been employed for years by my father was rowing me across the Mississippi River to fish on the Illinois side. He said, "Mister Bennett, I wish—I just wish—I had $7." I said, "Brooks, what do you want with $7? What would you do with $7 if you had it?" He said, "I don't know, Mister Bennett, but I just think $7 is a mighty fine sum to have." [Laughter.]

So Mr. White concluded that he ought to adopt a particular number and hammer on it, hammer on it, and hammer on it until he put it over, without any reference whatever to the military or naval necessities of the United States.

Mr. President, I continue with the very illuminating article by Mr. Ross. I intend to make some quotations from that article, because it states the situation more succinctly than I could. Mr. Ross says:

It is this organization—

Referring to Mr. White's organization, as described by himself as an engine of publicity and propaganda—which is now hard on the completion of the destroyer-naval base deal between the United States and Great Britain, heading the movement for new and significant aid to Britain—25 flying fortresses (long-range bombers), 20 torpedo boats, and as many combat planes as possible, now the equipment of our Army and Navy.

Also the bomb sight, the most precious military secret the United States has ever had.

Mr. Ross continues:

White might have added that the committee has proved itself an engine of extraordinary power.

A statement which Mr. Ross quotes with approval in the course of the article.

That the creation and mobilization of public sentiment by the White committee played a tremendously important part—in a sense, the decisive part—in bringing about the transfer of 50 destroyers to Great Britain, there can be no doubt.

In the same speech White modestly described himself as "only the rooster on the cowcatcher, crowing lustily sometimes at the crossroads." That is a gross understatement. He is in fact as well as in name the head of the White committee, and his labors for its objectives have been prodigious. His name alone, because of the widespread public confidence he has long enjoyed, is a valuable asset to the committee.

That is a statement in which I most heartily join.

Since the White committee is engaged in large-scale propaganda—frankly so—its personnel and activities become a proper subject of analysis.

That was the suggestion I was just making to the Senate committee on lobbying activities.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that some time ago the Senator from Missouri introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of lobbying activities.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago, when I think the Senator was temporarily out of the Chamber, that it seems to me there are two courses open to the Senate. There has been a special committee on lobbying activities, which is still in existence. Originally it was headed by the then Senator Black, of Alabama. It is now headed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. The committee has been very free in its incursions into the field of propaganda activities in connection with anyting which the committee happened to be against. As the Senator from Montana will remember, the committee went very exhaustively into the propaganda which was alleged to be going on at the time on the subject of the holding-company bill. The committee made some very interesting disclosures. It went into the question of what it claimed was propaganda against the President's Court-packing bill. Whenever a man wrote a letter against the President's reorganization plan he was subject to being investigated by the committee. The committee is still in existence; and it seems to me that this great, openly and avowedly propaganda organization for the purpose of involving us in war might well be investigated by the committee.

I stated that the alternative was a resolution which I introduced something like a year ago for the investigation of all propaganda, from whatever sources, designed to change the neutrality position of the United States and get us into war—a resolution which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and which has since been stifled for a number of months in the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I think that resolution would completely cover not only such organizations as the ones to which I have referred, which I shall presently show are affiliated with organizations avowedly and openly committed for the purpose of getting us into the war, but also such propaganda as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] mentioned the other day, from some address in New York which I have forgotten, but which the Senator seemed to know. He referred to some organization which is putting out German propaganda. It seems to me that all propaganda efforts in the United States ought to be investigated by some proper authority.

Mr. WHEELER. I entirely agree with the Senator. I do not care whether it be German propaganda, British propaganda, or any other propaganda.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not make the slightest difference to me. If it involves the position of the United States, I think the American people are entitled to know about it, from whatever source it comes.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the Senator owes it to the people of the country and to the Senate to insist that his resolution be reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. After all, the Audit and Control Committee has nothing to do with the merits or demerits of legislation. The only thing the Audit and Control Committee has the right to do is to pass upon the amount which the particular resolution calls for.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator that I have repeatedly stated that if the resolution could not be favorably reported from the Audit and Control Committee—which, of course, I should naturally prefer—I should be glad to have the resolution reported adversely, so that we may bring the matter up on the floor of the Senate and have a showing of hands.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NYE. Is there a question in the committee regarding the amount of money? Is that the issue which is at stake?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as I know the matter has never been considered.

Mr. NYE. How much does the Senator's resolution call for?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think it calls for $25,000.

Mr. NYE. Does the Senator know that there is a dispute over the amount of money which should be devoted to this investigation and that such dispute is holding up consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know that there is any dispute. So far as I know the committee has never had a meeting on the subject.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the Senator ought either to ask the committee to report the resolution one way or the other, or move to discharge the committee and bring the matter to the floor of the Senate and discuss it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to have the resolution reported adversely if it cannot be reported favorably, so that we may bring the matter to the floor of the Senate and have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the Senator ought to go further and move to discharge the committee and bring the matter to the floor of the Senate, because the Audit and Control Committee has no right deliberately to hold up any resolution which comes to it, particularly when it has been passed upon by some other committee of this body. On one occasion my late distinguished colleague, Senator Walsh, presented the question on the floor of the Senate and called attention to the fact that the only right which the Audit and Control Committee has is to pass upon the question of the amount called for by the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say that that has always been my understanding. I will say further to the Senator from Montana that so far as I am concerned, as I have repeatedly stated, if there is a fear that I might be chairman of the committee by reason of the fact that I introduced the resolution, and if such fear is in any way holding up the resolution, I shall be glad to waive any claim to membership on the committee.

I return to the article by Mr. Ross, and I refer to the statement of his purposes in this study. He said:

> It is the purpose of this article to examine objectively (1) the workings of the White committee * * *.

I think it is necessary to read this statement to understand the inner relation of some of the various propaganda agencies which have been mixed up in the whole movement, because the White committee has been used as a front by an outfit of such men as Agar and others, who are openly, notoriously, and avowedly in favor of getting the United States into the war. I think it is necessary to understand the inner relationship of the propaganda agencies to understand how old Bill White has been used as a front by a group of persons who are actively trying to get us into the war.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator knows that the White committee was started on the foundation of the League of Nations Association, through Clark Eichelberger. It uses the same offices—8 West Fortieth Street—as did the League of Nations Association. The White committee has the same propaganda mill. I thought the Senator would like to know that it is the same old international group which tried to get us into the League of Nations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very much interested in that. I am frank to say that I was unfamiliar with Mr. Eichelberger's activities until he appeared as the director of this organization and until I saw his picture in the copy of the Post-Dispatch, which I hold in my hand.

Mr. Ross says:

> It is the purpose of this article to examine objectively (1) the workings of the White committee, and (2) of a small behind-the-scenes group which has operated with proved effectiveness along lines parallel with those of the White committee, and to an extent in collaboration with it. Included in this group are a number of newspaper editors and columnists. Probably its greatest single achievement was its persuasion of General Pershing to make his radio speech of August 4—a speech which, members of the group and of the White committee believe, did more than any other single thing to mobilize public sentiment behind the destroyer deal.

It appears later in the article that the man who wrote Pershing's speech was Herbert Agar, former London correspondent, former editor of a London magazine, and a long-time resident in England. The man who made the radio arrangements for the speech was "Little Joe" Alsop. What more pitiful spectacle has taken place in the United States in our lifetime than to see this gallant old soldier, now "fallen into the sere, the yellow leaf," in the hands of such a gang as that?

Mr. Ross goes on:

This informal group of 30 to 40 contains men of varying shades of opinion as to how far the United States should go in aiding Britain. Some are on the cautious side; some are in between; a few, unless they have changed their views since June 9—

That was the day they signed this advertisement—favor an immediate declaration of war by the United States against Germany.

On the June date 30 citizens in a public statement called for a war declaration. Among the signers were 6 who are now identified with the above-described group—

That is the group behind the scenes that got up the destroyer deal, the so-called Miller group—and who attended a group meeting on July 25, with 13 others, at which steps toward bringing about the release of destroyers to Great Britain were agreed upon.

The 30 persons who signed the memorial for a war declaration constitute no fixed propaganda group.

They are too smart for that—

They acted, as one of the instigators of the petition explained, "impulsively," with the view primarily to arousing the United States to the danger in which it would find itself from a Hitler victory in Europe. This result, he felt, had been since brought about by events abroad; consequently he believed that at least half of those who called for a formal war declaration on June 9 would not do so today.

I am omitting a part of the article—

Among the signers of the war memorial, the White committee and the informal group working with and behind the committee, there is, of course, a large community of interest, extending up to the point where the extremists diverge in favor of immediate and formal war on Germany.

The word "formal", I take it, is a very important word, because most of them agree on war, although they may disagree as to the desirability of an immediate declaration of war.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is it possible they mean an undeclared war, and that they want to conduct an undeclared war?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think there can be no question about that. Mr. Ross proceeds:

All are agreed on the White committee's proposition that large and continuing aid should be sent to Great Britain, in this country's own defense, and that every effort should be made to induce public opinion to bring pressure on the Government to this end.

I desire the Senate to remember the phrase "bringing pressure to bear on the Government," because it will appear a little later that, while Mr. White will give out a statement in which he will say that his committee is in favor of sending Great Britain everything that we can spare, we find, at the same time, a man by the name of Balderston, also long a resident of Great Britain, putting out a William Allen White news service release, in which he does not raise the question of whether we can spare it or not, but says the General Staff of the Army and the General Staff of the Navy may be technical and say that we need these things for the defense of the United States itself, and that what the organizations have to do is to build a fire under these staffs, arouse public sentiment, bombard the Congress, bombard the President, bombard public officials so as to override the technical objection of the General Staff of the Navy and the General Staff of the Army, who are technically charged with the details of our defense.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator knows that Mr. Balderston was brought back here to create war propaganda, does he not? It is a known fact among those who have studied it that John L. Balderston is not interested in preserving America but is directly under the British Ministry of Information.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no information as to that except that, reading what Mr. Balderston has written and reading the stuff he sends out from the William Allen White Information Service, I am entirely prepared to believe the statement of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. Has the Senator seen any of those newspaper advertisements entitled "For Union Now"?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will come to that in a few moments; and I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that having written the State Department asking for the names of the contributors to that advertisement For Union Now, and having received a mimeographed sheet from the State Department explaining why they could not give it to me, I presented a resolution in the Senate yesterday calling on the State Department for that information; and it is my purpose to call up the resolution at the very first opportunity.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The gentleman whose name has just been mentioned is not only one of the sponsors of that particular move, but also is one of those who have been paying for the advertisement to which the Senator referred.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He is also one of the gentlemen who signed the newspaper advertisement advocating and demanding an immediate declaration of war. So he seems to have his hand in on most of these advertisements and most of these propaganda activities, to whomsoever he may report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator know whether this man is an American citizen?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand he is an American citizen. I looked him up in Who's Who. He was long American correspondent in London for some American newspaper—I have forgotten which paper it was.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from West Virginia can probably tell us.

Mr. HOLT. I can say to the Senator from Missouri that if he will read Who's Who he will find quite as much space devoted to Mr. Balderston's activities in England as to his activities in the United States, and he was over there until last summer. I wish the Senator had Who's Who and would put Mr. Balderston's record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is quite interesting.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Ross goes on to describe the activities of this propaganda organization, which seems to me to make it entirely suitable for investigation by the Lobby Committee of the United States Senate, or some other committee.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, has the Senator seen the chairman of the committee, and has he given any reason why the resolution has not been reported? It seems to me it is about as important a resolution——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have seen the chairman of the committee on repeated occasions, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think it is about as important a resolution as I have seen since I came into the Senate. At this critical time a committee of this character ought to be working all the time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me go forward with the article of Mr. Ross, showing just an instance of the activities of the White committee.

As an instance, the committee this week—

That was last week—

As an instance, the committee this week arranged for a phone-ringing campaign in New York City, to begin next Tuesday. A corps of 1,410 women volunteers, each taking 2 pages of the telephone directory, will call up all the 735,488 residential numbers in the 5 boroughs of New York City. The job will take 2 weeks. The caller in each case will ask for the woman of the household and seek to line her up for the committee's work. Those who respond favorably will be asked to regard themselves as "American minute women," subject to call from the committee to write letters to the President or Members of Congress in support of the committee's objectives. Leaders of the movement are considering a Nation-wide telephone campaign.

Some idea of the success which the committee already has had in inspiring messages to heads of the Government may be gathered from its estimate that petitions presented under committee auspices to the President and Congress in favor of the destroyer deal carried 3,000,000 signatures.

CHAIRMAN PUTS "ENGINE" IN MOTION

When the decision was reached, in pursuance of the general aims of the committee, to go out for the three-point plane and torpedo-boat program, Chairman White set his engine in motion—

That was the "engine of propaganda," as he himself described it—with a telegram to the heads of the 662 local chapters of the committee. This message, under date of September 12, briefly explained the new project and urged telegrams in its favor to the President.

"There is reason to believe," White wired, "that such material can be sent without hurt to our national defense, particularly as every month the struggle is kept going abroad means the more time we have to prepare the facilities to defend ourselves and the things we believe in."

But right at the same time his publicity agent, Mr. Balderston, was sending releases through the William Allen White Information Service to newspapers all over the United States and to selected individuals, although it was stated that they were not intended to be published verbatim, in favor of "building a fire" under the Army and Navy officials charged with the defense of the United States in case they believed that certain articles were necessary for the defense of the United States and were reluctant to turn them over to anybody else.

On the same date White supplemented this telegram with a letter addressed to the members of the national committee and the officers and chairmen of its local chapters. Because this letter—released in full by the committee to the Post-Dispatch along with other material—not only sets out the arguments for the current program but helps to tell the general story of the committee's aims and methods, it is given here in full text:

My dear friend:

That has a familiar ring.

My dear friend:

I can tell you that these "dear friend" letters would fool almost anybody who was not an expert in detecting facsimile letters. They would fool 99 persons out of 100. They even fooled me, as many facsimile letters—form letters—as I have seen in my lifetime, when I got this letter from Mr. White, sending me a propaganda book.

MY DEAR FRIEND:

There is a word or two scratched out here, and an interlineation made above it. Having known Mr. White for so many years, it never occurred to me that it was not a personal letter; and I started to acknowledge the receipt of the book and answer the letter. It so happened that when I started to answer the letter I held it up in such a way that the sunlight fell on it, and I recognized it as a facsimile letter; but anybody who looks at that letter will see that it is the sort of a letter which is calculated to fool 99 persons out of 100.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I wanted to write this rather long and confidential letter to say a few things about what we have accomplished and our plans for the next few weeks.

This transfer of flying fortresses, of the mosquito fleet of the United States, of the bomb sight, of some of our most priceless military and naval equipment and military secrets, is simply the program for the next few weeks.

I wanted to write this rather long and confidential letter to say a few things about what we have accomplished and our plans for the next few weeks. * * *

I shall not take the trouble to read all of this letter, because it is long, even if it is not confidential.

Later on I shall write you—

This whole letter has been inserted in the RECORD, so I shall quote only the parts of it that are pertinent.

Later on I shall write you—

Said Mr. White—

about the latter material—

That is, the material which is to be furnished through the winter—but today I want to say a word about what we believe could go quickly.

First, airplanes. We have approximately 75 flying fortresses in our Army.

Of course, we actually had 46.

These are incomparably more powerful—

Which will rather negative the idea that they are overage or obsolete.

These are incomparably more powerful with a longer range than anything that any other nation has. Also, we have many planes, not all first-class, but out of which some could be spared for the defense of London. If an invasion is undertaken, little electric boats, called the mosquito fleet, would be very helpful in turning back the transports. That would be second only in importance to the destroyers.

The naval officials testified that those same little mosquito boats are perhaps the most important harbor defenses possible for the United States of America in case we should be invaded, which God forbid. We have only a few. They are just now coming into construction; but it is suggested by this committee that we take away from our own defenses what the Navy Department say are defenses of the most vital importance and give them to somebody else.

Therefore we strongly hope that our Government dispatch immediately 25 flying fortresses—

This shows how much Mr. White knew about how many could be spared. He said we had 75, and therefore he fixed on a third of them. It turns out that we have only 46.

Therefore, we strongly hope that our Government dispatch immediately 25 flying fortresses and as many pursuit planes as possible, and 20 mosquito boats. Every day is important and a few weeks may be too late to save Britain and our first line of defense. (This was covered in today's telegram.)

This winter the British will need tanks for the desert campaign to protect Suez and Gibraltar; probably food on credit; and a large proportion of the products of American airplane factories. These latter materials we will discuss with you when the present emergency is over.

Mr. President, we ourselves need tanks. We have not enough tanks. The other day I saw a picture of the maneuvers in northern New York in which an ordinary truck was placed in the maneuvers with a sign on it reading: "This is a tank." It may be that the tanks we have are old, but they are all we have. Just why we should be denuded of any defense of that sort is something that Mr. White has been unable to make clear to my mind.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said on yesterday that we needed thousands of these flying fortresses, according to the best military information we could get. We have 46. It takes longer to train crews in the complicated operation of flying one of those flying fortresses than it does to build the ship itself; but it is proposed by White and his committee and those back of them that we take away the only means we have for training crews for the flying fortresses so that we would be able to fly them when we got them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. In connection with the very illuminating remarks the Senator has made about tanks, let me point out that our objective, approved by the War Department and Congress and every other American authority, is 5,000 tanks. At the present time we have about 400. That will give the Senator an idea of how far we are from our goal.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator very much. That is entirely in line with the information upon which I rely, which is not as accurate as his.

Mr. White goes on:

Many of you wired a few hours after the destroyer deal was completed asking what to do next.

Where do we take the next bite?

I wired Tuesday for letters, editorials, telegrams to the President urging that everything that can be spared—

As I say, there is always this distinction between what White says and what Balderston says, between what can be spared and what can be grabbed.

I wired Tuesday for letters, editorials, telegrams to the President urging that everything that can be spared from our American armed forces go now to help save London. We were very fortunate—

This is the explanation of these figures of 25 flying fortresses and 20 mosquito boats, not what we could spare, not what the General Staff of the Navy and the General Staff of the Army thought could be spared from our own defenses, but Mr. White said:

We were very fortunate in the destroyer matter in being able to mention 50 destroyers and repeat the number constantly.

All he cared about was getting a number that he could hammer.

We were very fortunate in the destroyer matter in being able to mention 50 destroyers and repeat the number constantly. It is not always easy to give as precise figures. Sometimes our instructions will have to be a bit more general. But please have faith in us, knowing that we are trying to do everything possible to secure correct information and that we will not urge anything that we do not believe is wise and possible.

In other words, they are setting themselves up above all the technical defense experts in the United States. Mr. White and this fellow Eichelberger, and the people who are behind them, are deliberately setting themselves up to override all the expert opinion in the United States.

Although—

Says Mr. White—

Although I know that you must be tired from the hard work over the destroyer campaign, I urge you to use every bit of energy and reserve you have in the next 2 weeks in support of our Govment sending every bit of material that can be spared to help Britain resist invasion from air and sea.

I have referred several times to the contrast between Mr. White's expression of "what can be spared" and Mr. Balderston's expression that they ought to build a fire under the Army and Navy and make them turn over whatever he thinks they ought to turn over. Mr. Balderston said:

The weapons now wanted, or most of them, may cause a sharp controversy here.

Mr. Balderston, you understand, is the director of the William Allen White Information Service.

They are weapons some United States authorities—

Particularly the General Staffs of the Army and Navy—

They are weapons some United States authorities are inclined to consider needed at home—

For the defense of the United States at a time when we are being told that we may be attacked on both coasts at the same time.

* * * the attitude to be taken by this Government must depend in great part upon whether Great Britain be regarded as our first line of defense.

If we do what all the other victims of Hitler have done, we will grant aid grudgingly in small packets, because our military men will behave just as the military men in every other menaced country have behaved—hold the best of what they have to meet attack against ourselves—

Listen to that—

Hold the best of what they have to meet attack against ourselves and refuse to give it up to Britain or anyone else.

Here is a man, the publicity head of this great propaganda organization, who is criticising Americans who say that we ought to hold the best of what we have to protect the United States against a possible attack.

Our Staffs will perhaps incline to take this attitude. If so, they cannot and should not be criticised; they will be doing their professional duty.

Of course they put in their lives determining military and naval policy.

They will be doing their professional duty.

To advise us as to the defense requirements of our own country but they will be overawed and overpowered by such a propaganda organization as this.

Our staffs will perhaps incline to take this attitude. If so, they cannot and should not be criticized; they will be doing their professional duty. Staffs are like that in all countries, and were like that in countries that recently existed but exist no more.

The only way, it is not inconceivable, in which some needed aid can be sent to Britain in time is for those Staffs to be overruled—

For those Staffs, the General Staff of the Army and the General Staff of the Navy, to be overruled as to what are our vital defense needs—by administrative or legislative action, and the likelihood of this depends in turn upon public opinion. And this is why—

Says this gentleman who just returned from England to tell the American people what to do.

This is why the William Allen White News Service takes the responsibility of making known what the British most need at this moment, now.

It does so because public opinion cannot bring pressure to bear in the higher interest of our own country and the cause of world democracy, against possible opposition which might base itself on the highest professional standards of duty.

That is the standard set up by men who hold up their hands and take an oath of allegiance to the United States of America when they enter the military service or the naval service, and then devote their lives to a consideration of these problems. So Mr. Balderston says that the William Allen White News Service takes the responsibility, "because public opinion cannot bring pressure to bear in the higher interest of our own country"—as seen by Mr. Balderston from London—"and the cause of world democracy, against possible opposition which might base itself on the highest professional standards of duty, without an occasional dose of a nature not usually made public when nations are at war."

Mr. President, I would be less than frank if I did not admit that Mr. White has said that he did not entirely agree with Mr. Balderston. But Mr. Balderston is still a director of the William Allen White News Service.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to read something from Who's Who about Mr. Balderston?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should be very glad to yield.

Mr. HOLT. We find that Mr. Balderston went to Europe as a free lance correspondent in 1915. He did not come back and go into the war, but he was in a propaganda agency in the World War in 1918 and 1919. Then he immediately took a job as editor of the London Outlook, and held that until 1923. Then he became the London correspondent of the New York Herald. After that there is no other reference in the 1940 Who's Who to Mr. Balderston except about his home. When someone asks me where my home is, I say West Virginia and Washington, but he gives his choice as England.

Home: 38 Trevor Square, London, SW. 7, and 1800 Angelo Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif.

He thinks more of his English home and puts it in advance of his American home in Who's Who.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, in view of the fact that Mr. White has formally stated that he did not entirely agree with Mr. Balderston's statements, and in view of the further fact that Mr. Balderston still remains as a director of the William Allen White Information Service, some credence is lent to the statement of Mr. Ernest Lindley in the Washington Post of September 8. Mr. Lindley, of course, is a close friend of the President of the United States, his chosen biographer. He also came from Kansas and is a longtime friend of Mr. White. This statement has to do with the destroyer deal, and he says:

The duty of informing the public concerning a deal which the President regards as "epochal" was shouldered by the columnists and editorial writers, with little cooperation from the President and his administration.

All the information Congress got about it was in the newspapers, because the first we heard of it was after it was an accomplished fact and the destroyers had actually been transferred.

More than that, a few columnists and editors and publishers were the moving spirits in the whole affair on this side of the Atlantic. The formal front—

Says Mr. Lindley, speaking of his old Kansas compatriot, Mr. White—

The formal front of the movement was the Committee to Defend America by Aid to the Allies, under the chairmanship of William Allen White, of Kansas, editor and publisher. Others not connected with the committee were active also. Among those who participated were Barry Bingham, Herbert Agar, publisher and editor, respectively, of the Louisville Courier-Journal—

Mr. Agar is the gentleman to whom I referred a little while ago, who lived in London for many years and was the editor of a London magazine just a few years ago.

Joseph Alsop, Walter Lippmann, Robert S. Allen, and Frank P. Kent, all newspaper columnists.

Mr. Ross goes into more detail. He tells who the men were who met together and decided to transfer one-seventh of the American Navy to a foreign power, put the deal over, and then went out to justify it to the American people. He refers to the so-called Miller group, a number of whom had been signers of the advertisement in favor of an immediate declaration of war. He says, after some description to be found in the article in the RECORD, of the formation of the group:

On July 25 the group held a dinner meeting at the Century Club in New York City and from the discussion emerged the illuminating memorandum on the destroyers-for-Britain deal.

The text of which is printed in a box on this page.

Attending this meeting were the following:
Robert S. Allen, Washington columnist.
Joseph Alsop, Washington columnist.
Ulric Bell, Washington correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal.
Barry Bingham, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, son of the late Robert Worth Bingham, Ambassador to Great Britain.

The late Ambassador Bingham was the man who made a speech in London 3 or 4 years before this war began and assured the British that if they ever became engaged in a war the United States would fight right along with them, man for man, ship for ship, and gun for gun. So his son is only carrying out his policy.

Ward Cheney, silk manufacturer, of New York.

I do not suppose it makes any difference to a man of his great wealth, but when I read about his activities in this connection I made up my mind I would never wear a Cheney necktie again.

Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary of New York.
Clark M. Eichelberger, director of the William Allen White committee.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, the Senator knows that for 22 years Mr. Eichelberger has actually lived and has drawn his salary from intervention activities. In other words, every time he could concoct an intervention scheme, it meant he was on the pay roll. It is self-preservation for Mr. Eichelberger.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The next name on the list is that of Harold K. Guinsburg, head of the Viking Press, New York.

George Watts Hill, banker and farmer of Durham, N. C.
Henry W. Hobson, Epsicopal bishop of Cincinnati.
Ernest M. Hopkins, president of Dartmouth College.
Francis P. Miller, of Fairfax, Va.

He is the paid head of that particular group.

Geoffrey Parsons, chief editorial writer of the New York Herald Tribune.
Frank L. Polk, New York lawyer, former Under Secretary of State.

Incidentally, he is a partner in the Davis firm, which has always represented the British Government.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I do not like to interrupt the Senator so much, but the Senator will find in the files that Frank Polk was an advocate of and worked for war over a year before we entered it in 1917. He was in the educational campaign of Robert Lansing at that time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was Whitney H. Shepardson, a director of the Council on Foreign Relations, of New York.

Robert Emmett Sherwood, playwright, of New York.
Admiral William H. Standley, retired, of New York.

He, of course, since his retirement from the Navy, has become a professional agitator for the involvement of the United States in war.

Dr. Henry P. VanDusen, professor in Union Theological Seminary of New York.

Mr. Ross comments further:

Of this group of 19—

They are the 19 private citizens who met in New York and arranged the details of the destroyer deal and helped in putting it through.

Of this group of 19, 6 were signers of the June 9 public statement favoring an immediate war declaration against Germany by the United States. These were Agar, Hill, Bishop, Hobson, Miller, Shepardson, and Admiral Standley.

I was interested in Agar because of references which I have already made in connection with his activities with the Pershing statement. I looked to see what Mr. Ross had to say about him. He has a list of the signers of the demand for a declaration of war, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD without taking the trouble to read it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADVOCATES OF WAR DECLARATION

Captioned "A summons to speak out," the statement was signed by the following:

Herbert Agar, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal and author; winner of the Pulitzer prize for history in 1933. Agar is one of the most active members of the informal group for which Francis P. Miller acts as a sort of clearinghouse. He had a large hand in the preparation of General Pershing's speech of August 4, urging that 50 American destroyers be transferred to Britain.

Burke Baker, of Houston, Tex.

John L. Balderston, of Beverly Hills, Calif.; playwright and one-time London correspondent of the old New York World. Balderston is now putting out, from Washington, a confidential news letter to editors for the William Allen White committee.

Stringfellow Barr, of Annapolis, Md.; president of St. John's College.

J. Douglas Brown; professor of economics at Princeton University.

Richard F. Cleveland, of Baltimore; lawyer; son of President Cleveland.

James F. Curtis, of New York; lawyer; Assistant Secretary of the Treasury from 1909 to 1913.

Edwin F. Gay, of Pasadena, Calif.; economist; formerly dean of the Graduate School of Business Administration of Harvard.

Edward T. Gushee, of St. Louis; executive vice president of the Union Electric Co. of Missouri.

Marion H. Hedges, of Washington; research director and author.

William H. Hessler, of Cincinnati; writer on political economy.

George Watts Hill, of Durham, N. C.; banker and leader in the organization of cooperative marketing and farm organizations; member of the Miller group.

Bishop (Episcopal) Henry W. Hobson, of Cincinnati, who was a major in the last war; member of the Miller group.

Leroy Hodges, of Richmond, Va.; economist and author.

Calvin Hoover, of Durham, N. C.; economist, author, and editor.

Edwin P. Hubble, of San Marino, Calif.; astronomer.

Frank Kent, of Baltimore; columnist of the Baltimore Sun.

Edward R. Lewis, of Chicago; historian and sociologist.

George W. Martin, of New York.

L. Randolph Mason, of New York; lawyer.

Stacy May, of New York; economist and social worker.

Francis P. Miller, of Fairfax, Va.; author and organization director for local committees organized by the Council on Foreign Relations; leader of the Miller group.

Helen Hill Miller; wife of Francis P. Miller.

Walter Millis, of New York; editorial writer of the Herald Tribune; author of The Road to War.

George Fort Milton, of Chattanooga, Tenn.; newspaper editor and author.

Lewis Mumford, of Amenia, N. Y.; writer.
Winfield W. Riefler, of Princeton; economist.
Whitney H. Shepardson, of New York; treasurer and director of the Council on Foreign Relations; assistant to Colonel House at Paris Peace Conference; member of the Miller group.
Admiral William H. Standley, retired, of New York; former Chief of Naval Operations; member of the Miller group.
William Waller, of Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Ross says of Mr. Agar:

Herbert Agar, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal and author; winner of the Pulitzer prize for history in 1933. Agar is one of the most active members of the informal group for which Francis P. Miller acts as a sort of clearinghouse. He had a large hand in the preparation of General Pershing's speech of August 4, urging that 50 American destroyers be transferred to Britain.

Mr. Ross gives a very interesting account of the procedure of the Miller group, more or less using the White committee simply as a window dressing or a front. He says:

All the practical steps outlined in the illuminating July memorandum of "the Miller group" have been taken.
Carrying out the first item on the agenda, three of the group, Herbert Agar, Ward Cheney, and Francis P. Miller, went to Washington early in August, and in personal interviews bore down hard on the President and most of the members of the Cabinet for immediate and drastic aid to Great Britain.

Mind you, Mr. President, that matter was not confided to the Congress of the United States. The advice of Congress was not asked. No legislative authority was asked. But Mr. Agar, the former British correspondent; Ward Cheney, the silk manufacturer; and Francis P. Miller, the paid employee of the Miller group, on leave from the Council of Foreign Relations, went to Washington early in August and in personal interviews bore down hard on the President himself and the members of the Cabinet for immediate and drastic aid to Great Britain.

Transfer of the destroyers was the great objective.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.
Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator from Missouri know that there is another such effort contemplated for this very week? Has it come to his attention?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was about to read in a moment Mr. Balderston's seven-point program.
Mr. DANAHER. I should like, then, to call to the Senator's attention an item which appeared in the Hartford Times, of Hartford, Conn., last night:

Walter E. Batterson, State chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, will leave Hartford by train or plane tonight for Washington for conferences with President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull.
Mr. Batterson will represent Connecticut in a spectacular trip to the Nation's Capital, where members of many chapters of the defend America committee will present their viewpoints directly to the President and the Secretary of State. Secretary Hull will receive the group tomorrow afternoon—and the conversations with the President are scheduled for Friday.

That is this afternoon, while the Senator from Missouri is speaking—

William Allen White, national chairman of the committee, probably will be one of the group.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can tell the Senator from Connecticut what the demands of Mr. Balderston are, because they were published in a letter in which he referred to them, not as referring to something which could be spared by the Army and the Navy, but that these were the requirements of Great Britain, as one would requisition something from a subordinate:

1. A score of motor torpedo boats "wanted at once."
2. Flying boats of the PBY type now being made in San Diego—

Those are the Navy's heavy bombers—

3. Flying fortresses, our great long-range bombers.

They constitute the weapon most ideally suited for the defense of the United States, because they can fly from coast to coast; the weapon most ideally suited for the defense of the Caribbean, the Panama Canal, and South America, because of their great range, great speed, and the fact that they can fly high enough that with the American bomb sight they can effect great damage, although at a height making it almost impossible for them to be brought down by anti-aircraft guns.

4. Tanks.

Mr. Balderston says:

Five or six tanks a day are now being turned out for the United States. The British ask for all of these, please, but not for long, only for the first few weeks of supply.
5. Airfields.

They want our airfields in this country to train pilots.

6. Two hundred and fifty thousand more Lee-Enfield rifles.

I never thought much of the Lee-Enfield rifle, but until we get something to take its place it is better than no rifle at all, and until we get something to take its place I can see no rhyme or reason for the transfer of the Lee-Enfield rifles.

And seventh, of course, is the bomb sight, our most priceless military possession.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.
Mr. HOLT. The Senator knows that the Little Flower, Fiorello LaGuardia, has said that we are going to allow our air fields to be used by a belligerent because we allowed it when we were in war. According to that, Mr. LaGuardia must think we are in war. I simply wanted the Senator to know that Mayor LaGuardia has already said, as chairman of the Commission, that they are going to allow the use of our air fields by a belligerent.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator.
Mr. President, I resume the narration of the activities of this Miller group in putting over the destroyer deal, because I think it is an extremely interesting story—

Carrying out the first item on the agenda, three of the group—Herbert Agar, Ward Cheney, and Francis T. Miller—went to Washington early in August, and in personal interviews bore down hard on the President and most of the members of the Cabinet for immediate and drastic aid to Great Britain. Transfer of the destroyers was the great objective.
Agar, accompanied by Eichelberger, of the White committee, saw the President on August 1. Miller talked to Henry Wallace, now Democratic nominee for Vice President. Joseph Alsop talked to Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations.

Bear in mind that only a few weeks ago—and I am sure the senior Senator from Massachusetts will bear me out in the statement—it had been stated to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the United States Senate that the General Staff of the Navy and the Navy Department were bitterly opposed to the transfer of any destroyers because we needed them ourselves. Also bear in mind the fact that the issue has been confused by the White committee by saying that they were over-age destroyers. "Over-age destroyers" does not mean obsolete. It is a technical naval term meaning any vessel over 20 years old, and the admiral who received these destroyers in Canada described them as magnificent ships, the equal of any in the British Navy.

Joseph Alsop talked to Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts. He knows more about this subject than any other Member of the Senate.
Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator. I would say that as of about the first of June practically one-half of our entire Navy was in the over-age class. I doubt if we have but very few battleships that are not over-age, in the naval acceptation of that term.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that a very large proportion of all the navies in active service today are what are in the naval terms classed as "over-age"?
Mr. WALSH. The word "over-age" was agreed upon and used for the first time in the naval limitation treaties made by the five powers. They decided that the measurement of a particular navy's strength should be based upon whether the navy vessels were over-age or under-age. The treaty fixed 26 years as being the period of time between under-age and over-age battleships, 20 years for cruisers, 15 years for destroyers, and, I think, 12 or 13 years for submarines. These years are approximated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Some people think a suit is worn out after having been worn for 6 months, although I do not.

Mr. WALSH. The fact that the term "over-age" is used does not mean that the ship is removed from commission. It still remains in commission and is usable and is operated as any other naval vessel. But under this over-age agreement a nation could, without violating that agreement, substitute new ships for the battleships and cruisers and destroyers which are over-age.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Without violating the naval limitation agreement?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; without violating the naval limitation agreement.

As I said before, nearly one-half of all our naval vessels are in the over-age class.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May I ask the Senator if I am correct in the statement that the question of over-age or under-age has nothing whatever to do with the effectiveness, the efficiency of the vessel as a naval weapon of war?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It may be efficient or may not. That is a question of fact. But the arbitrary distinction of under-age or over-age has nothing whatever to do with its effectiveness?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say that before the Senator came into the Chamber a moment ago I was discussing the demand of the William Allen White committee and the Miller group and various other propaganda agencies, to turn over the so-called mosquito fleet of the United States to Great Britain. Is it not a fact that it was testified before the Naval Affairs Committee by the highest ranking officers charged with naval policy that those mosquito boats are of the most vital importance to harbor defense of the United States?

Mr. WALSH. There is no question about it. I do not know whether or not the Senator has had the privilege, as I have had, of being aboard one of those vessels.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I never have had that privilege.

Mr. WALSH. One of them is now in our possession and in operation. A few weeks ago I went down the Potomac River in one of those vessels at the rate of 45 miles an hour. The average speed was about 27 miles an hour. We have nothing comparable to them in the Navy. They are extremely valuable for harbor-defense purposes. Some of them are capable of detecting the presence of submarines by a mechanism which is attached to the vessel, and they are capable of dashing in quickly, firing a torpedo at another naval vessel, and getting away.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not a fact that actually we have no mosquito boats in our possession except the one to which the Senator has referred; that the others are under contract; and that the proposal of the propaganda organization is to turn over one of the very latest and most necessary devices for the protection of the United States before it has even actually come into the possession of the United States Navy?

Mr. WALSH. That is absolutely true; and, as the Senator knows, if it had not been for an opinion of the Attorney General a few weeks ago, those 21 on order would undoubtedly have been turned over to the Allies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is my opinion that if it had not been for the action of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Naval Affairs Committee of this body, they would have been turned over. I think the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts called attention to a statute which forbade such action led to the opinion of the Attorney General, which prevented the transfer.

Mr. WALSH. It is very gracious of the Senator to say so. I felt that it was a contributing influence.

While I am on my feet, let me say, with reference to naval vessels, that in the latter part of June, when we had under consideration the bill to speed up construction, the Chief of Naval Operations appeared before our committee and in substance said, "You have tied our hands so tightly that we cannot even sell naval scrap." He asked that the bill which was then pending be modified so as to permit them to sell useless "boats," as dstinguished from "vessels." A "vessel" is a boat which cannot be placed on top of another vessel. A "boat" is a navigable vessel which can be lifted and placed on top of a cruiser, destroyer, or other vessel. There was an attempt to classify the mosquito craft as "boats." They are "vessels" because they cannot be placed on top of another vessel. That is the distinction. The Chief of Naval Operations said that the hands of the Navy were so completely tied that it could not even sell for junk boats which were destroyed, burned, or useless. The statement was reiterated again and again, that because their hands were so tied they had no power to do what has been done.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts very much.

Mr. President, I desire to continue with the account of the activities of the Miller group in connection with the destroyer deal. To repeat a little: "Joseph Alsop talked to Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations."

The Senator from Massachusetts has stated that shortly before that time the Chief of Naval Operations had stated officially to the Committee on Naval Affairs that in the interest of national defense the destroyers could not be spared.

Continuing with the article:

The burden of the message thus driven home to the President and the other officials was that the Government, in view of the danger to this Nation from Hitler's projected world-wide revolution, was pursuing a "cowardly" course; that public opinion demanded more than was being done and would assuredly support the administration in the destroyer deal.

As Alsop, who was in the middle of the picture, has written—

Joe Alsop claims to be so intimate with the President that he can tell what color pajamas the President has on when he talks with Bill Bullitt over the trans-Atlantic telephone at 3:30 o'clock in the morning. [Laughter.]

As Alsop, who was in the middle of the picture, has written: "A great number of persons, both members of the administration and private White House friends, had become disturbed by the President's seeming lethargy"—

That is what Cousin Joe Alsop said about the President—

"A great number of persons, both members of the administration and private White House friends, have become disturbed by the President's seeming lethargy." The destroyer deal had been in the wind since the 1st of June, when Prime Minister Churchill had appealed urgently to the President for as many destroyers as we could spare. It was to overcome the "lethargy" of the President that the delegation from the Miller group descended on Washington in August, and, as one of the group has said, "talked turkey" to the administration.

Who actually "talked turkey" I do not know, and the article does not disclose. Mr. Ross, a very reputable correspondent, says that a member of the group who came to Washington and "put the heat" on the President, afterward said that they had "talked turkey" to the President of the United States.

Ernest Lindley, from whom I quoted a moment ago, is supported by Mr. Ross in the following paragraph:

Lindley, in the following paragraph, attributes too large a part to the writers, though they played an important part, but his picture of the methods by which private individuals sought to influence, and did influence, the course of events in the destroyer deal is essentially accurate:

"For almost 2 months almost everything that was done toward effecting the destroyer deal was done by newspaper columnists and editors. They surveyed the problem with the high officers of the Army and Navy individually."

Mind you, while Congress was in complete ignorance of the deal, the columnists, says Mr. Lindley, one of the columnist friends of the administration—

"Surveyed the problem with the high officers of the Army and Navy individually, with members of the Cabinet, with leading Senators and Congressman, with Wendell Willkie, and with the President himself. They persuaded General Pershing to advocate the transfer of destroyers, in a Nation-wide broadcast."

Mr. Ross continues:

Second on the schedule of the Miller group, as developed at the July 25 meeting, was the launching of "a radio program of education." As related, General Pershing was induced to go on the air for the destroyer deal, and he was aided in the preparation of his speech by one of the group—Agar. Broadcasting arrangements were made by Alsop. Later, radio speeches in similar vein were made by Admiral William H. Standley, retired, of New York, former Chief of Naval Operations, a member of the Miller group and also one of the signers of the June statement favoring a war declaration; and by Col. William J. Donovan, of New York.

That is the same Bill Donovan, excellent soldier that he was in the World War, and a personal friend of mine, who was recently sent over to England by the Secretary of the Navy in what was purportedly a confidential capacity, and who then came home and syndicated a series of articles throughout the United States for propaganda purposes, tending further to involve us in the war abroad.

Both these speeches were arranged for by Miller, as also was a radio speech by Maury Maverick, mayor of San Antonio, scheduled for today (Saturday).

That was last Saturday. When he was in Congress Maury Maverick was an advocate of peace. Apparently he has changed his mind since becoming mayor of San Antonio.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I rise by reason of the remark of the Senator that apparently former Representative Maverick has changed his mind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think there is any question about it. I will strike out the word "apparently."

Mr. President, from the various documents which I have read into the RECORD, it is perfectly apparent, so that he who runs may read, that in the first place the responsible officers of the Navy were overridden in the destroyer deal. It is perfectly apparent that the moment the destroyer deal was concluded agitation was started for further transfers of essential and vital American defensive weapons. In my opinion it cannot be the subject of debate that if the propaganda organizations succeed in putting through the transfer of the flying fortresses, mosquito torpedo boats, and our bomb sight they will not be satisfied. They will come back and ask for battleships, men, or anything else the United States may have, no matter how vital it may be to its defense.

Mr. President, it is frequently stated in the propaganda columns that the Government is protected by reason of the fact that it is necessary for the Chief of Staff of the Army in the case of military equipment, and for the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy in the case of naval equipment, to certify to the chairmen of the respective committees of the House and Senate that they find that the transfer is not contrary to the public interest. That protection is much more nominal than real, because anyone who is in the least degree familiar with the military service or the naval service knows that the opinion of the Chief of Staff of the Army or of the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy is the opinion of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy; and that no matter what may be the private opinion or the technical and expert opinion of the admiral who happens to be Chief of Naval Operations, or of the general who happens to be Chief of Staff of the Army, he is subject to the orders of the Commander in Chief. If he does not obey them he may be removed. So that protection is much more nominal than real.

In conclusion, along the lines I have just been discussing, I desire to read a column which appeared the other day in the Boston Post, by a former member of the Senate press gallery, a very eminent news commentator, a man whose reputation for accuracy is of the very best. I refer to Mr. Robert L. Norton. His article bears on this very point.

He says:

Some curious stories, bearing on conscription and the transfer of the 50 destroyers to Great Britain, are filtering out of Washington. For instance, we are told that some weeks ago Mr. Roosevelt sent for one of the higher-up officials in the American Legion to discuss the defense program.

ADMIRAL STUBBORN

As we get the story, and there is every reason to believe that it is authentic, the President told the Legion official that the plan to send the destroyers to Great Britain was completed, that Attorney General Jackson had written his opinion legalizing the transaction. However, Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations, had stubbornly refused to admit that these ships were either obsolete or unnecessary for our defense.

Said the President to the Legion official as quoted: "After all, I am Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. It's just as if a major should tell a general what to do."

MARSHALL ARGUES

The other story has to do with the insistence of the President that 4,000,000 men be conscripted instead of the 1,200,000 as now planned. It was stated that Chief of Staff Marshall spent the better part of a week arguing with Mr. Roosevelt that 4,000,000 men were not needed for defense and that it would be absolutely impossible to provide cantonments, food, arms, and the like for such a huge army.

But Mr. Roosevelt seemed determined on the gesture, in line with his statement that the United States, if called upon, could put 50,000 planes into service within a year.

Recognizing the President's flair for the dramatic, the General Staff worked patiently upon him, emphasizing that the very worst thing that could happen to the conscription plan would be to attempt something which was impossible of accomplishment unless the Nation were actually in war and forced to marshal all its resources and put all of its able-bodied citizens under arms or in service.

OFFICERS DISAGREE

There isn't any question but that the high ranking officers of the Navy, or many of them, are in complete disagreement with the Commander in Chief over the transfer of the destroyers to Great Britain. Neither do they agree with the connotation which always describes these ships as "obsolete" or "over-age."

And this is in line with what the Senator from Massachusetts just told the Senate:

"Over-age" is a purely technical term as used by the Navy. It does not mean that the destroyers should be junked or that they are unfit for fighting; and as for being "obsolete," the English admiral who received the ships in Canada declared that they were "magnificent"—as good as anything in the British Navy.

It would appear therefore that the high command in both the Army and Navy are not in absolute accord with the President on some phases of the defense program. In the Army there is great apprehension over the operation of conscription and the lack of equipment for the first 400,000 men to be drafted.

Mr. President, I have taken some time of the Senate to call these facts to their attention because I think that the facts disclosed with regard to this propaganda organization, which is setting itself up as a supergovernment in this country—some of its members with the open intention of getting the United States into war, some of them with the clandestine and hidden intention of getting the United States into the war, and some of them through delusion as to what the consequences of the course which they advocate will be—should be called to the attention of Congress and warrant the Congress considering the matter and taking pains to inform the people.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator knows that on the 15th day of March and the 21st day of May of this year high naval officials testified before a Senate committee of the great value of the destroyers which have been transferred to another power. Admiral Stark as late as the 21st day of May appeared before the committee and told of the great value of these destroyers and the need for recommissioning them. I wanted the Senator to know that.

If the Senator is about to conclude, I should like, since he mentioned Mr. Lindley, who is very close to the President, indeed, his biographer, to call his attention to what he said in the Newsweek of the issue out today:

UNITED STATES-BRITISH UNION

British talk about a union with the United States is just a morale booster and the start of a build-up for some post-war semialliance. Washington, of course, wouldn't touch the idea with a 10-foot pole now.

The word "now" should be particularly noted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Just a few days ago the House of Commons of Great Britain was assured by Mr. Clement Atlee, one of the members of the Cabinet, that a union with the United States would not be consummated without an opportunity to discuss it in Parliament. I hope that the United States Congress may have a similar opportunity.

Mr. HOLT. I want to say to the Senator, before he concludes, that what I just read ended with the word "now," but the article goes on to say:

Both President and Mrs. Roosevelt——

I want the Senator to get this—

Both President and Mrs. Roosevelt are deeply interested in the general idea of some eventual alliance and have had several private discussions with Clarence Streit, author of Union Now.

Think of that! The President of the United States and his wife are together in this.

Naturally, however, the administration wouldn't openly broach the subject until there had been long public discussion and much further decline in isolationist sentiment.

I wanted the Senator to know about that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Probably that is a little more of the activities of William Allen White's committee.

Mr. HOLT. But it does show there is a move in that direction, and, sooner or later, we may find that the Rhodes scholar has been very successful.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I offered an amendment in substance covering the Sheppard bill, Senate bill 1610. In connection with that amendment which was adopted an amendment was handed to me relating to certain matters in the District of Columbia affecting law schools. It is a subject with which I am not familiar, but I agreed to offer the amendment upon the understanding that the Senator from New York was perfectly willing to have the amendment adopted and to take it to conference for study there. I offer the amendment at this time and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

In establishing rules and regulations governing admission to the practice of law in the District of Columbia, no court in the District of Columbia shall require that any law school shall be approved or accredited by any agent or agency other than the court itself, and no court in the District of Columbia shall require as a condition precedent to admission to practice that any applicant shall have been graduated from any particular law school or from a law school approved or accredited by any agent or agency other than the court itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not think we should adopt such an amendment as that without consideration. It looks as if it were a very interesting little amendment. If I understood its reading, it had unfavorable consideration by one of the standing committees of the Senate, namely, the Committee on the District of Columbia. I do not think the amendment should be adopted in this manner.

Mr. HATCH. I am perfectly willing to discuss it, if the Senator desires.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has this amendment been considered by any committee, so far as the Senator from New Mexico knows?

Mr. HATCH. Not that I know of. As I have stated, it is a subject with which I am not entirely familiar, but from the text of the amendment I think it certainly could well be adopted. It merely prevents any requirement of graduation from any particular law school being prescribed by any private association or agency to enable one to practice law in the District of Columbia and places the control in the court.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is that all it does?

Mr. HATCH. That is my understanding of the amendment. It gives control to the court.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thought there was a clause at the end of it which put a limitation on the courts.

Mr. HATCH. Not at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. May we have the amendment again reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Vermont understands the amendment now, does he not? It does propose to prevent the court from setting up an arbitrary standard that those seeking to practice law in the District of Columbia must be graduates of any particular school. As I said when I offered it, it is a subject with which I am not familiar and which I have not studied, but the Senator from New York is more or less familiar with it and had agreed to take it to conference and give it study and consideration there.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand from the reading of the amendment—I have never heard of it before—it permits the court to set up a law school or any other institution. That is the understanding I got from hearing the amendment read.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the impression I got.

Mr. NORRIS. "Except the court itself," it says.

Mr. HATCH. "Except the court itself"; that is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? Is there now any practice in the District of Columbia whereby any particular law school is designated as the one from which law students must graduate in order to obtain licenses to practice?

Mr. HATCH. I understand not, but I understand that there have been several moves in that direction.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not this amendment do that if the court should approve it?

Mr. HATCH. If the court should approve it, it would.

Mr. NORRIS. If the court should approve a particular law school, then a diploma from that law school would admit the applicant to practice in the District of Columbia, as I understand.

Mr. HATCH. I do not so understand the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the amendment permit any court in the District of Columbia to issue an order or a regulation providing that nobody except graduates of the George Washington Law School or the National Law School for example, could be admitted to the bar?

Mr. HATCH. It would not.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amendment does not mean that, it ought to be clarified.

Mr. NORRIS. Whether or not that interpretation can be sustained, I desire to ask a question. Is it not true that under this amendment, if it should become a law, a court in the District of Columbia could designate any particular school it wanted to designate, and provide by its order that a diploma from that school would admit the applicant to practice in the District of Columbia? Is not that true?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the amendment; but I understand certain regulations and requirements have been set up by other associations or agencies than the court, and this amendment would prevent those associations or agencies from prescribing a particular course or college.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield at that point, what are these agencies, and have they any influence with the court? What power have they to set up private regulations which will govern the court in the decision as to whether or not somebody should be admitted to the bar? And, while I am inquiring, what relation has that subject to the civil-service bill we are now considering?

Mr. MEAD. None, except that it has to do with personnel that eventually come into the Government service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Some of them may eventually come into the Government service; but certainly not all the lawyers admitted to the bar in the District of Columbia will become Government employees.

Mr. MEAD. Not quite all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York answer my question?

Mr. MEAD. I will if I can, but I am not familiar with this amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have it in my hand, and I will answer the question.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me read it. I think the amendment answers the question. I read the last words first, because I want to emphasize them. The last words are:

other than the court itself.

Mr. NORRIS. Those words are what I am afraid of. That means that the court could prescribe graduation from a certain school.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why, yes; the court could fix upon one school.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, it could.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think this whole subject matter is one which deserves thorough study by a committee before the amendment is adopted by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me so, too.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, it is agreeable to the Senator who offered the amendment, and certainly agreeable to me, that the matter be referred to the proper committee for study. Therefore the amendment is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico withdraw the amendment temporarily?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; the statement of the Senator from New York meets with my approval.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, there are a few more amendments which are not very controversial which I should like to submit to the bill, so that we might finish it today, if that is agreeable.

Mr. NORRIS. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I join the Senator in hoping that we may dispose of the bill today? It had been my hope that tomorrow we might have the calendar called for the consideration of unobjected-to bills. The calendar has not been called for some time, and there are many bills on it which ought to be acted upon. If we can finish this bill today and finish the call of the calendar tomorrow, it is my purpose to move that the Senate adjourn over until Monday, because the tax bill will not be ready for the consideration of the Senate before Monday.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to state that he had attempted to recognize the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who had requested recognition.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inadvertently, as a result of the debate, thought some one on the Democratic side of the Chamber had the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. While we are on this subject, let me state a parliamentary inquiry. Has the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico been withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

ELECTION CONDITIONS IN NEW JERSEY

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I rise to speak on a subject which to me is the most vital subject which can be brought before this forum of democracy, and that is the free ballot in America. I have particular reference to a committee of which I am a humble member, the duly constituted Senate committee investigating 1940 campaign expenditures, appointed last February by the Vice President, consisting of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator speaking.

We accepted our appointments, began our deliberations, and made several investigations prior to the great conventions of the respective parties. We found nothing to object to in the discoveries there. In the post-convention period there were brought to our attention conditions in several States of the Union which manifestly, at least on the first presentation to us of the evidence, demanded committee action.

The evidence which was presented to us was of such serious import and gravity that it appeared to us that it must be investigated. We assigned investigators to go into the several States, and they are in four or five States at the present time. My remarks now have particular reference to the State of New Jersey, and the investigation which has been conducted there for a month or more by investigators from our committee, and which is now in process, or was until yesterday.

I desire to give the Senate a factual statement of what has happened in connection with the Committee on Campaign Expenditures as they have gone into the New Jersey situation.

As far as the State of New Jersey goes, I was assigned by the chairman to go with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] into that State and conduct hearings, because the committee were so unfavorably impressed with the picture brought to them by our investigators in a series of three preliminary reports. There came before our Committee on Campaign Expenditures one of the candidates for the Senate in New Jersey at the coming election; and he presented affidavits disclosing, if true—and I may say that they are supported by other affidavits, as well as individual testimony given to me—a condition which is unbelievable in this free country of ours; a boss-ridden county or counties where free elections have been denied to thousands and thousands of persons, where the electoral rolls have been not only, if you please, packed but purged of the names on them, and others substituted; where men have been voted by the score and by the hundreds and by the thousands by names of their own, but they themselves never voted, having moved away, and in some cases passed away; a condition so deplorable that it cries out loud for investigation and for report.

So last week the chairman of this committee of ours, seeing the election ahead, realizing the gravity of the statements and charges which had been made, asked me to go with my colleague, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and make this investigation and hold hearings in the State of New Jersey, in Hudson County. I sought out my colleague who had been assigned with me, the Senator from Arkansas, and he was away at his home in Arkansas. His office said they would get in touch with him. I gave them the message, and the answer came back the next day that they had contacted him, and that he could not be here that week or this week because of home conditions in his own family and his own State. I carried the report back to my chairman, and he came to me and said, in all sincerity, "I think the thing for you to do is to go in there alone, take charge of the work of investigation, start the hearings, get the ground work done, and then when, as, and if the Senator from Arkansas comes, he will join with you."

I sincerely and frankly demurred, because I felt that it might be a mistake, and so said to my chairman, for whom I have not only respect but, honestly, affection. There are no finer men than the chairman of the committee, and I say that from the heart. I demurred to him in all sincerity, and said, "I think it is a mistake to let me, a Republican Member, go in there alone. There might develop charges of partisanship and of a prejudiced hearing, and so forth, and I do not want to put you in that position; but I do say to you, sir, that I am going in, if I do go in, without fear or favor of any man or interest to hew a straight line, and let the chips fall where they may. I will investigate Republicans just as well as Democrats. I give you my word for that." He said, "I know you will." So he overruled my doubt, and said, "I am going to write you a letter giving you authority. You go on and begin the hearings"; and he wrote me a letter which I now read into the RECORD, dated last Friday:

HON. CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This letter is for the purpose of advising you that I have named you as chairman of the subcommittee appointed to conduct hearings in the State of New Jersey for this committee.

Senator MILLER will be associate chairman.

Very sincerely,

GUY M. GILLETTE, Chairman.

With that letter in my pocket I came back to this Chamber for a last word with him. With my hat in my hand, Friday afternoon, I stood in the corner of the Chamber and said, "Mr. Chairman, I am going to go, but on just one basis—that I go down there with you behind me to conduct an honest, fearless, thorough investigation, no matter how long it takes, what it costs, whom it may hit, or where the chips may fall." He replied, "That is what I want you to do. I am behind you 100 percent. Go ahead." Then with confidence, I proceeded. I took with me the preliminary reports of the investigators, many affidavits, and a great deal of testimony; and, if I may say so, it would shock any of you to read it. I took it to my home, and then I went back to New York City. I went into New Jersey, back and forth from New York to New Jersey. I visited people and contacted parties and talked with the investigators in my room in New York, and we were all ready to go ahead this morning at 10 o'clock. The Federal courtroom in Newark, N. J., had been given over to us through the kindness of the Federal judge and clerk of the court.

The stenographers had been engaged, the witnesses had been summoned. I contacted legal authorities on behalf of the committee, and had their advice. Then something happened. At half-past 5 in the afternoon day before yesterday I received a telegram, which I read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 24, 1940.

HON. CHARLES W. TOBEY:
(Or forward care Union League Club.)

Due to inability of Senator MILLER, chairman subcommittee, to attend hearings scheduled for this week in New Jersey, deem advisable postponement of hearings until matter further considered by full committee. Secretary if can will advise witnesses.

GUY M. GILLETTE,
Chairman, Senate Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures.

JOHN E. MILLER,
Chairman, Subcommittee.

The only purpose in reading that into the RECORD is to bring out the fact that, having the confidence and assurance from my chairman, who appointed me chairman of the subcommittee to conduct this work, we were all ready to go, to move forward, everything was to be looked after, and suddenly we are called back here, investigators and committeemen. The secretary is not needed, the stenographers are not needed, the courtroom is not needed, lawyers not needed. So yesterday morning I called the chairman on the telephone, not being able to get him the night before. I said, "Mr. Chairman, I am amazed and chagrined and embarrassed at the course of events. What is the answer to this telegram breaking off this investigation at this striking point the day before it is to begin?" He said, "I am embarrassed, too."

I stop at that point a moment. I am looking into the face of that Senator chairman, for whom I have affection and regard, as I have for all my colleagues on this committee.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, there come times where matters of the greatest import are so serious, when things which are done are so pregnant with ill for the American people, that I believe we have to talk frankly, tremendously frankly, and that is what I propose to do, whether it is liked or not. I am built that way. It is not a pleasant thing for me to do here today. But he said to me, "I am embarrassed, too." He said, "A member of our committee came to me and said, 'They are raising hell with me, and you have got to help me out.'"

What did he ask the chairman to do? To postpone indefinitely, to throw out the window, to discontinue the investigation begun in New Jersey, into the rotten situation that exists there. That was the request made of the chairman. What did the chairman do? Just what we would know he would do. He stood up like a man, four square, and said, "I will do nothing of the sort. The Senator from New Hampshire is down there at my command, and under my instructions, with authority ready to begin work. The most I will do will be to call the committee together and go over the matter anew." And that is what he did, as it was his right to do. So I came back to Washington. Our work in New Jersey was stopped, indefinitely postponed.

A meeting of the committee was held this morning, and what happened there was a great satisfaction to me, and to the credit of every member of the committee. The committee decided, despite pressure that is almost unbelievable on certain members, to tell these people where they could go, and that the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenditures would take this matter up anew, and on October 15, in Newark, N. J., we shall begin these investigations and carry them all the way through.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator has used the term "pressure." From what source does this pressure to which he makes reference come, if he knows?

Mr. TOBEY. I will try to answer the question. Now that I am on the subject of pressure let me say that the most terrible evil in American life, of course, is the evil against which I appear today—the prostitution of election machinery in this country, of any election unit, interfering with the rights of voters to vote their convictions in good conscience wherever they cast their ballots. This committee was appointed to point out where evils exist there and to report back to this body and to make recommendations as to how to make such things impossible.

The Senator asked me whence the pressure came. I have an idea, but I cannot put my finger on the spot and say, "Thou art the man. This is the group." But I will give my colleagues as much light as I can.

I cite that one instance of pressure which came to the chairman of the committee, which he said came from people higher up. I will give another picture. I do not like to do it. I do it because it is necessary to give the picture of the condition as it exists. I say in all good conscience that the time has come in this body to waive aside all technicalities and superfluities, and irregularities, and petty etiquette, and to tell the American people the truth. Pitiless publicity will do more to cure the evil than anything I know of.

I take you to a committee room of the Senate, where we met in July, 2 weeks after the great conventions, and were gathered together as a committee, when one of the Members said to the committee in open meeting, "Gentlemen, I have something serious to take up with you." These are not the exact words, but they give the import and spirit, and some are the exact words. He began his talk in this way. He said, "I am under tremendous pressure. They want me to resign. They would like to have this whole committee out the window, and they came to me with a proposition that no self-respecting man would agree to, and I told them 'No.'" Then mightily moved, he wept.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not understand who made the statement.

Mr. TOBEY. I am referring to one of the members of the committee who made these statements. He did not say where it came from. He said, "I am under tremendous pressure. They are trying to force me to resign. I refused to meet their demands."

Think that over, Mr. President, and friends in the galleries, and 130,000,000 people throughout this Nation. What is going on in this country—election registration lists debauched, free elections interfered with, and, worse than that, and concomitant with it, certain interests in Washington working upon a member of a great committee, whose usefulness would be nil unless he is a free man and can let the chips fall where they will.

But they did not succeed. I was outraged at the attempt. The tears were in my eyes. I said, "Who put this pressure on you? Give us the name." And he shook his head, and another Senator on the committee said, "I know what he has been through, and no Member of Congress ever went through more pressure than this man has gone through. It is unbelievable."

There is the evidence, corroborated, of an incident in the Committee on Campaign Expenditures, 2 weeks after the great conventions.

What is the second illustration? It was weeks afterward, when certain leaders in the Congress sought out a member of this committee and used pressure to influence him not to continue the investigation in New Jersey.

I give you the third illustration. I have already referred to it, when only yesterday the chairman was called on by a member of the committee and said, "They are raising hell with me. You have to help me," and the chairman told me that what they wanted to do was "to stop the committee hearings and kill any investigation in Hudson County, N. J."

As a result of that desire and purpose to kill the work we are trying to do in an honest way, I got a telegram calling me back home.

> Things are called off in New Jersey. All engagements and assignments out the window, and we have to start all over again.

The attempt to purge this committee, the attempt to crucify the work they have to do and make monkeys out of the committee failed, but nevertheless the attempt was made, and, Mr. President, I have given here three citations of this hellish thing we call "pressure," put upon free men in a free country, in the highest deliberative body in the Nation, in the United States Senate.

I am asked where it comes from, and to name names, and I cannot do it. But come it did. It sprang into being. It did its work upon the committee as best it could. It was turned back, yes, but they tried their damndest to hamstring this committee.

I have a few more observations to make, and I desire to make them now and sit down, as I have held the floor too long.

The preliminary reports of the investigators for our committee in New Jersey indicated shocking conditions. What power attempts to prevent us from going into New Jersey as representatives of our Government and of the United States Senate to deal adequately with this situation, to stop debauchery of the ballot and to investigate election irregularities in Hudson County and elsewhere, if necessary, letting the chips fall where they may? I propound that question.

I now propound another: Is there a Hague-Washington axis?

I propound another: Who are Hague's friends in Washington, who step in and attempt to suppress Federal agencies of investigation?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Is that the same Mr. Hague I saw pictured with his arm around Vice Presidential Candidate Wallace?

Mr. TOBEY. I cannot say as to that. It was "the" Hague.

Mr. President, the American people have a right to know the source of the pressure which has been applied on this committee by way of Jersey City and Washington to block the prosecution of this inquiry, which seems necessary to prevent wholesale debauchery of the ballot.

It was been obvious for some time that the ordinary legislative processes in the State of New Jersey cannot cope with this situation because Hague flouts the law and defies the legislature. Only a short time ago he said—and it went over this country—"I am the law." He must have had a common ancestor with Louis XIV, who cried out in those days, "L'etat, c'est moi"—I am the state. But not quite yet, Mr. Hague.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I shall yield in just a moment. When Supreme Court Justice Murphy was Attorney General he told his intimate friends that conditions in Hudson County were awful, and that he was determined to clean things up. He put his investigators in there, but the findings of his investigators were never released to the press. Why? All through his career Hague seems to be able to bring pressure, through high sources in Washington, to stop Federal investigations just in the nick of time, and nothing ever happens. Who intercedes for Hague at Washington and attempts to block Federal agencies from cleaning up the corrupt operations of the Hague Democratic machine, I ask again.

Mr. President, I wish to say something about the President of the United States.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. If the Senator from New Jersey will wait until I conclude this portion of my remarks I shall be glad to yield to him then.

Mr. SMATHERS. I may forget what I wish to ask.

Mr. TOBEY. I have been a Member of the Senate for 2 years and of the House of Representatives for 6 years. I came to Washington with the advent of Franklin Delano Roosevelt as President and have been a Member of the legislative group ever since. I have rarely agreed with the President of the United States on his various policies of the so-called New Deal. But I wish to pay tribute where tribute is due.

I am going to cite to the Senate now one equation or matter on which I agree with him 100 percent, and so does every man within the sound of my voice, Republican or Democrat, whatever his lot in life may be, if there is not something the matter with him. Here is what Franklin Delano Roosevelt said at the University of Pennsylvania last week:

> As long as periodic free elections survive no set of people can deny the right to vote to another set. In the maintenance of free elections rests the complete and the enduring safety of our form of government. And remember that no dictator in history has ever dared to run the gauntlet of a really free election.

It is to insure free elections in New Jersey that we began our investigation which has been so suddenly interrupted.

Mr. President, why am I making this talk here this afternoon? First, to disclose frankly and sincerely and honestly a condition which is abhorrent to all free-thinking Americans, and, second, to cite to you a pressure system, a pressure group, which is operating on free men in the United States Senate, men sworn to do their duty, and before God we are going to do that duty.

And, lastly, to serve notice on these pressure individuals or groups, whatever their names may be or whatever their party, no matter how powerful they are, that we hereby serve notice on you to keep your dirty hands and influence off the members of the Committee on Senate Campaign Expenditures. We are sworn to do the job. We are going to do the job. We are going to do an honest job, a real job, a clean job, let the chips fall where they will, whether we indict Republicans or Democrats, and when we get through we will come back and make our report. But you keep your hands off. You that interfere with us by bringing pressure are just as damnable as these groups or men who debauch elections back in these various States of ours. You are accessories after the facts.

And, Mr. President, we hang out a sign over our committee-room door, from now on, to any pressure group in this country which seeks to subordinate and impair our efficiency. Here is the sign:

> Keep away from this committee!
> Hereof fail not at your peril.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I have the honor, in part, to represent the great State of New Jersey in this body. I am amazed that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, in presenting the question of New Jersey to this body, has said nothing about the charges of corruption of the ballot in Republican south Jersey. He has confined his remarks only to Democratic north Jersey. I want it distinctly understood, and I call upon him to state whether there had been any pressure from me in this connection. As a matter of fact, I have felt that the committee should go into the State of New Jersey and investigate the charges made by the Republicans that there is corruption of the ballot in Democratic north Jersey, and also investigate the charges made by the Democrats that there is corruption of the ballot in south Jersey, and I ask the distinguished Senator to say now, while he is on his feet, whether there has been any pressure from me on him or any other member of the committee.

Mr. TOBEY. No; I have not seen the Senator from New Jersey for 3 or 4 weeks.

As to his remarks about another part of New Jersey. If he had ears to hear, and had listened to what I said, he would recall the fact that I said when going to New Jersey—I told the chairman of the committee that the only condition under which I will go is as a free man, to make a free, fair, and impartial investigation, no matter what it costs, or how long it takes, or whether it hits Republicans or Democrats.

Mr. SMATHERS. If the Senator from New Hampshire is only going to investigate Hudson County, he will not investigate any Republicans.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me say to the Senator that already our investigators are in a Republican county working—and I told the investigators of another Republican county they have to go into before we conclude our hearings. We are going to do an honest job, that is all; and shame on these people who would come in and use pressure to keep us from going into Hudson County. They ought to say, "Come into Hudson County, and God bless you. We welcome you."

There is an old scriptural adage which I remember from my boyhood which I think applies to the conditions there:

He that doeth evil hateth the light. Neither goeth he to the light because his deeds are evil.

I think we will prove that before we get through from the evidence already adduced by our investigators.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GILLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I should like to have the privilege of inserting in the RECORD after my remarks certain articles appearing in the press respecting the progress of the investigation of the committee and its having been interrupted so suddenly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Sun of September 24, 1940]

UNITED STATES SENATORS TO LOOK INTO HAGUE MACHINE—SPECIAL COMMITTEE WILL INVESTIGATE CHARGES OF REGISTRATION FRAUD—TOBEY TO HEAR EVIDENCE—INQUIRY TO BE HELD IN NEWARK FEDERAL BUILDING—LEADERS OF BOTH PARTIES SUBPENAED

Charges of illegal registration and illegal campaign expenses in Hudson County, N. J., the bailiwick of Mayor Frank Hague, Democratic national committeeman, will be investigated by a special committee of the United States Senate sitting in the Federal Building, Newark. The inquiry will begin on September 26 with Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY, Republican, of New Hampshire, presiding.

The charges were filed with the Senate by Joseph A. Tumulty, Jr., an independent candidate for Senator from New Jersey. Representatives of the committee conferred today with Federal Judge Guy L. Fake and obtained permission to use his courtroom for 3 days, starting Thursday.

According to Mr. Tumulty's charges, "thousands of names are on the registry lists in Hudson County that have no legal right there." He filed his charges last July, and early in August investigators entered the county.

TOBEY TO PRESIDE ALONE

Other members of the committee are Senators GUY M. GILLETTE, Democrat, of Iowa, and JOHN E. MILLER, Democrat, of Arkansas. They will be unable to attend the hearing, so Senator TOBEY will preside alone.

Political leaders of both parties will appear under subpena, it is understood.

While the committee's investigators were in the field, Charles E. Sewell, Republican commissioner of elections in Hudson County, had investigators checking the lists, and it was said that several thousand names were stricken from them.

Democratic leaders charge that Mr. Sewell is withholding publication of the names of those stricken from the lists until it is too late for those whose names have been stricken to take the matter to court.

HAGUE MACHINE UPSET

Meanwhile the Hague machine was considerably perturbed today over the passage of election reforms in Trenton, including a measure requiring the installation of voting machines in Hudson County. The reforms were enacted into law early today over the gubernatorial veto by a weary legislature which remained in session until nearly dawn.

The reform program was aimed by the Republican majority at the Hague machine. Mayor Hague declared that the use of voting machines would cut the Democratic vote in Hudson by close to 40,000 votes, because many voters would be too confused by the contraptions.

Under the new voting-machine bill the Republican-controlled State House Commission has the right to purchase the machines and write their cost off against future State subsidies to the county. It is planned to have the machines installed in time for use in the November elections, if possible.

Another measure passed by the legislature allows the Republican superintendent of elections to call upon the State police to enforce election laws on Election Day.

TOBEY WILL STUDY HUDSON VOTE LIST—SENATE INQUIRY INTO CHARGES OF PADDED REGISTRY IN HAGUE'S COUNTY OPENS TOMORROW—TWO ELECTION BILLS PASSED—JERSEY LEGISLATURE, HOWEVER, REVISES COURT AND POLL-BOOK MEASURES AFTER VETO

NEWARK, N. J., September 24.—Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY, New Hampshire Republican and member of the United States Senate Committee on Campaign Expenditures, will hold hearings here Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, in the Federal Building, on charges of a padded voting registry in Hudson County.

The charges forming the basis for the hearings were filed August 13 by Joseph A. Tumulty, Jr., independent candidate for election to the United States Senate from New Jersey. Subsequently, the committee sent investigators to Hudson County, where the political organization led by Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City has rolled up huge election majorities in recent years.

[From the New York Sun of September 25, 1940]

HUDSON BALLOT INQUIRY HALTED BY WASHINGTON—SENATE INVESTIGATION IS SUDDENLY POSTPONED UNTIL OCTOBER—NO EXPLANATION IS GIVEN—LONG LIST OF SUBPENAS HAD BEEN ISSUED FOR POLITICAL CHIEFS OF BOTH PARTIES

The stage was all set for the United States Senate committee's investigation into illegal campaign expenditures and illegal registration in Hudson County, stronghold of the Democratic forces of Jersey City's Mayor Frank Hague. A courtroom in the Federal Building in Newark had been made ready. The invitations were out. The committee, headed by Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY, New Hampshire Republican, was poised to begin its work. Investigators had assembled masses of material. Hearings were scheduled to begin tomorrow and continue the rest of the week.

Today, however, with startling suddenness Senator TOBEY and his subcommittee were recalled to Washington. A clerk of the investigating committee called Acting United States Attorney William F. Smith on the telephone and canceled use of the court room.

INQUIRY IS POSTPONED

The investigation had been postponed, he said, indefinitely. Perhaps they would be resumed some time in October. No date, however, was set. It was all very confusing.

The investigators attached to the Senate Campaign Investigating Committee went back to Washington, too. Peace and quiet reigned over Hague's Hudson County once more, the same county into which former United States Attorney General Frank Murphy once sent F. B. I. investigators.

On that occasion, too, there was considerable agitation, Mr. Murphy was kicked upstairs to the Supreme Court, Robert H. Jackson came in as Attorney General, and Mayor Hague declared for a third term.

The F. B. I. investigators still have the evidence but no place to go with it.

OBTAIN A COURTROOM

Representatives of the committee had conferred with Federal Judge Guy L. Fake yesterday and asked to be permitted to use his courtroom on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. That was a favor easy to grant because, the judge pointed out, he and other Federal district and circuit court judges from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware will be in Atlantic City at that time for a judicial conference.

The charges, brought by Joseph Tumulty, Jr., independent candidate for United States Senator from New Jersey in the November 5 election, concerned illegal registration and expenditures throughout the county, which is heavily Democratic.

There had been a long list of subpenas issued for all manners of political leaders of both parties, it is understood, but Senator TOBEY did not disclose who his star witnesses were to have been. They may now be deprived of a chance to tell the workings of the well-oiled Hague machine which has returned record pluralities for President Roosevelt—and hopes to repeat.

[From the New York Times of September 26, 1940]

ELECTION INQUIRY IN JERSEY PUT OFF; TOBEY INDIGNANT—SENATOR, IN CHARGE OF SURVEY, GETS WORD FROM CAPITAL OF A POSTPONEMENT—HE HINTS AT PRESSURE—GILLETTE EXPLAINS, HOWEVER, DELAY IS ONLY TO FIX STATUS OF SUBCOMMITTEE

An investigation by a United States Senate committee into charges of illegal registrations in Jersey City, which was to have got under way, was abruptly postponed for an indefinite period yesterday in circumstances that caused Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY, who was to have presided, to express suspicion that pressure had been brought on "official Washington."

The investigation had been the center of considerable political interest in view of the fact that this is election year and Jersey City, organized under Mayor Frank Hague, is the foundation stone of Democratic strength in New Jersey.

Bitterly indignant, Senator TOBEY, over whose head the inquiry had been postponed, left for Washington last night, saying that he was determined to get to the bottom of the affair.

The postponement was ordered in a telegram received by Senator TOBEY from the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenditures, of which the Senator is a member. The telegram was signed by Senator GUY M. GILLETTE, Iowa Democrat, and Senator JOHN E. MILLER, Arkansas Democrat. Senator TOBEY, from New Hampshire, is a Republican.

Unless Senator TOBEY receives a satisfactory explanation of the postponement and assurances that the inquiry will go through without undue delay, he will see to it, he said, that "the people know of it."

ROLL PADDING CHARGED

The inquiry was originally voted by the Senate committee after James A. Tumulty, Jr., independent candidate for United States Senator, charged that the Jersey City registration rolls were padded. Appearing before the committee in Washington, Mr. Tumulty asserted that, although Jersey City suffered a population loss of 15,703 between 1930 and 1940, the registration total jumped from 148,786 in 1936 to 163,300 in 1940.

The committee sent investigators into the field. They checked up registrations against the people supposedly registered and found, according to Senator TOBEY, that conditions "cried out loud" for exposure and correction.

Interviewed just before his departure for Washington, Senator TOBEY said that, until he received the telegram of postponement, he had thought Senator GILLETTE was 100 percent for the investigation. The Iowa Senator is not beholden to the administration; he was one of the foremost targets of the 1938 purge attempt, in which New Dealers sought to bring about the defeat of Members of Congress who had not given what they considered sufficient support to the administration, and he survived that effort to displace him.

"Senator GILLETTE had emphasized to me that the investigation should not be delayed until after the election," said Senator TOBEY. "But considerable difficulty developed in getting the help of Senator MILLER. As originally constituted, the subcommittee named to conduct the New Jersey investigation was composed of Senator MILLER, as chairman, and myself.

"Senator MILLER, it seemed, could not get away to go to New Jersey. His office said that he had been told the hearings were about to start. Different stories were told in explanation of his inability to attend. One was that his wife was seriously ill, another that he had gone to attend the funeral of a postmaster in Arkansas.

DEMURRED ON ACTING ALONE

"In any event, we finally learned that he would not be able to take part either last week or this, and then Senator GILLETTE asked me to undertake the task alone. I demurred, saying that since I was a Republican it would like a partisan inquiry.

"But Senator GILLETTE urged me to go, and he promised to stand behind me. As a result, I went to Jersey City; I studied the evidence that had been gathered by the investigators. Arrangements had been made for us to use one of the Federal courts beginning tomorrow. Stenographers had been hired, and everything was ready.

"Then came the telegram of postponement. It said that there was to be no further action until a full committee meeting had been held to thresh out the whole matter.

"I immediately called Senator GILLETTE on the telephone and told him I was surprised, amazed, and embarrassed by the calling off of the inquiry. He said that he was embarrassed also. And he agreed to hold a meeting at 10 a. m. tomorrow of the full five-man committee.

INQUIRY NONPARTISAN, HE SAYS

"This inquiry would have been entirely nonpartisan, hewing to the line, and letting the chips fall where they might—an inquiry conducted under the authority given the committee by the Senate, as understood by Senator GILLETTE, myself, and our colleagues.

"The events that this committee was appointed to investigate and to correct, by recommending legislation, are the greatest threat to democracy, namely, the intimidation of voters, the gross use of expenditures of money, the tampering with election books. In other words, crooked work on the election lists, primary and general. President Roosevelt touched on these matters in his recent speech at the University of Pennsylvania. The President said: 'As long as periodic free elections survive, no set of people can deny the right to vote to any other set. In the maintenance of free elections rests the complete and the enduring safety of our form of government. And, remember, that no dictator in history has ever dared to run the gantlet of a really free election.'

"Decent men in all parties concur in that statement.

"Affidavits and evidence in my possession show that there are ample grounds for such an investigation in New Jersey. Conditions cry out loud for it. That is what the committee is for, and that is what it will do, so far as I am concerned.

"I only hope that my fears are unfounded, namely, that some individuals, or officials, or interests in New Jersey have reached official Washington and have caused pressure to be applied to stop this investigation. If such is the case, the people should know of it, and shall know of it.

"In today's papers I notice the statement that other investigations in New Jersey have been postponed, apparently through pressure applied from Washington. As I remember Scripture, "He that doeth evil hateth the light.' I hope that that has no application to the suspension of this inquiry."

EXPLANATION IN WASHINGTON

In Washington Senator GILLETTE said that the investigation had been postponed until the status of the subcommittee had been determined. The chairman asserted that Senator MILLER had been unable to serve because of the illness of his wife. A few days ago, according to Senator GILLETTE, Senator TOBEY reported that he would be unable to attend the hearings if they did not get under way this week. In the circumstances, the Iowa Senator added, he commissioned Senator TOBEY to go ahead.

But in the last few days, according to Senator GILLETTE, it had developed that Senator MILLER might have to resign from the subcommittee, making it necessary to reconstitute the two-man subcommittee. And so, the chairman continued, the full committee had been called into meeting today to determine the status of the subcommittee.

"I therefore joined Senator MILLER in a telegram for Senator TOBEY to postpone the inquiry," the chairman said. "It is strictly a postponement, and only in order that we may determine the membership and status of the subcommittee. That's all there is to it."

In Jersey City it was reported that the committee had assigned investigators to Ocean County, seat of Republican Leader Thomas H. Mathis, secretary of state of New Jersey. Democratic leaders, replying to charges that in Mayor Hague's Hudson County fraudulent registrations would total 60,000, have retorted that many summer residents of Ocean County have cast illegal votes.

The Senate investigating committee is composed of three Democrats and two Republicans. In addition to those mentioned above, the members are LISTER HILL, Alabama, Democrat, and CLYDE M. REED, Kansas, Republican.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, of course, it is a matter of real regret to me, and I am sure to the other members of our committee, that my good friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has made the statement he has just made on the floor of the Senate. I can understand and appreciate that he is deeply agitated, deeply moved, and with some justification. I had hoped that the matter would not be presented on the floor of the Senate, but the Senator is fully within his rights and, feeling as deeply as he feels, has made his statement.

It seems to me that, in fairness to all the members of the special committee, my duty requires me to refer to two or three matters in connection with the statement which has just been made. I wish to preface the remarks I shall make with the statement that at no time since the committee was named and entered upon the work assigned to it, has there been a suggestion by any member of the committee, Republican or Democrat, that the work of the committee should be distorted or shaped to serve the ends of any candidate or any party, including the distinguished Senator who has spoken from the fullness of his heart, and my Republican friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], my equally loved friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], with whom I served in the House, and to whom reference has been made.

Each and every one has asserted time after time and insistently demanded that the work of the committee should be shaped and carried on to the end for which it was created, which was the one goal that the electorate of the United States should have an opportunity, so far as we could aid them in so doing, of going to the polls in November and, so far as the purview of our authority was concerned, in the election of Senators, Vice President, and President should have full, free, and fair opportunity to cast their ballots and have their ballots counted.

To that end we have worked. There never has been the remotest suggestion in the membership of the committee that there should be any curtailment, any limitation, any shaping of duty to any other end than that. I felt it was absolutely necessary, so long as this matter had been brought up on the floor, to make that statement in behalf of the committee. That has been their attitude in the past; it is their attitude today; and if I thought for a second or a fraction of a second that that would not be the attitude of every member of the committee in the future I could not and would not work for 10 seconds with the committee.

I also want to speak, Mr. President, with reference to the situation which has been referred to and which has its embarrassment. There is no question, it had its embarrassment to the Senator from New Hampshire, it had its embarrassment to the Senator from Arkansas, it had its embarrassment to me. In any Presidential political campaign there must of necessity be developed intense partisan feeling. A campaign means that. The attempt to bring forth and have expressed at the polls the wishes of the electorate means that an appeal must be made. Campaigns wax hot. They always do and always will. In presenting the issues to the people feelings are agitated. That must be expected, and we expect it in the difficult work we have to do.

Having that in mind, and knowing the attitude of the members of the committee as expressed in the committee time and time again, we adopted the policy that, if it should become necessary for members of the committee to conduct hearings, if our investigators should develop a state of facts indicating that a committee hearing ought to be held, so that process might be issued to require the production of certain documents and necessary evidence, so far as possible the subcommittee should be bipartisan, so as to remove any possibility or suggestion of manipulation.

About a week ago the committee considered reports which had been made and charges which had been filed before us that there had been padding or manipulation of registration lists in the State of Delaware and in the State of New Jersey. The investigators had filed voluminous reports indicating that there were grounds for further action by the committee. The committee decided to take action. The committee, by proper action, directed the chairman to appoint subcommittees to conduct hearings if hearings were necessary in those two jurisdictions.

Following the instructions of the committee, the chairman appointed a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] to conduct hearings in Delaware. For the New Jersey situation the chairman appointed the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. It became evident to all of us, and was especially evident to me, that to be of value in an election only a few weeks away it was essential that if action were to be taken it should be taken without delay, and I urged the subcommittees to start as expeditiously as possible the work they were assigned to do.

Due to circumstances which could not be foreseen the Senator from Arkansas was called from Washington by illness in his family. I urged the Senator from New Hampshire to hurry with the work of the subcommittee and get started. He told me of the absence of the Senator from Arkansas. I requested that he get in touch with the Senator from Arkansas, and I understand that he made an attempt so to do. When he was advised and I was advised that there would be delay in the return of the Senator from Arkansas, it appeared to me, in my best judgment, that it would be advisable to start the ground work, as the Senator has stated, for the work in New Jersey, and that the Senator from Arkansas could join on his return. I urged and requested the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed to New Jersey and do the preliminary work looking to holding a subcommittee hearing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was temporarily out of the Chamber. What were the particular charges which were filed in New Jersey which the committee was called upon to investigate?

Mr. GILLETTE. The charges were general in their nature.

Mr. CONNALLY. Were they written?

Mr. GILLETTE. Written charges were filed under oath by a candidate for the Senate from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did he claim had been done? Was he merely afraid in advance that he would not be elected?

Mr. GILLETTE. No; I am quite sure that statement is not justified. The statement was made in the petition——

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the complaint relate to the primary or the general election?

Mr. GILLETTE. The charge was that the registration lists which will be used in the general election have been padded and manipulated in such a way that they do not carry a list of the electorate entitled to vote at the polls. With the filing of that complaint the committee directed the chairman to send out investigators. On the report of the investigators the committee directed that hearings be conducted.

Going back to the matter I was discussing, the Senator from New Hampshire, with my authority and approval, and with my assurance that I wanted him to do so, proceeded to New Jersey to do the preliminary work, to save time. In the meantime the Senator from Arkansas returned, and advised me that in all probability he would have to resign from membership on the subcommittee because the condition of his wife's health was such that it might be necessary to have a check-up in a hospital, and that he felt he could not jeopardize his obligations to his family by any duty, however insistent, which might devolve upon him in the Senate. He requested me to correct the situation by which the subcommittee would be left with but one member and would not be a bipartisan subcommittee. I joined with him, and authorized him to include my name in a telegram which I formulated, and which the Senator has read, informing the Senator from New Hampshire that in our judgment the hearings should be postponed until such time as the committee should have an opportunity to canvass the situation and to fix the status of the subcommittee.

As the Senator from New Hampshire has stated, last night he called me from New York or New Jersey and asked when the meeting of the committee could be held. I suggested Saturday. He asked if it could not be held at 10 o'clock this morning, and it was so held. In the meantime the Senator from Arkansas presented his resignation as a member of the subcommittee; and last night, just before the Senate took a recess, the President pro tempore of the Senate named the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to take the place of the Senator from Arkansas as a member of the subcommittee. I was so advised this morning. I was not present in the Senate in the closing minutes before the recess last night.

The committee met this morning and requested me to add the name of the Senator from Oklahoma to the subcommittee, directed that the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from New Hampshire proceed with the work which they were assigned to do, and fixed the date of October 15 as the definite date for the opening of the hearings.

In this connection I wish to be fair. The Senator has mentioned Mayor Hague. I do not know Mayor Hague. I know something of the charges which have been made here and elsewhere, and I hope they are not true. If they are true, as developed by our subcommittee and reported to the committee, whether the charges involve a Democrat or a Republican, there is no power in heaven above or in the earth beneath that would prevent me—and I think I speak for every member of the committee—from taking such action as may be indicated, whether it be against Mayor Hague, the President of the United States, the Senator from Iowa, who is now speaking, or anyone else.

However, I wish to be fair. This afternoon I received a telegram from Mr. Hague. He does not stand convicted before the Senate. He does not stand convicted before the committee. He does not stand convicted anywhere. Serious charges have been made, and the committee will try to determine the truth of the charges and act as the evidence which is presented to it and developed by it may indicate. Until such time, Mayor Hague or anyone else is entitled to have any matters he has presented to the committee read into the RECORD, so long as the matter has been brought to the floor.

Mayor Hague sent the following telegram to me:

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

The Hon. GUY M. GILLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The leading newspapers of the country are carrying a story from Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY regarding an investigation inaugurated by your committee on a complaint filed in regard to the increased registry list in Jersey City. Senator TOBEY's statement intimated that there were influences which prohibited him from sitting as a committee of one to conduct this investigation. If the Senator is referring to the Democrats of New Jersey, then I say to the Senator he is in error. We offer no objection to this investigation. As a matter of fact I would like the opportunity of personally appearing before your committee in New Jersey and I now request of you that if your committee decides to come into this State that you extend to me the courtesy of appearing on the witness stand so that I can express my knowledge of the corruption which exists in the Republican Party in this State. I ask you therefore to lend your good offices to the end that we may have a full impartial committee and not a committee of one come into New Jersey to ascertain the real conditions existing not alone in Jersey City but in south Jersey where the fraud perpetrated by the Republican Party has been exposed. This matter is so serious that in order to properly conduct the investigation you should have the entire committee sit in New Jersey. The Democrats of this State stand ready to produce facts concerning the outrageous fraud and corruption that exists in the Republican Party in south Jersey and we welcome you and your committee and I suggest that in view of the nearness of the approaching election you come in as soon as possible.

FRANK HAGUE,
Member, Democratic National Committee for New Jersey.

This afternoon I sent the following telegram to Mayor Hague:

SEPTEMBER 26, 1940.

Hon. FRANK HAGUE,
Member, Democratic National Committee for New Jersey, Jersey City, N. J.:

Acknowledging receipt your wire today owing to resignation Senator MILLER from Senate committee, Senator JOSH LEE named chairman subcommittee in lieu Senator MILLER. Subcommittee instructed commence hearings New Jersey matter October 15 if possible. While I cannot feel justified in instructing subcommittee as to its duties, am sure they will be glad to give you opportunity to appear personally before them and also to hear any one else who can aid them in their work. It would be impracticable for full committee to conduct hearings as we are engaged in several similar hearings. Subcommittee was also instructed to study reports of committee investigators as to irregularities in other parts New Jersey particularly seashore resorts. Committee appreciates your offer cooperation with our subcommittee and assures you we have only one object in view—that of securing for the New Jersey electorate full and free expression at the polls so far as our authority exists for such aid.

GUY M. GILLETTE,
Chairman, S. C. I. C. E.

(Official business.)

I will say to the Senator from New Jersey, who made an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the committee at the present time has investigators in the State of New Jersey investigating charges of improper voting and corruption in several parts of New Jersey other than Hudson County. They are now so engaged, and the subcommittee will be given their full report when it is received.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. SMATHERS. Will the Senator state whether any pressure was ever exerted by me upon him or any other member of the committee that he knows of to prevent anyone from going into the State of New Jersey?

Mr. GILLETTE. I will gladly bear witness that the Senator from New Jersey, who has just propounded the query, has never to my knowledge made any such attempt with reference to me or anyone else. I gladly and proudly clear him of any such suggestion.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. It was hardly necessary to ask that question, as all of us who know the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa, know that it would be a crazy man who would attempt to exert any pressure upon him.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I sincerely thank the Senator from Nebraska for his very kind words.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I did not hear what the Senator from Nebraska said.

Mr. BURKE. I shall be glad to repeat it. I said the question of the Senator from New Jersey was hardly necessary, as all of us who know the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, know that only a crazy man would attempt to exert any pressure upon him.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, I desire to add my full approval of what the Senator from Nebraska has said; but I will state for the information of the Senator from Nebraska that I fear that under that definition some Members of this body might be crazy. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, just a few words in closing.

It is needless for me to renew my sincere, heartfelt and deepest confidence in the members of the committee in the work we are trying to do. It is needless to restate the difficulty of the work with which we are charged, and the obligations which have been placed on us. I desire to say, however, on behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], that no one could have worked more consistently, more honestly, more unremittingly in the discharge of the duties of the committee than has the Senator from Arkansas. He has carried that load at a time when his family situation and his own private matters were weighing heavily on his mind and pressing down on his heart. Without going into any general discussion of pressure here or pressure there, the position in which he was placed was such that he felt that he could not continue. There was an obligation on him as a member of the subcommittee. He felt, as we all felt in the policy we had adopted, that one man should not be left to conduct a subcommittee hearing. He submitted his resignation; and with the deepest regret I have ever felt at any action in my life it was necessary, in fairness to him, for the President pro tempore to accept the resignation and to appoint a successor.

I desire to say again to the Senate that there has been no action of any kind on the part of the Senator from Arkansas which should cause him any embarrassment. No act that he has performed, no statement that he has made, no position in which he has placed the committee because of his resignation carries with it any suggestion of blame in any way, shape, or manner. In deference to the Senate and in fairness to the Senator from Arkansas, I feel that that statement ought to be made.

I thank the Senate for its indulgence. I felt that it was necessary to make the remarks I have made.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, in view of what has been said today I feel that it is appropriate for me to say something to the Senate, not in defense of the committee nor in defense of the fact that I resigned from the committee.

It has been said, and rightfully so, that the committee, composed of two Republicans and three Democrats, have attempted to approach their work in all seriousness, as free as possible from partisanship. I think everybody who knows me knows that I am not a partisan. I recognize the fact that either a Republican or a Democrat may commit a wrong, and a wrong committed by a Democrat is just as evil as a wrong committed by a Republican. That has been the policy of the committee.

Unfortunately, circumstances over which I have no control, and of which I do not desire to speak and shall not speak, have required me to be away from the Senate for a considerable period of time during the past 4 weeks. I was advised by my office last week that I had been appointed associate chairman of a subcommittee, along with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], to make an investigation in New Jersey. I immediately advised my office that I did not think it would be possible for me to attend the meetings or to attend to the duties of the subcommittee. I did not think it would be possible at that time for me to return to Washington for an indefinite period of time. I found it possible to return, however, hoping that I might come here and begin the work.

I came back to Washington the first part of this week. It was not possible for me to remain here. When it became clear that I could not remain here and could not perform my duties as a member of the committee, after hearings had been set for the 26th, 27th, and 28th of this month, I made arrangements to leave Washington tomorrow morning. To be perfectly frank, I tried to leave today, but found it impossible to do so.

Under those circumstances, I submitted my resignation; and, under those circumstances, I prevailed upon the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the chairman of the committee, to join with me in a telegram to our colleague, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], asking a postponement of the hearings in New Jersey. Not because I did not have confidence in the integrity of the Senator from New Hampshire—I have; every man here has—not because I did not have full confidence in his ability to conduct the hearings, but in order to save the committee and the Senate from any charge of partisanship, I felt that it was necessary that the hearings be conducted by a bipartisan committee. For that reason I requested postponement until it could be determined who could and who would take the place which I held on the committee.

Mr. President, that was why the hearing was postponed. It was postponed to meet a situation which I do not think can be prevented. It was postponed without any intention, certainly, upon my part, and without any intention, certainly, upon the part of the other members of the committee, not to do their duty. It was postponed in an effort to provide an orderly investigation, an investigation along the same line any other investigation would take, with a bipartisan committee, just as the investigation was made in Kansas by two members of the committee, just as the investigation is scheduled to be made in other States by two members of the committee.

I regret probably more than anyone else the necessity of my submitting my resignation, but when a Senator finds himself unable to do the work of a committee, he owes it to the Senate and he owes it to the other members of the committee to resign, and ask that someone else be placed on the committee to carry the load.

I conferred with some of my colleagues on this side yesterday and the day before, I talked to people in Arkansas, hoping that I might participate in the investigation next week. I had no more desire to leave the committee than I have to do many other things which I do not desire to do. But sometimes we face situations over which we have no control. I think the chairman of the committee did what he should have done. I think I did what I should have done in asking a postponement of the investigation until it could be made by a nonpartisan committee.

Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from New Hampshire, or any other Senator, to gather from that remark that I do not have the highest confidence in his integrity and his Americanism and in his honesty of purpose. I know the Senator is motivated by as high ideals as move any man in this Chamber, and I knew that if he understood the situation clearly it would meet with his approval.

I do not know anything about any pressure except that I talked to members of the Democratic Party on this side, and they agreed with me that in an investigation, whether it was in New Jersey or in any other State, where the question of partisanship might enter, it should be made by a bi-partisan committee. That is the reason why the hearing was postponed.

So far as I know, no one asked that the hearing be abandoned. I do not know what the press has reported; I am not advised about that; but I am advised that the hearing will be held. It should be held. No one will put the stamp of approval upon anything which is dishonest, whether done by a Democrat or by a Republican. That is the policy of the committee; that is the policy of the Senator from New Hampshire; that is the policy of the Senator from Kansas; it is the policy of the Senator from Alabama, and of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa. As for my policy, I am willing for them to say what my policy would have been.

Mr. President, under these circumstances I resigned from the committee, in an effort to be of help to the Senate, in an effort to be of service, but not to any political party. I believe I know one man in New Jersey outside of the two Senators and the Members of the House, and he is a former Member of this body, Senator Milton.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator whether it is not true that the activities of a committee of this kind are more in the formation of public opinion, and things of that kind? It has no coercive power. The committee cannot put anyone in jail, unless for contempt, it cannot punish anyone. It is for effect. It has a deterrent effect upon those who would violate the law, and also has a function in giving publicity to anything which may have a tendency to wrong the public generally. That being the case, is it not highly important that the public should think that these investigations are bipartisan, rather than by a partisan committee, or part of a committee? A particular individual Senator might be above reproach, but if the public should form the opinion that an investigation was a political investigation rather than a bipartisan investigation, the utility of the committee would practically be destroyed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I quite agree that the committee must maintain its investigations on a high level. The committee has recognized—and I am not speaking as a member of the committee now, because I am not on the committee—the committee has recognized all of the time the limitations on its authority. Publicity, pitiless publicity, does more to prevent corruption and fraud than any other one thing. Pitiless publicity is a greater deterrent than punishment itself, because men do not commit fraud and corruption under the eye of publicity.

Mr. President, I am sorry there has been any misunderstanding about the matter. I am sorry the situation has arisen as it has. But let me say in all candor and in all frankness that I think the people in New Jersey and elsewhere will be satisfied when the investigation is made; I think they will be satisfied that the committee is trying to arrive at the facts, and I think also they will be satisfied with this postponement.

Again, Mr. President—and then I shall be through—let me say to the members of the committee that I never regretted doing a thing in my official life more than I regretted resigning from this committee, because the members of the committee are men of honor and of integrity; men who are devoted to high ideals. Let us not have any misunderstanding about the matter. Let us not have any misconception. Let us not have any impression created that anyone is seeking to cover up, or that anyone is seeking to prevent the truth coming out. Whether it would affect a Republican or Democrat is immaterial. It is the policy of the committee—it would have been my policy, of course, and it will be the policy of the committee from now on, and it will be the policy of the Senate—to let the matter proceed in an orderly fashion. But under the circumstances I felt it incumbent upon me to ask the indulgence of the Senate for an indefinite absence, and I felt that, contemplating such absence, in justice to the committee I should submit my resignation, and that is why it was submitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the statements which have been made, I am not called on to do more than make a very brief statement.

I think it is regrettable that anyone, in the newspapers or on the floor of the Senate, should have drawn any invidious implications from the fact that the investigation in New Jersey was postponed under the circumstances which have been detailed here.

In the first place, none of the members of the investigating committee sought membership on it. They had to be persuaded, I imagine—I know those on our side did—to accept assignments on the committee. It is not a pleasant duty. I once served as a member of an investigating committee of this kind, and it is not a job which anyone would seek. It is one which no one who is not interested in the public welfare and in the freedom of elections should accept.

When this committee was appointed earlier in the session, I think everyone recognized that it was an honorable committee of public-spirited Members of this body, and that no political party and no political candidate could hope to obtain from that committee as a whole any partisan advantage, unless the revelation of the truth with respect to campaign expenditures and practices would automatically give such a candidate an advantage.

When I was a member of a similar committee some years ago, we tried to keep it in a nonpartisan attitude by requiring that if the committee went outside Washington, either as a whole or by subcommittee, it should be bipartisan. I recall that the committee went to New York and held rather an exhaustive investigation in connection with the campaign then in progress. The whole committee went. That has not always been the practice, but it has been the practice, I think, that when a subcommittee goes into a State to investigate complaints of that sort it should be composed of a member of each political party. I think the Senator from New Hampshire was right in his original position that he alone ought not to undertake the investigation in New Jersey, due to the circumstances surrounding the charges and complaints.

I was aware of the fact, because I try to keep in touch with what goes on, that one subcommittee had been appointed for New Jersey and that another subcommittee had been appointed for Delaware. I have been acquainted all along with the unfortunate circumstances which have prevented the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] from serving regularly on the committee and maintaining his usual prompt attendance in the Senate. We all sympathize with the Senator from Arkansas. When day before yesterday he suggested to me that he could not serve, that he could not go to New Jersey, and, I believe, at the same time suggested that somebody ought to be appointed in his place who could go because he thought it ought to be a nonpartisan or bipartisan investigation, I took it upon myself to urge him to serve, if possible, but, realizing the circumstances, I told him that whatever his judgment would be in the matter would be mine.

Yesterday, as he has already detailed, he wrote out his resignation. The Presiding Officer of the Senate asked me for a suggestion as to his successor, and I suggested the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], who I understood was returning to Washington this week, and therefore he was appointed. I am advised by the Senator from Oklahoma that he cannot serve, and therefore the place is still vacant. I do not know who will be appointed to fill it, because, as I said at the outset, it is not a job anyone seeks, it is a job it is necessary to persuade someone to take, and I have not, and the Presiding Officer has not, yet been able to persuade anybody to take it. We hope to be able to fill the position in a day or two, and I am satisfied that the investigation scheduled for New Jersey will be conducted. That is all there is to it. Certainly there is nothing in that situation to create a furor about trying to smother an investigation in New Jersey.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. There is certainly something to create a furor about when on three different occasions extreme pressure was applied on members of the committee to force it to discontinue the hearings in New Jersey.

Mr. BARKLEY. I never heard that.

Mr. TOBEY. There are some things I cannot talk about, but if I could talk about them I could open my lips and call names and places. I would satisfy the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not know that the Senator from New Hampshire suffered from any such handicap.

Mr. TOBEY. I am under some handicap here. I am not privileged to give names and places, but I can give the Senator my assurance that the pressure was applied; and I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only pressure I know anything about——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Will both Senators please suspend for a moment? Two Senators cannot be heard at the same time. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only pressure I know anything about is the pressure of the unfortunate circumstances that require the Senator from Arkansas to tender his resignation; and when he tendered it I expressed my deep regret, and he expressed his own.

If the Senator now wants to ask me a question, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I shall be very personal. Has the Senator now speaking ever approached the Senator from Iowa in company with another Senator and conveyed to him the impression that it would be desirable that no hearings be held in New Jersey?

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not; and anyone who intimates any such thing is guilty of an inexcusable falsehood.

I ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], if he is here, whether I ever approached him, either alone or with anybody else, to suggest that there be no investigation in New Jersey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa does not appear to be in the Chamber.

Mr. BARKLEY. He does not appear to be on the floor.

At this point Mr. GILLETTE entered the Senate Chamber.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from New Hampshire asked me personally whether I ever approached the Senator from Iowa with another Senator and asked him or suggested to him that there ought not to be any investigation in New Jersey. I say that I never approached the Senator from Iowa, either with another Senator or by myself, and suggested that there ought not to be any investigation in New Jersey or anywhere else, and I ask the Senator from Iowa if I am telling the truth?

Mr. GILLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. TOBEY. Will the Senator from Iowa——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment. In the interest of orderly procedure, let the Chair ask, Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is all I have to say. I hope that very shortly we may be able to fill the vacancy created by the unfortunate and forced resignation of the Senator from Arkansas, for whose ability, integrity, and patriotism we all have the highest regard, and for whose personal circumstances requiring his resignation we entertain the profoundest sympathy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I only want to add to what has been said with respect to the matter of a special committee to investigate campaign expenditures, that there is not a Senator on it who wanted to be on it, and who would not like to be relieved if he could be. There is not a man on it who is not doing his duty as best he can. But I do want urgently to request our colleagues in the Senate, for God's sake keep your hands off this committee, and let us alone, and stop trying to exercise pressure as to what we should do and what we should not do. I serve notice, Mr. President, that the next time it is done there will be names told, which we now do not feel at liberty to tell, and they may go pretty high.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas a question, and this is a matter about which I know nothing whatever. As I understand the tenor of the Senator's remarks, some Senators have been trying to exert improper influence on the committee, but he declines to reveal who they are and what the pressure was. The committee has very broad powers. I have read the resolution creating it; I have it in my hand. The committee has the power of reporting to the Senate any contemptuous procedure, and there is no more contemptuous procedure to a court or to a committee than surreptitious approach, with all the implements of pressure being put on Senators to get them to deviate from their duty. If that has occurred, it seems to me the committee ought to report back to the Senate who the contemptuous influences are and let the Senate call them to the bar of the Senate and proceed to try them or commit them to the district attorney for prosecution. It seems to me it is a very grave charge to be made in an insinuating, uncertain, and devious method by saying, "There is a lot of crookedness going on, and I know all about it. It is wrapped up in my bosom, and I will not divulge it." Under the common law the man who helps to conceal a crime is an accomplice or accessory.

I hope the Senator from Kansas, for whom we all have great affection and esteem, will not continue to bring himself within the scope of condemnation by giving aid and comfort to the machinations of the evil-minded and impure motives of Senators who are trying to squelch the truth and overpower, harass, annoy, and intimidate the committee, because the committee is a committee of the Senate, and when it is improperly approached the Senate is improperly approached. When it is assailed by measures of pressure, undue influence, and overawing power, the Senate is being assailed.

I commend these thoughts to the Senator. I hope that after he sleeps over them and consults with himself in his own closet, he will see fit to divulge the improper influences.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas has concluded his speech, I will say that out of his long experience and very great ability he is probably an expert upon some of these things. What has transpired in the committee heretofore is considered as having transpired in executive session; and the Senator from Kansas will not go any further than that.

Mr. CONNALLY. The resolution says that the investigation must be public.

Mr. REED. I have not yielded to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he was willing to exchange views.

Mr. REED. Up to this time these matters have been considered in executive session. I am serving notice that executive sessions have closed so far as the Senator from Kansas is concerned.

I now yield the floor to any Senator the Chair desires to recognize.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is in the Chamber, suggested to me the exemption of the Tennessee Valley Authority from the provisions of the bill. That suggestion has my approval. I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 9, after the word "in", to add the words "the Tennessee Valley Authority or in the Works Progress Administration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have had printed, and which I expected to offer as soon as I could obtain an opportunity, contains in reality two amendments, both having the same object in view.

Mr. MEAD. I withdraw my amendment if the Senator will now offer his amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is ready, I shall offer the amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York withdraws his amendment, and the Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the words "this section shall not apply to", it is proposed to insert "offices or positions in the Tennessee Valley Authority or to."

And on page 10, immediately before section 4, line 8, it is proposed to insert the following subdivision of section 3 (d):

(xii) Offices or positions in the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, inasmuch as this amendment will have to go to conference, I think it ought to be explained if the Senate wishes to adopt it. I should like to be heard on the amendment for a reasonable length of time.

The effect of the amendment is to exclude officials and employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority from the operation of the bill. That is all there is to it. Two changes are necessary to bring that about; so, unless it is desired to separate them, I should like to have them considered together as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Chair will put the question on them as one amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think I owe it to myself, and perhaps to my colleagues, to explain why I offer the amendment. I do not believe it will be denied by anybody who has been acquainted with my efforts to serve the public in the House and in the Senate that during all that period I have tried in my way to advance civil service in public office. In past years I have introduced many bills and supported everything which I thought would carry out that idea. I offer this amendment because it would exclude an important activity which, in my judgment, has a better civil-service law and better rules under the law than has the United States Government. I appeared before the committee, and I think I convinced all the members of the committee that that is true.

If the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] wishes to proceed, I should like to be heard on the amendment itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there is no opposition to the Senator's amendment. I was hoping that we might conclude consideration of the bill today, so that we may consider bills on the calendar tomorrow.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that the amendment will have to go to conference, and that there will be discussion among the conferees. If no reason is given for the amendment, the House conferees may feel justified in objecting to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I am surprised that the House itself did not exempt the T. V. A. Probably it was an oversight. If the House had thought of it, it probably would have exempted the T. V. A.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say a few words in regard to the amendment.

I offer the amendment because I believe that to the best of my ability, at least, I am as good a friend of the civil service as there is in Congress. In my opinion, one reason why the Federal Government civil-service law and rules have not been as successful as I think they ought to be is because at the head of every department in the Government sits a man who has been appointed because of political reasons. In my opinion, the right kind of civil-service and merit system ought to commence at the top and go to the bottom.

Some time ago I introduced a bill to carry out that idea in the Post Office Department, commencing with the Postmaster General. Of course, I got nowhere with it, for reasons which the Senate probably will understand without my explaining them.

The Tennessee Valley Authority Act provides for three members of the board of directors, who shall have complete control of all the activities of the T. V. A. On page 2 of the original act, in subsection (h), this language is found:

All members of the board shall be persons who profess a belief in the feasibility and wisdom of this act.

Among other provisions in the act is the following:

SEC. 6. In the appointment of officials and the selection of employees for said corporation, and in the promotion of any such employees or officials, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of said board who is found by the President of the United States to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any appointee of said board who is found by the board to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by said board.

Those provisions are in the original act of the T. V. A. It was a new experiment and was very severely criticized by honest men both in Congress and out of it. Some said the policy was foolish, but it has been tried since the beginning of the act. The Board has had a great deal of trouble because of its enforcement of this law; but experience has shown, in my judgment, that the T. V. A. is as free from politics as is the Holy Bible itself. I talked with a man who is now out of the employ of the T. V. A., but who for a long time was its general manager. He has since resigned and is employed in another position in the Federal Government. He told me that if it had not been for that provision of the act he would have been unable to withstand the political pressure that came upon him daily until it became thoroughly known by everybody that the T. V. A. was one place where no one could be appointed or promoted or demoted on account of political influence.

The T. V. A. officials have been censured by some Members of Congress because, it was said, they leaned backward in the enforcement of the law. Even while this bill has been under consideration Senators have heard the statements of some Members of this body telling how they have not been able to obtain any appointments. I think the T. V. A. has a civil-service standing in the United States far above the standing of the Civil Service Commission; and that is natural, because there is no provision of law that the head of any department of the Government shall profess a belief in a provision which says that nobody shall be appointed or promoted or demoted except alone for merit and efficiency. This is the only place in the Government service to which such a provision applies; and therefore we have one instrumentality here which from top to bottom has a civil service. It has operated beyond my original expectations.

This provision has brought about a condition in which, when officials of various departments of the Federal Government have been looking for somebody to take up a question, say, in the electrical field, somebody who was unbiased and uninfluenced by either those who favored or those who were opposed to some particular proposition, officials of the Federal Government itself have gone to the T. V. A. and asked them to lend the Federal Government this man or that man in some particular place. Sometimes they have asked men to resign from the T. V. A. in order to appoint them to positions in the Federal Government. I have had personal knowledge of that. I have talked with men who have left the T. V. A. on that account. Some of them have refused to leave, even though the position offered had a higher salary than they were paid.

Mr. President, there are other reasons, I think, why this amendment should be adopted, especially now, that will apply until the various scientific things that the T. V. A. is doing in building dams, transmission lines, electric systems, and so forth, are completed. Then the activities of the T. V. A. will be very much diminished, and I would not object then if this amendment no longer applied. While I think it would handicap the T. V. A. to some extent, it would not be a serious objection.

I have gone over the subject with the officials of the T. V. A. They favor the amendment, although, so far as I know, they have not made any effort to influence Congress in regard to it; but I knew how they felt. I knew how the employees felt. I knew, in a general way, what their relationship was to organized labor. The T. V. A. is one place in the Federal Government where, up to this hour, they have never had a strike or a difficulty with labor which was not amicably, agreeably settled. I talked with Mr. William Green on the subject. When he heard about this amendment that I was going to offer he called me on the telephone and said:

> I want you to convey to the Senate the view I am expressing for organized labor, that this amendment ought to be adopted. Although bitter criticism has been offered in various ways, we are perfectly satisfied that the amendment should be adopted. We hope it will go into the law. The T. V. A. has a better civil service than the Federal Government has.

I could go on and give many illustrations; but unless there is some question about the amendment, because of the lateness of the hour and the desire of the Senate to adjourn, I will close now.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that it has been really surprising to find how completely the T. V. A. has been able to keep all politics out of its personnel and out of its personal appointments, and has been able to develop this unusually fine system for the appointment and administration of its personnel?

Mr. NORRIS. It is wonderful. It is surprising to me. We knew when we passed the law that nothing like it had ever been done before, so far as I know. Many persons thought it would not work. Some honestly thought it could not work, and that politics could not be kept out of the T. V. A.; but the answer is, they have done it.

Mr. HILL. They have done it, and they have done it 100 percent.

Mr. NORRIS. They have done it 100 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is agreed to.

The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, the purpose of which is to fix April 15, 1941, as the date when the act will become effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as the final section of the bill, to be appropriately numbered, the following section:

> The provisions of this act shall become effective April 15, 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have several amendments that I have been waiting all day to offer, while accepting amendments from others. I should like to take these amendments to conference. They were presented to our committee and thoroughly discussed before our committee. They are not in the bill. If they are objectionable, of course I am perfectly willing to forget all about them. I should like to have the first one read, so that I may briefly explain it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not object to the amendments, but I do not know whether or not we are to have a yea-and-nay vote on this bill. Therefore, I desire to say that I favor the bill, and shall vote for it. I have been busy with appropriations, and have not had time to take much part in the debate, and do not want my position to be misunderstood.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MEAD. I do.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator said the amendments he proposes to offer had been considered by the committee. He does not mean to suggest, does he, that they are presented as committee amendments?

Mr. MEAD. Not at all. These are my own individual amendments. I merely mean that they were amendments which were presented when we were in session as a committee. I want them read, and I will explain them very briefly, but I do not wish to engage in any debate, and I will take an adverse vote if it is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 21, after the words "civil service", it is proposed to insert the following: "or for not less than 6 months immediately prior to the date such incumbent was furloughed from such office or position: Provided, That when an incumbent has been reassigned to duty after furlough said 6 months' meritorious service may include such service immediately preceding said furlough." On page 3, line 2, it is proposed to add the following sentence: "As used in this section, the term 'incumbent' includes a person on furlough from active duty."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, that means that if an employee, who in all cases is required to have 6 months' seniority before he can be recommended for examination has a year or 2 or 3 years of seniority, but unfortunately within 6 months has a transfer or furlough, if he is working at the time the agency was covered under the civil service, he can use 6 months of his service prior to the time he was furloughed. In other words, he conforms with the rules and regulations; he must have 6 months of active service; he must be in active service, but if his service is broken, he can have 6 months figured on that service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act, all persons who, at the time of passage of this act, are employed in temporary positions in the Bureau of the Census and who have been appointed from civil-service registers, shall acquire classified civil-service status upon recommendation by the Secretary of Commerce after completion of a satisfactory probational period by such persons, and certification by the Secretary of Commerce to the Civil Service Commission that such persons have served with merit for not less than 6 months: Provided, That the period of employment in the Bureau of the Census immediately prior to passage of this act may be credited toward the probational period.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, there are employed in the Census Bureau employees who have worked there for 1 or 2 years; some of them over 2 years. Every one of them tried a civil-service examination. Every one of them was taken from a civil-service register. The only thing the amendment would do for them would be that, if and when they are laid off, it would put them on the reemployment register, on which the names of civil-service employees who are furloughed are placed, instead of on the replacement register, on which employees who never tried a civil-service examination are now placed. It gives the Commission permission to place them on the reemployment register instead of the replacement register.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, how many employees would be affected by the amendment?

Mr. MEAD. I really do not know how many temporary employees who have a civil-service status would be covered by it, but it would have nothing whatever to do with their salaries; it would cost the Government nothing. It would merely give these employees, who were taken from civil-service registers, an opportunity to go on the reemployment register instead of the replacement register. I imagine it would cover perhaps 1,500 employees; I am not sure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the amendment would allow census employees whose employment is necessarily temporary, although they are under the civil service, to be employed in other civil-service positions in the Government by reason of their civil-service status?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. They go on a list from which is taken personnel for other civil-service positions.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difference between the reemployment list and the replacement list is that the reemployment list is made up of those who have a civil-service status, whereas the replacement list is made up of those who do not have a civil-service status?

Mr. MEAD. It is as to P. W. A. and W. P. A., but these are all civil-service employees. They have all taken an examination; they were all appointed from a list, and all we do for them with this amendment is to put them, when they are laid off, on the reemployment list rather than on the replacement list.

Mr. ADAMS. Why should they have different treatment from that accorded temporary employees in other departments?

Mr. MEAD. Because these employees tried the civil-service examination, passed it, and were appointed from civil-service lists, and the others were not.

Mr. ADAMS. Is that not true in other departments?

Mr. MEAD. No; in the other departments, when they are not selected from the civil-service register—in the newer departments they do not have to select them from the civil-service register—when they are furloughed they go on a replacement register and are eligible for work only in non-civil-service positions.

Mr. ADAMS. And these employees are located in the city of Washington largely?

Mr. MEAD. Oh, no; they are from all over the United States. They are taken from civil-service registers which were open to everyone in the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. They were doing the headquarters work in the different census divisions?

Mr. MEAD. No; they were doing work here in the census, in Washington and in Baltimore.

Mr. ADAMS. That is what I was inquiring, as to where they are located.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is correct, but they come from all over the Union.

Mr. ADAMS. Their place of unemployment is in the District of Columbia, and in the Baltimore office by reason of lack of space here?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct; but as the Census Bureau, which is an old bureau and covered by civil service, requested added personnel, they had to go to the Civil Service Commission for a list of eligibles, and the employees were taken off the list. All we do by the amendment is to give them an opportunity to go on the reemployment register instead of the replacement register.

Mr. ADAMS. It would give them a better status than is given employees in the Senator's office, for instance.

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. If misfortune should befall a Senator or a Representative, those in the census would have preference over those who had been in the office of the Senator or the Representative?

Mr. MEAD. No; we take care of our clerks, too.

Mr. ADAMS. But not in the same way. We give them only a civil-service status. They have to go through the examination and meet all the requirements, while the census people do not. They are given a preference.

Mr. MEAD. No; the census employees try a wide-open civil-service examination, in competition with everyone.

Mr. ADAMS. I say, the Senator would give them a preference over employees in his office?

Mr. MEAD. No; they had to try a wide-open examination. Our office employees do not.

Mr. ELLENDER. Before these employees were employed they were on a civil-service register?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; and they tried a wide-open competitive examination.

Mr. ELLENDER. What will be their position on the register when they go back?

Mr. MEAD. They go back to the foot of the register. They get no special consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following new section:

SEC. 8. Hereafter the compensation of the Civil Service Commissioners shall be fixed at $10,000 each per annum, and the compensation of the Executive Director and Chief Examiner shall be fixed at $9,500 per annum.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this might sound like a large sum of money, but we pay all Government commissioners and all of the assistant secretaries and deputy attorneys general from $10,000 to $12,000 per annum. Unfortunately, under the Classification Act—and the Civil Service Commission comes under that act—the top salaries the Commissioners may receive is $9,000 a year. But we have doubled their work, we have given them the Retirement Act to administer, and the Classification Act to administer, and now we are giving them a very large added burden.

This amendment would allow us to take to conference a provision which would enable us to set their salary at $10,000, which is the minimum salary provided for deputies in the various departments, the minimum salary provided for all of the commissions, except the Federal Compensation Commission. The maximum salary in the particular grade is $12,000 a year.

I am proposing the amendment so that we may be able to discuss the possibility in conference of giving to the Civil Service Commissioners $10,000 a year. They are getting $9,000 now. We have added greatly to their work, and I really believe they are entitled to a thousand dollars in the way of addition to their compensation in each instance.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. These amendments have not been printed, have they?

Mr. MEAD. Oh, yes; they have been available for several days.

Mr. WHITE. Then I am derelict. I had not seen the amendments. I had never heard them discussed. I do not know what is involved in them except as I get a scanty understanding of them from the Senator's explanation.

I, myself, do not like at this late of hour of the day, with this small attendance of the Senate, to have a number of amendments offered and have us asked to take them on faith, with the understanding that they will go to conference; and no one knows what will happen to them in conference.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator will be on the conference.

Mr. WHITE. If this is the last one, I will subside.

Mr. MEAD. It is.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, as there apparently will be no roll call on the passage of the bill, I announce for the RECORD that I am for the bill; and if the roll were called, I should vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, from what I have observed occurring, I believe there is not to be a quorum call or a yea-and-nay vote. Is that the understanding?

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope there will not be a quorum call or a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have been requested by some Senators who are absent to make an announcement of their position on this bill. Therefore I announce that the following Senators, if present, would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill: The Senators from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY and Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and I myself would vote "yea."

The folowing Senators would vote "nay" if present: The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, since it is apparent that there will not be a yea-and-nay vote on the bill, I should like the RECORD to show that if there were a yea-and-nay vote I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, inasmuch as we are not going to have a yea-and-nay vote, I should like to have the RECORD show that I would vote "yea" on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to announce that I am for the bill also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We might as well have a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; we might as well have a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. MEAD. There are too many Senators absent for that.

Mr. BARBOUR. Inasmuch as a number of Senators' positions have been announced, I wish to announce also that I favor the bill, and if a yea-and-nay vote were had I should vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if there were a yea-and-nay vote, I also would vote "yea."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the fact that certain Senators have announced that they are going to vote for the bill an implication that everyone who does not rise and make his vote known must be counted in opposition to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In answer to the parliamentary inquiry made by the Senator from Colorado, the Chair will say that there is no such implication, but the Chair is of the opinion that the majority of Senators present have already indicated that they would vote "yea."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I simply rise to question the assertion the Chair has just made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not an assertion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Only a comparatively few Members now present have asserted their position on the bill. I should like to have the RECORD show that I am present, that a yea-and-nay vote has not been called for, and that if a vote were had, I should vote in the affirmative. As I look about me, I find there are a number of Senators present, far more than those who have asked to have their positions recorded, who doubtless would respond in the affirmative also if they felt that they wanted to prolong the session.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator note the presence of the junior Senator from Maine, and is he interested to know that the Senator from Maine is in favor of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Knowing the Senator from Maine as I do, I am satisfied that that would be his position.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that all Senators should be presumed to be in favor of the bill unless they announce to the contrary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 960) was passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Chair ought to announce that there was no vote in opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are no votes in opposition.

Mr. GURNEY. I wish to be recorded as voting "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota announces that he voted "nay."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MEAD, Mr. BULOW, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], is absent in Alabama on important public business. If he were present, he would have voted in favor of the civil-service bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2524) to incorporate The Military Order of the Purple Heart, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED-TO BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets tomorrow it proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to state also in that connection that, under the assumption that we shall finish the call of the calendar tomorrow, it will be my purpose then to move a recess until Monday, so that we will not have a Saturday session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edward Millard Bryan, of Idaho, to be United States marshal for the district of Idaho, vice George A. Meffan, deceased.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Bernard J. Flynn, of Maryland, to be United States attorney for the district of Maryland; and August Klecka, of Maryland, to be United States marshal for the district of Maryland.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Bower Broaddus, of Oklahoma, to be district judge for the eastern, northern, and western districts of Oklahoma, vice Alfred P. Murrah (elevated to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit); and Royce H. Savage, of Oklahoma, to be district judge for the northern district of Oklahoma, vice Franklin E. Kennamer, retired.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc, except that of Anna M. Brewster to be postmaster at East Islip, N. Y.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, with the exception of the nomination mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee, which will be passed over, the remaining nominations of postmasters on the calendar are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RETURN OF THREE CONVENTIONS TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the following request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in regard to a number of conventions on the Executive Calendar be read from the desk and that the request made by the Senator from Nevada be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations at its meeting on September 24, 1940, authorized and directed its chairman to recommend that the Senate return three conventions to the Secretary of State, without the advice and consent of the Senate to their ratification, in view of the political changes effected through military operations in Europe since these conventions were signed. Two of these conventions, Executive A, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, and Executive I, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, were previously approved by the Committee on Foreign Relations and are now on the Executive Calendar of the Senate. The other convention, Executive H, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, has not been considered by the committee. These conventions are as follows:

Executive A, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a convention between the United States of America and France, signed at Paris on July 25, 1939, for the avoidance of double taxation and the establishment of rules of reciprocal administrative assistance in the case of income and other taxes, and a protocol signed on the same day which is made an integral part thereof.

Executive H, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a convention between the United States of America and Norway, signed at Washington on March 28, 1940, providing for the disposition of a claim of the Government of Norway against the Government of the United States on behalf of Christoffer Hannevig, a Norwegian subject, and a claim of the Government of the United States against the Government of Norway on behalf of the late George R. Jones, an American citizen.

Executive I, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a convention between the United States of America and Lithuania defining the duties, rights, privileges, exemptions, and immunities of consular officers of each country in the territory of the other country, which was signed at Washington, May 10, 1940.

I ask unanimous consent that these conventions be returned to the Secretary of State as above set forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether any of these conventions are on the Executive Calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the first one is on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentarian advises the Chair that two of the conventions are on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. The other is not?

Mr. BARKLEY. The other is not. The committee yesterday unanimously authorized the proposed action because of the situation which makes the treaties inappropriate now.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request made by the Senator from Nevada is agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, September 27, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Father in heaven, give us today the joy of happy hearts moving in the right direction. Create in us the splendor that dawns when we are brotherly, kind, and benevolent and know not station, race, nor creed. Deepen our spirits to receive Thy grace and make us eager to hear the voice in which duty compels and our country commands us. Inspire us to understand more of our own selves with their possible enrichments of aspirations, heroisms, and dreams. Building a very definite altar in our breasts, may we be rich in godliness lest we be the stricken children of time, whirled hither and thither by the merciless winds of fate and chance. Gracious Lord, we praise Thee for Thy wisdom and patience, for Thy power and love; yea, more than these for Him who is the bread, the water, and the light of life. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 10295. An act to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944); and

H. R. 10405. An act to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters-at-arms and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9722. An act to provide for the regulation of the business of fire, marine, and casualty insurance, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TOBEY members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of Commerce.
3. Department of Labor.
4. Department of State.
5. Department of the Treasury.
6. Department of War.
7. Federal Trade Commission.
8. Work Projects Administration.

ELECTION OF MAJORITY LEADER, HON. JOHN W. M'CORMACK

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Democratic caucus, I officially announce to the House the election as majority leader of the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts. [Applause, the Members rising.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks concerning the accomplishments and achievements of the Honorable James A. Farley, and to insert therein several magazine articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a speech delivered by the late Champ Clark, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] was so kind as to courteously salute me as I went to the pressroom. May I say for the benefit of the House that this esteemed gentleman is rather coy and retiring and I think the House should have the benefit of recognized genius, such as the gentleman recognizes in himself. I want to say that the gentleman has written a book. It shows how easily one can wrong a colleague. I thought probably he had help in writing the book, but I read the book and am now convinced that he did not have any help.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a portion of a report made to the mayor of the city of New York on industrial mobilization in connection with New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we want to be careful that we do not get into war. I read from an editorial:

> Another sharp statement registering Secretary of State Hull's disapproval of Japan makes United States-Japanese relations a little worse than before. This time Mr. Hull, who, of course, is the Roosevelt administration's official mouthpiece in affairs like this, objects to Japan's grab at French Indochina.
> What moral objection there can be to the grab escapes us. France grabbed Indochina in 1863, after 30 years of off-and-on warfare between the natives and French missionaries backed by French soldiers. France is now three-fifths occupied by the Germans, and the Government of the other two-fifths of France has consented to the Japanese Indochina grab.
> Yet Mr. Hull complains that the Far East's "status quo is being upset. * * * Under duress." What business is that of ours? What duty have we to preserve the status quo in the Far East?

Mr. Speaker, if we do not watch out we will be at war with somebody that we do not want to be at war with in Asia or in Europe. Anyone wanting a fight can get it if he does not keep his nose out of the other fellow's business. I say to America and American citizens, if you do not watch out your President and elected officials will get us into actual war. Nothing worse can happen to America at this time. Write the President to keep his fingers and nose out of other people's business, especially in Asia and Europe.

THIRD SUPPLEMENTAL NATIONAL-DEFENSE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2982), which was read a first and second time, and with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvanuia [Mr. GROSS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, we have labored long and hard here and we are all entitled to a day off. While we cannot afford to recess and go home, we can take a day off and drive over here about 100 miles into York County, Pa., next week to the county fair.

There you will see fine farms, fine farm products, the best livestock in America and the finest fruit that grows. It is a great country and it is going to be a great fair. That county fair is better and bigger than most of the State fairs and on next Thursday there will be 130,000 or 150,000 people there. I want to invite the entire membership of the House over there next week and we will show you just what we Pennsylvania Dutch people do when we make up our minds. At the head of that association is our Lieutenant Governor, Samuel

S. Lewis, who is widely known throughout the country. Under his leadership that fair has been developed. He is, by the way, a Republican. It was on this fair ground where 30 years ago President Theodore Roosevelt said, "I am proud of your fair, of your big barns, and happy to know that every fall you have them full." No one thought at that time that 30 years later another Roosevelt would come along with a communistic Secretary of Agriculture like Wallace and tell us that we dare not fill these barns. But we fill them regardless.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on August 24 the gentleman from Georgia placed in the RECORD a list of naval construction. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a statement of construction by the Army that appears on page 66 of the hearings on the supplemental defense bill, with reference to Army construction, similar to the one that was placed in the RECORD with reference to the naval construction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with the remarks I expect to make on the appropriation bill to be considered today I may include certain excerpts from a statement by General Herr, Chief of Cavalry, made to the appropriations subcommittee for the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, following the legislative program of the day and after any other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

OUR NATIONAL DEFENSE ADVISERS

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely appreciate the advertising that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Alabama, gave my new book, The Challenge of 1940, published by G. P. Putnam Sons, of New York. You can buy it at the leading newsstands. Again, I thank the gentleman for so kindly mentioning my book in his 1-minute speech.

Let me speak now about our national defense advisers.

Everywhere throughout the country men and women who pride themselves on their willingness to see both sides of the question express their admiration of the personnel of our National Defense Advisory Commission. The quiet manner in which it has gone to work, the many evidences of its willingness to devote itself conscientiously to the problems before it, the untold hours of labor which members of the Commission are voluntarily expending, all these things have given the Commission a great opportunity to win public favor and to perform an historically important job.

Yet despite the efforts of Knudsen, Stettinius, and Hillman, the basic problem has gone unsolved. The President of the United States has seen fit to retain within himself the complete control of the Commission. Repeated requests that a chairman be appointed, voiced by citizens no less public spirited than the President himself, have fallen upon deaf ears. Yet every man and woman who belongs to any organization knows that every organization must have a directing force to push its work. Without a chairman, without a coordinator, men work at cross purposes. They turn in performances of notable value, individually, and yet they may snarl the entire procedure.

Our Advisory Commission stands in grave danger of precisely this trouble. There is no reason whatever why a chairman should not be appointed who would in turn be directly accountable to the President for the activities of the group.

It is simply one additional illustration of the desire of the President to retain within his own hands the complete direction of every one of the multiple activities which he seeks to control.

One-man government is not a remote consideration when the defense of the Nation is so handled. There is serious danger that this one-man government is already here. We cannot risk this kind of danger. [Applause.]

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I submit a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 616

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and continued under House Resolution 26, Seventy-sixth Congress, and House Resolution 321, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate un-American propaganda in the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $35,000 in addition to sums heretofore made available, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, and the amount herein appropriated is to cover all expenditures of said committee of every nature in the final completion of its investigation and filing its report not later than January 3, 1941.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia if not otherwise officially engaged.

SEC. 3. The head of each executive department is hereby requested to detail to said special committee such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as said committee may from time to time deem necessary.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced in the absence of the chairman by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], a member of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. This committee will be in existence for the remainder of this Congress. Its funds now available will soon be exhausted. The amount provided in this resolution will enable the committee to carry on the same as they have carried on for the last 4 or 5 months, and then have a small surplus over that amount. The Congress created the committee, and this is the fourth appropriation we have made.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. How much have we appropriated for this committee?

Mr. COCHRAN. The original appropriation was $25,000, in the Seventy-fifth Congress. There was later a $100,000 appropriation, and then there was a $75,000 appropriation, $200,000 in all. This amount will bring it to $235,000, and is the largest amount that has ever been given to an investigating committee of this House in the 14 years I have been a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. RICH. I believe that even though we spend $200,000, if the result has been to bring to light un-American activities and people have been forced to discontinue such activities, it is the cheapest money we have ever spent.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think everyone will agree with that statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman will yield me some time.

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee has unanimously agreed on the resolution, and the Chair has asked me to expedite the matter, as there is an important appropriation to be considered. I am willing to answer any question the gentleman wants to ask.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I may have a number of questions to ask, and I do not want to burden the gentleman with all these questions.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Chair recognized me in the belief that the matter could be expedited. I shall have to move the previous question at the earliest possible moment. If the gentleman wants to ask a question, I am willing to answer it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What evidence has the committee presented of how it has disposed of the other moneys, and why does the committee need this $35,000 for the remaining 3 months of this Congress?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is all a matter of record. The vouchers have been filed, duly signed by the chairman. The committee is functioning and will have little left of the present appropriation after the first of the month.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What evidence has been before the Committee on Accounts to justify making available another $35,000?

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that the Accounts Committee is an agent of the House. The Accounts Committee did not create this special committee. When the House creates a committee it is the duty of the Accounts Committee to provide money for its operation. A proper showing was made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], and based on that showing, your committee unanimously voted the additional amount, $35,000.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KRAMER. When this resolution came before the committee some 2 weeks ago, at the request of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], he asked for $25,000. At that meeting, after hearing the comments, I moved to increase the amount to $50,000. My reason for such a move was that the gentleman from Texas had been in Los Angeles and San Francisco and had made statements to the press that unless he received an additional appropriation of $100,000 he could not carry on the work he had carved out to do. Subsequent to that time, I understand, he said that he could get along with $35,000. I understand from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] that that is all the money the committee will need to carry on the work which has been set out by the committee to do, so that if there is any further work to be done in California or anywhere else it will be taken care of out of this appropriation. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama if that is correct?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Insofar as we can foresee, that is correct. Thirty-five thousand dollars is probably the amount we can expeditiously and judiciously spend between now and the 1st of January.

Mr. KRAMER. In other words, I want the committee and the House to know that it is through no fault of this committee or mine that he is being hindered from carrying on the investigation.

Mr. RABAUT. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say to the gentleman that I am surprised at his statement, because 2 years ago, when the chairman of the committee, Mr. DIES, came in and got additional money, he came up to Detroit shortly after that and all he did was to smear the Democratic candidate, Frank Murphy, who was seeking reelection as Governor.

Mr. KRAMER. I do not know what he did in Michigan, but he said he had to have this money to complete the investigation, and I do not want to be recognized as one who wants to stop the work now.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, if this resolution does not pass, the work of the Dies committee will have to cease. Is not that correct?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is correct. The life of the committee runs until January 1 and this amount will enable them to continue their activities.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSING FOR SELECTIVE SERVICE TRAINEES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 14, the President transmitted to Congress estimates for providing housing for selective-service trainees.

Under the terms of the Selective Training and Service Act no person may be inducted for training and service until shelter, water, heating and lighting, hospitalization, and so forth, shall have been adequately and appropriately provided. The urgency of the provision of such facilities, therefore, is plainly manifest.

Our late Speaker died early on the morning of September 15. Business on September 16, 17, and 18 was suspended on account of his funeral.

At 10 o'clock on Thursday morning, September 19, the House Committee on Appropriations met to consider the President's estimates, submitted on Saturday, September 14.

General Marshall at that meeting was asked if the urgency of the housing matter warranted separate action and he told the committee that every day counted. He said the expediting of the availability of funds for shelter was of tremendous importance to the War Department.

Accordingly the committee drafted and presented to the House when it met on Thursday a resolution appropriating the money for the housing and accessory construction and facilities. The resolution was passed promptly, and on the following day, September 20, the resolution was passed by the Senate without change and sent to the White House for the President's approval. The resolution was written in the language and in the amount of his estimate, so, therefore, there was no excuse for delay in approval.

My information is that the resolution received the President's approval Tuesday the 24th. The resolution passed Friday and was immediately sent to the President and the resolution was not approved until Tuesday, although General Marshall stated that every day counted.

I want the responsibility for the delay to be placed where it properly belongs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert a resolution of the Polish Veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

FILING OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON TAX BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight Saturday night to file a conference report on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Hon. Donald Comer, consultant to Hon. Chester C. Davis, member of the National Defense Advisory Board, delivered before the Agricultural Committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce in session at Washington, on September 26, 1940, on the subject of Decentralization of Defense Industries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHWERT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THE POLICY OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the House of the extremely untenable position of the State Department regarding the Far East. Their position passeth all understanding. We have had neutrality legislation on our books. It was never enforced when clearly Japan was at war with China, and this administration has steadily shipped arms, munitions, and commodities of war to Japan with which to hurt China, and, today, the administration decides it will help China. It is an extremely vacillating and untenable and a very dangerous policy that is being pursued by the Department of State. It is just as much an undeclared war as it was a number of years ago.

THIRD SUPPLEMENTAL NATIONAL DEFENSE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue not to exceed 2 hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10572, the third supplemental national defense appropriation bill, 1941, with Mr. GAVAGAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes. The estimates considered in connection with the bill under consideration amount to $1,325,452,074, apart from contractual authority of $158,500,000, and a reappropriation of $17,790,292.

As submitted by the committee, the bill carries appropriations, reappropriations, and contractual authority in those amounts with the exception of $13,958,438 subtracted at the instance of the Bureau of the Budget because of funds improperly included in the estimates for pay of Army, Marine Corps, and National Guard enlisted personnel.

Of the total amount proposed, the Army's portion is $1,250,792,636, and 85 percent of that amount is before us by reason of the act recently passed providing for calling the National the Officers' Reserve Corps into active military service, and of the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940, passed just a Guard, retired officers of the Regular Army, and officers of short time back.

In consequence of such legislation, it is the plan of the War Department to bring into the service during the remainder of the current fiscal year a total of 1,024,441 men, such number being in addition to the force of 375,000 Regulars heretofore appropriated for.

The division of such augmentation between National Guard men and selective trainees will depend upon, first, the result of the effort being made to recruit the National Guard to peace strength—328,451; second, the result of the effort being made to recruit to full strength the appropriated-for force of Regulars—375,000; and third, the extent to which volunteers may be inducted into the service after the selection procedure shall have become operative.

Under the terms of the bill the number of selective trainees cannot exceed 800,000.

The officers for the expanded force will come very largely from the Officers' Reserve Corps. The estimates contemplate that from time to time during the remainder of the current fiscal year a total of 42,262 officers of such component will be called to active duty.

The whole amount in the accompanying bill by reason of personnel expansion is $1,062,976,496. The major expense items will be found enumerated on page 4 of the committee's report.

In addition to the personnel expansion provided for under the laws I have mentioned, we include under the Army head $36,444,640 for increasing from 7,000 to 12,000 the Army's pilot-training program, that sum applying to pay, travel, organizational, individual, and instructional equipment, tuition at flying schools, acceleration of technical training, and motor vehicles.

Another large item under the Army subdivision of the bill pertains to the expedition of aviation production. We include $150,000,000 of appropriation and $150,000,000 of contractual authority for expediting airplane production. Sixty million dollars of the appropriation and $60,000,000 of the contractual authority is carried under the Air Corps head. Such portion is for accelerating deliveries, including raw materials, and for the added cost incident to overtime and increased shifts. The $180,000,000 of appropriation and contractual authority separately carried under the head of "Expediting production" is to meet the cost of additional production facilities, to be expended upon the recommendation of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, with the approval of the President. The entire amount has been urged upon the committee as being essential to the rapid production of planes heretofore appropriated for and, it follows, of potential programs of the same or greater magnitude.

The remaining principal proposal touching the Army has to do with the operation and maintenance of the selective-service system; that is, with administering the Selective Service and Training Act. For that purpose we recommend the Budget estimate of $24,825,108. You will find the details on pages 5 and 6 of our report.

The appropriations for the comparable World War activity aggregated $54,896,903. Total expenditures, taking into account items of expense separately financed, ran well in excess of that sum; for example, the pay of a very considerable number of soldiers who were used in assignments it is now contemplated to fill with civilians; travel of draftees, which it is now contemplated to charge to the selective-training system, and certain expenses for printing. Furthermore, it is the understanding of the committee that the States bore a considerable portion of the expense under the former draft law, which it is now contemplated will be borne by the Government.

The records of the former experience were carefully studied in shaping the estimates and an examination of the supporting data presented to the committee, wherein comparisons are drawn, would seem to justify an appropriation in the amount requested and recommended.

Under the Navy title of the bill you will find a considerably smaller supplemental appropriation. The total, including $8,500,000 of contractual authority, is $69,201,000. That amount principally falls under three heads. Under Ordnance, $9,000,000 is provided for additional facilities for the manufacture of antiaircraft guns, and $27,000,000 is provided for keeping aviation ordnance in step with the Navy's airplane procurement program.

Under the Bureau of Aeronautics we provide an additional amount of $15,000,000 for expansion of the aircraft-manufacturing industry. There has been appropriated previously under the Navy for this purpose $45,000,000. This program is under the direction of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, which has just completed a resurvey of production facilities, and has found further expansion essential to an early productive capacity of 36,000 airplanes per year. The additional amount represents the Navy's share. There is included in the War Department title of the bill, as I previously have stated, $180,000,000, one-half being by way of contractual authority, for like employment.

Lastly, under Public Works, we include $6,500,000 to enable the Navy to build a large graving drydock in the New York area, sufficiently large to accommodate any naval vessel built, building, or at this time projected, and also toward the acquisition of a supply depot at Bayonne, N. J., represented to be badly needed because of congestion of present facilities in that area. Contractual authority on account of these two projects is $8,500,000.

So much for the bill. I should like now to give you a summation of the things that are being accomplished with the defense funds we have made available for the present fiscal year.

Assuming the instant bill becomes law carrying the appropriations and contractual authority recommended by the committee, the Congress will have made available to the Army and Navy for the fiscal year 1941 a total of $8,334,700,507 by way of immediate appropriation, and $3,802,132,009 by way of contractual authority. The grand total would be $12,136,832,516.

That sum excludes commitments sanctioned for constructing approximately 349 naval ships, excluding a number of small patrol craft, the total estimated cost of which, exclusive of the added expense attendant upon emergency construction, has been represented to be $4,734,051,880. Less than $148,000,000 of that amount has been appropriated directly for initiating this program.

The principal purposes to be served by all of this money that Congress has voted are as follows:

PERSONNEL

Raise enlisted strength of Regular Army from 227,000 to 375,000. Those numbers include the Philippine Scouts.

Raise strength of National Guard (officers and men) from 210,000 to 346,130, and employ on active military service.

Induction and training of a minimum of 695,990 selective trainees.

Increase Army Reserve officers on extended active duty from 3,555 to 55,592.

Raise enlisted strength of the Navy from 145,000 to 170,000, including 10,000 naval reservists to volunteer for active duty.

Increase Naval Reserve officers on extended active duty from 853 to 3,269, plus 5,000 Reserve midshipmen.

Increase Naval Reserve men on extended active duty from 436 to 628, plus 5,351 additional reservists in training as student pilots.

Raise enlisted strength of Marine Corps from 25,000 to 34,000.

Increase Marine Corps Reserve officers on extended active duty from 214 to 252.

House, clothe, subsist, pay, and train these expanded forces, including augmented training for forces in existence prior to expansion.

Increase pilot training and develop enlisted airplane mechanics.

MATÉRIEL

Provide for completely equipping with essential items (items normally produced commercially) the protective mobilization plan force (1,400,000 men) and to maintain that force on a combat status.

Provide all reserve stocks of the critical items of supplies (semiautomatic rifles, antitank guns, tanks, light and heavy artillery, ammunition, gas masks, etc.) needed to equip a ground force of 2,000,000 men.

Provide the Army with a force of 25,000 and the Navy with a force of 10,000 serviceable airplanes.

Begin the construction of 292 combatant naval vessels and 57 auxiliary ships.

Recondition decommissioned naval vessels and acquire and convert auxiliary ships.

Provide additional production facilities, including new plants and extension of existing plants for accelerating immediate programs and to supply potential continued and augmented demands.

Establish and develop new Army and Navy air bases and stations.

Provide for many and varied collateral expenses in connection with all of the foregoing, not heretofore mentioned, including aviation facilities and storage.

The President, in his selective-service proclamation of September 16, 1940, stated that—

> We must and will marshal our great potential strength to fend off war from our shores. We must and will prevent our land from becoming a victim of aggression.

That statement well summarizes the object of the vast outlays going into the purposes just enumerated. So far as the committee is advised, the measure now under consideration, in conjunction with those which have gone before, goes as far in the marshaling process as is considered feasible and practicable at this time by our military and naval leadership.

Mr. Chairman, as far as we know, the passage of this bill will complete the appropriations at this session of Congress and will complete providing funds for the defense program up to date. If this bill becomes law substantially in its present form, as I have previously stated, we will have appropriated for the defense program $12,136,832,516. These funds are appropriated for the purpose of providing total hemispheric defense. If we get value for our money and if we get hemispheric defense, the Government will have secured a great bargain.

We might as well face realities. Further large appropriations are going to be required if we continue the policy of providing for an army of 1,400,000, a two-ocean navy, and all of the other complements that go with that sort of a defense program, together with the bases for aviation and for the Navy. I believe that certainly an overwhelming majority of the Members of the House feel that a total defense program which will give America an impregnable military defense is necessary. [Applause.] I believe the American people concur in that thought. I feel that the legislative branch of the Government has cooperated with the President in making available the necessary legislation and the necessary funds to carry out that sort of program.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] just a few moments ago undertook, I am afraid, in commenting upon the fact that there had been no director of national defense appointed, to draw some political implications from the defense activities, which is most unfortunate. That is a strange insistence to be coming from the minority side of the House, which has so frequently inveighed against dictatorship and expressed itself as being favorable to democratic processes. If the President should tomorrow name Bill Jones or Sam Smith or anybody else administrator of defense and give him sweeping authority over this defense program, I can imagine that the gentleman from Ohio, among others in this body, would make the welkin ring in reminding us of the fact that their dread threats of dictatorship were coming to pass.

There is not one scintilla of evidence or one possible ground to make a statement that the Advisory Commission on Defense is under the control of anybody. Mr. Knudsen has never made any such statement. Mr. Stettinius has never made any such statement. On the contrary, repeatedly before the Appropriations Committee of the House they have said in response to direct questions by myself that they had been given absolutely a free hand in the operations and in the tasks given to them to undertake to mobilize industry and to prepare for the Army and Navy the materials they needed in this program.

I believe the Congress and the administration have provided in a conscientious and in a sincere way for the defense of America. Aside from little sporadic outbursts here and there of some overzealous partisan who would undertake to drag politics into it, and those instances are rather rare, the effort has been a nonpartisan effort. I do not recall of a single instance where any gentleman on the Republican side, either in the committee or in the House, has undertaken to cut any of these defense estimates or even to increase them. I am not speaking of the other ordinary expenses of government, but of the defense estimates.

I want to say for the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and other minority members upon the appropriations deficiency committee, which has handled most of these defense items, that they have cooperated in a splendid, patriotic manner. We have endeavored to inquire as minutely as possible into the justification for these items, and we have given to the Congress and to the country the best estimates that could be given of a gigantic program of this kind in advance.

Now, this should be said: Providing for this defense program is entirely different from the ordinary routine process of providing for the regularly established operating Government departments. Our subcommittees can take the Post Office Department or the Interior Department or any other department and, because of the experience we have had year after year in providing for their wants, we can examine their estimates, and we can form a pretty clear idea of whether they are excessive, whether they are unduly expanded, whether they are wise expenditures. Not so with this defense program. Here we are dealing almost with an unknown quantity. To me it has been most satisfactory and rather amazing that the Army and the Navy have been able to come before our committee with as much minute detail and with as many definite and specific estimates as they have been able to present. I am confident that when we have had experience in this defense program we will find many points where perhaps we have been too liberal. There undoubtedly will be other points where insufficient funds have been provided. But we have brought here the very best estimates as the result of the very best consideration that could be given these matters in advance of their operation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am sure the gentleman will be glad to know that the House Military Affairs Committee, conscious of its responsibility, has today heard General Marshall for more than an hour and a half on the question of personnel set-up of the Army under this program, and I am quite sure that every member of that committee, including the minority members, were extremely satisfied with the explanation that he made of how the thing is being done. Tomorrow we will hear from Admiral Stark on the subject of the procurement features of it. What we are trying to do is to be sure that the thing is being done right. And I want to say now that General Marshall convinced that committee this morning that he is a great general to be in charge of the whole thing and is doing a good job.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am very glad to have that statement from the gentleman from Kentucky. I agree with the gentleman that General Marshall, as Chief of Staff, and Admiral Stark, as Chief of Naval Operations, are two splendidly qualified men to handle the program. I do not know where you could find in the service two more splendidly qualified men to handle these important duties. [Applause.]

That brings me to this point.

In providing for this defense program Congress has done its part, but its duties have not ceased. A tremendous duty is going to continue upon the legislative branch by what is going to follow these expenditures and follow these programs. The responsibility rests upon the two subcommittees of the House Appropriations Committee, those for the War Department and the Navy Department, when they come to consider their annual bills, to take these tremendous sums that have been provided and see to it that we get the things we have bargained for.

Let me say this by way of general observation on the subject of defense: Any defense program for America that rests itself entirely upon military preparedness and contents itself in feeling that we have preserved democracy by providing an army and a navy, will awaken one day sadly to realize that we have overlooked perhaps the front-line trenches, and that is the economic feature involved. [Applause.]

I am not worried today about the military defense of the Western Hemisphere. Almighty God in His providence has given us time to provide that and we shall have time to provide that, but I am looking forward a little bit today—and I challenge the membership of this House to look a little bit ahead—to the day when the war clouds begin to roll muttering away, when the nations of the earth bled white and tired, and weary of fighting—when most of the young men have all been buried beneath the sod and only old men and old women, very largely, have been left all over the Continent of Europe, when fields are no longer ripe with harvest but crusted with the dried blood of men whose lives have been sacrificed to the god of war, the day when men lay down their guns by the millions and millions and turn wearily back to the sad tortuous process of taking up and undertaking to rehabilitate the economic life of the world. What sort of world are we going to be living in? Where is America going to be in that day? Perhaps we shall come to think then again as we did after the World War that we should demobilize some of our defense forces. Undoubtedly, having made as many fighting planes as we shall need, having provided as many tanks as we shall need, having stored underground in safe vaults as much ammunition as we shall need, undoubtedly we shall begin to demobilize our industrial plants. Where shall we be then? Where will our economy in America be then? For the next few years we are going to have a period of great industrial activity, almost of boom-time proportions. There will be work to be done; in fact, there is so much work to be done today that we do not have the trained men to do it but have to speed up programs to train men to do this necessary work.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

But when this period of demobilization comes, when Europe demobilizes and America slumps off, I pose to you my friends from districts largely populated by laboring men—I pose to you my friends who pride yourselves upon your interest in agriculture: What jobs are you going to provide for these millions of men who will lay down their guns, for these millions of men who are turned out of the munitions factories and airplanes factories? They having been turned out, and out of employment, what provision are you going to make, my agricultural friends, for someone to purchase the products of the farm?

Oh, my fellow Members of the House of Representatives, the staggering problem that comes today to the people of America is where are we going to be and what is going to be the economy of America in that sad day, that tragic day? And as I read the debates in the public press and in the public forum I am not heartened very much. I find largely they are taken up with commonplace things, wisecracks, trite statements, cheap bids for political support; but the serious problem that thunders to America today and to the Western Hemisphere, the great problem that lies upon your doorstep, is: How are you going to maintain the American way of life and the American standard of living when this day comes? I do not know the answer; I do not pretend to know it. If any other man in public life knows it, he has been careful to keep it a secret, because we do not find it being discussed today. But I have digressed too much.

We are interested today in putting the finishing touches on military preparedness. We have done that. The legislative branch of the Government has provided what the Commander in Chief has said he needed; that recommendation echoed and supplemented by the advice of experts and concurred in by the advice of industrial leaders. No one can do more than that. With that program I am satisfied. With the economic outlook I am terrified. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill calls for $1,313,493,633 of direct appropriations and $158,500,000 of contract authorizations. Previous bills together with this one provide $5,702,000,000 of direct appropriations and $2,979,000,000 of contract authorizations for the Army and for the Navy $2,611,811,068 of direct appropriations and $822,995,612 of contract authorizations, making a total of $8,333,000,000 of direct appropriations and $3,800,000,000 in contract authorizations. I shall put that in the RECORD in the form of a table.

Total appropriations for 1941 defense, including this bill

	Direct appropriations	Authorizations
War Department	$5,720,679,731	$2,979,136,397
Navy	2,631,811,068	822,995,612
Total	8,352,490,799	3,802,132,009
Grand total		12,155,622,808

It calls for the appropriation of everything that the War Department and the Navy Department have asked us for through the Budget that they had any reason to expect. The items that have been deducted from all of these bills have been items that after the hearings the War Department or the Navy Department admitted they could get along without.

These bills call for paying the money to bring into service the men who will be drawn under the Draft Act which was passed and became a law a week ago last Saturday. This is the occasion for the putting into effect of the Draft Act. In other words, the Draft Act is not effective until these appropriations are passed insofar as the calling out of troops is concerned. The number provided for I shall put in the RECORD.

The total National Guard and draft men called out will run something like 55,000 to 60,000 per month beginning the middle of September and running through the middle of November, a total for that purpose of approximately 165,000 or 170,000, through the middle of November. The total in December will be small, something like 44,000. I will put those figures in the RECORD. After January the number will run something like two-hundred-and-thirteen-thousand-odd. In other words, the Army is not figuring on having the National Guard or those who are drafted called out until after sufficient, satisfactory housing and hospitalization facilities are provided for all those who might be called out.

This table represents the monthly addition to troops:

	Cantonments	Tents	Total
Sept. 15, 1940	30,443	26,996	57,439
Oct. 15, 1940	5,808	52,275	58,083
Nov. 15, 1940	6,283	50,831	57,114
Dec. 15, 1940	37,086	7,596	44,682
After Jan. 1, 1941	196,109	17,053	213,162

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman explain to us what the relationship is between the $303,000,000 in this bill for housing construction and so on and what I thought was an appropriation that we passed in a single bill a few days ago for the same purpose?

Mr. TABER. There is no item in here for housing. That was all included in the bill previously passed. If the gentleman will look at page 12 of the report he will see the breakdown. The item for construction at military posts is $29,000,000, and I have not that in my head at the moment. I will put what that is for in the RECORD. That item goes toward cost of temporary housing of troops. For barracks and quarters there are $33,000,000 and the $1,729,000 relates to items of construction other than those that are required for the draftees and the National Guard as well as for items of a less urgent variety than those temporary set-ups. There was $338,000,000 included in one way or the other in the bill that was passed last Thursday, if I remember correctly.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right. Is the $303,000,000 on page 2 of the report a summation of the various items that the gentleman mentioned a moment ago?

Mr. TABER. That is a summation of what the Budget estimate was. The Budget estimate was separated into two bills, the one brought in last Thursday and this one.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I see. I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell us how fast the enlistment is going on? I understand that the men are enlisting very fast and that the draft may not be necessary for some time.

Mr. TABER. I would not want to say anything about that. I understand, although I do not know, that there are many more enlistments going into the National Guard companies to fill up their peacetime quota which they are being asked to get as far as they can before they start. They are going beyond that if they can without too much solicitation. I understand the biggest part of the enlistments would come in those increments to the National Guard companies in the different localities and that the regular enlistments have been going along at such a rate that they will add about 15,000 net per month to the number in the Army. Of course, I have not the figures right up to date, but that is the general drift.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There were 40,000 in the month of August.

Mr. TABER. But not net. That was gross. The average over June, July, and August was about 15,000 net deducting the expirations.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understood it was something like 32,000.

Mr. TABER. It ran 15,000 net. That is a pretty good increase and is very satisfactory under any ordinary circumstances.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman has stated he is going to put the figures in the RECORD.

Mr. TABER. Of the increments.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Yes. The gentleman referred to an appropriation of $8,000,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Eight billion plus of direct appropriations.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. And three billion of contract authorizations.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. To what period does that refer?

Mr. TABER. That is the total of appropriations and contract authorizations running through the period and includes funds that are made available either for direct expenditure or for contract authorizations during the fiscal year 1941.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman in preparing the tables show, if it is possible, how much of this was contemplated or taken care of up to, let us say, the Presidential message of May 16, and then, if possible, how much was taken care of up to June 4, when the President said that we could go home? It would be most interesting and instructive if the gentleman would break down the figures to show what was proposed, and what we did up to the Presidential message, and then what was proposed, and what we did after the time the President said Congress was through for the year.

Mr. TABER. I believe I can give the gentleman that information very readily. Since we were told that we could go home on June 4 the Congress has had submitted to it and passed four major items and one minor item. There was $1,300,000,000 in the first item that went through just before the 1st of July, $5,300,000,000 in the one which went through rather currently, $65,000,000 for the T. V. A., which went through the fore part of July, and $338,000,000 which went through a week ago today. This item has a gross of approximately $1,469,000,000. This includes the contract authorizations, and it makes a grand total of a little better than $12,000,000,000 for funds available for 1941, including the Regular Army and Navy bills which were in contemplation on June 4.

Of the $12,000,000,000 for 1941 over $8,400,000,000 has been submitted by the President and considered by the Congress entirely since June 4.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am trying to reconcile the gentleman's figures with the figures of the Secretary of the Treasury on August 9. He put the figure of the total of appropriations and contract authorizations at $14,402,000,000, I believe.

Mr. TABER. He probably included a lot of things that were appropriated for the fiscal year 1940, and probably was referring to a memorandum of what has been made available by this Congress, rather than for the fiscal year 1941. There probably was a mix-up there.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. He does not include in his estimate the appropriation before the House now.

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understood the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York correctly, this $12,133,000,000 of direct appropriations and contract authorizations does not include the regular military and naval running appropriations.

Mr. TABER. No; I believe it does include that. It is my understanding that it is included in the $12,000,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the chairman of the committee if the $12,133,000,000, in round figures, includes the regular annual running appropriations for the military and naval forces?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; it does not. That is the defense program. That is the added expansion on account of the so-called defense program.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask what is the rough figure we have provided?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, I believe I will have to revise my statement. Refreshing my recollection by looking at the report on page 8, I see that we state:

> Assuming the instant bill becomes law carrying the appropriations and contractual authority recommended by the committee, the Congress will have made available to the Army and Navy for the fiscal year 1941 a total of $8,334,700,507 by way of immediate appropriation, and $3,802,132,009 by way of contractual authority.

So, I believe it does carry the regular amount.

Mr. TABER. It does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I wanted to clear up for my own information and for the information of a lot of other people who are interested in it is this: We hear so much talk about this session of Congress having appropriated from $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 for national-defense purposes. In other words, that $15,000,000,000 figure is just about $3,000,000,000 too much. Is that correct?

Mr. TABER. That includes the appropriations that were made available in 1940 and which were spent then. There was a very considerable item of that. I cannot give the figure offhand, but it runs over a billion dollars and might be over $2,000,000,000. I would have to check up on that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. For the present fiscal year, the appropriations beginning last July 1 and ending June 30, 1941, we have provided direct appropriations and contract authorizations for the purchase of new plants, for the feeding of the conscripted Army we are to take in, and for the usual running expenses of the Army and Navy, in round figures $12,133,000,000.

Mr. TABER. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That clears up the proposition.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That includes the contractual authorization, and in the amendments that were adopted to the Regular Establishment bill some of those appropriations were carried for approximately 2 years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. TABER. Out of the $12,000,000,000 I would say that at least $6,000,000,000 of that particular money cannot be paid out of the Treasury this fiscal year, whether it is appropriated or not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that.

Mr. TABER. That is contracted for. It will be paid out the following year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That brings me to the next question I want to ask. What can the gentleman give us, as briefly as he wishes to make it, in the way of a rough figure that will be the running expenses, the recurring expenses of maintaining a million-man standing Army per annum? In other words, from next January to June we face a situation of appropriating money to take care of running needs of the increased Army. What would they run per annum, roughly?

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman mean a million men in the Army?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; we have here, for instance, $1,325,000,000, we will say, in this particular bill.

We had before us the other day $338,000,000, which was to provide for housing and hospital facilities. Let us assume that is a fixed purchase for plant, but I understand this bill is to cover primarily running expenses.

Mr. TABER. This bill would be primarily running expenses. There is probably a couple of hundred million dollars of nonrecurring items.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then should we assume that heretofore we have covered the usual running expenses of the Army, which included the upkeep, and now we bring in, roughly, $1,325,000,000, which will be an additional recurring expense next year on the basis of a 1,000,000-man army, and which is an increase?

Mr. TABER. My own judgment is that the running expenses in peacetime of an army of 1,000,000 men would run not very far from $2,000,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that is to be something new which we have not heretofore carried in our Budget.

Mr. TABER. No; if we have had an army of 240,000 or something like that, three-fourths of that would be nearer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask the gentleman another question. I was very much impressed with what the gentleman from Virginia had to say, and in my feeble way I have been trying to make the very approach that he pointed out, and in order to do that I have gone back and carefully reviewed in detail the economic history of Germany, for instance, since 1919, moving up through all the different steps they have taken with reference to inflation and revaluation and aski marks and exchange control, where they have tried to fit themselves into the problem which the gentleman from Virginia was pointing out to us. It carries on through all the unemployment procedure on housing, public works, and agricultural relief that they followed and the way they have tried to build up and control exports and imports. We are all now facing the same situation. We have, in my opinion, practically adopted many of the so-called social reforms which the national socialism of Germany previously adopted. We did not until this year, as I visualize the situation, go into the rearmament program which Germany adopted in 1933.

Mr. TABER. Neither did we go to the 14-hour day.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; in this step of rearmament we are virtually and in a fairly practical manner taking on the German national socialistic program with reference to defense and other social reforms and all that goes with that.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman call the 14-hour day and the 50-cents-a-day pay roll social reform?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman means in Germany?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That may also be ahead of us. In Germany they fix the hourly wage, they fix the prices on everything, and as I see the situation we will necessarily, by reason of our previous steps taken, move into the same zone when the time comes that you begin to break down this rearmament program and go back to a disarmament program, and I would like to ask the gentleman whether in the hearings which he had the privilege of attending in connection with the appropriations, if we go into those hearings in detail, will we find quite a bit of information along this line that will give us further light.

Mr. TABER. I do not think the gentleman will find anything in our hearings that will give him any picture of what our situation might be after we return to a peacetime basis. Everything that we have had has been directed toward finding out what are the needs of the country for immediate national defense, and that has been the limit of what we have been able to cover.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEAVY. I notice in the hearings the gentleman did cause to be placed in the record certain facts and figures with reference to cost plus fixed fee, which figures appear on pages 66 and 67.

Mr. TABER. I have asked unanimous consent in the House that I may place that table in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that it may be available to Members just as the Vinson table was made available.

Mr. LEAVY. I think that information is invaluable and in the bill, at page 6, there is a proviso that the Secretary of War shall submit monthly, within 10 days following the last day of each month, commencing on or before November 10, 1940, to the respective chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives a report of, first, all cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts concluded within the period embraced by each report, and so forth.

What I desire to ask the gentleman first is whether that report will be similar to the report that we find here in the hearings.

Mr. TABER. I would anticipate so, and while it is directed to be submitted to the chairman of the committee, I understand that it would not only be available to the membership of the committee, but also to the membership of the House, if they asked to see it.

Mr. LEAVY. That is exactly the information I wanted to get.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, apropos of what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] said today about his book, which I think I will buy [laughter and applause], I would like to say that you can get another book for a very small price over in the Government document room. I do not think it will cost you over 10 cents; maybe less than that. It contains a report of all the work done by the House conference on unemployment. It contains a record of the thoughts and studies of a number of Members of this body on the central economic problem of this age. I would like to commend that little book to you. It was printed as a House document. We did not have very many copies of it printed, but we may get more if there is sufficient interest shown.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. In regard to this book and the committee's work in compiling it, I want to say that I was very happy to be a member of that committee. My trouble has been that I have been unable to get sufficient copies of the book at the document room. I wish there were some way that we might get more copies in order to send them out to our constituents. I think it contains a tremendous amount of valuable information; as the gentleman from California, chairman of the committee, who has worked so hard on it, has said, it is the result of an exhaustive study by those of us who have been here so long.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right. Of course, I would be glad to get some more copies, but I think it will require cooperation on the part of a number of Members to bring that about.

I listened with the utmost interest and with a very profound sense of obligation to what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said to the House this afternoon. I do not know that the gentleman from Virginia would agree with all of the views I entertain about what we need to do to face the problem that he posed for us, and in what I have to say in these few minutes I do not want to be understood as attempting to commit him to agreement with me. But I do want to say that I think he made perhaps the most significant speech that has been made in the House since this defense program was undertaken. I tried to make one yesterday afternoon when the House was in no mood to listen, in which I made some of the same points that the gentleman from Virginia made today.

For example, he said the responsibility of Congress is not discharged when it has passed appropriation bills for defense. He said Congress has done its job of providing the money necessary and the necessary legislative framework for the total defense of the Western Hemisphere, but that it is not through with the work it has to do. I agree with him completely.

Mr. Chairman, we are in a grave hour today. It is my humble judgment that the American people would be delighted at any political figure in this whole country, whether he be a candidate for high office or a humble Member of the House of Representatives, who actually and literally did turn politics aside for this period. I do not think it is a time when we can talk politics. I think it is a time when we have to go a lot deeper than that.

In my speech yesterday afternoon I said two things that I would like to read. First I said:

> I think it is of basic importance that Congress does not get the idea that its job is done when it has appropriated money and passed bills for military defense.

Again I said this about the problem that the gentleman from Virginia presented to us, the problem that this Nation and every other Nation in the world is going to face when this period of so-called emergency is passed and when the people try to get back to what they will call "normal conditions," I expect. I said this:

> We can do it. There is no question about that. The question is whether we want to badly enough. The question is whether we shall be content to see some portion of the unemployed go back to work because of our large armament expenditures and then fold our hands and await the economic whirlwind that is bound to come once those expenditures cease or are reduced. Or whether we will go to work earnestly and with determination to get at the root of the reason why our people cannot buy all they are so readily able to produce for sale.

Was there ever a time in the history of the United States when it was so evidently possible to get the cooperative interest of practically every group of people in this Nation for the great problems that this country faces, as there is now? I do not believe there ever was. I think that the division between us in our political and economic thinking today is a division along the following lines: It is a division between those people who are going to be content to say that "Now we are going to have a boom. We are going to have better business. We are going to have somewhat of a reduction in unemployment. Things are going to be better, so why worry," on the one hand, and people on the other hand who are going to insist that we proceed now to a consideration of the continuing problem that we know is present and which has to be met in every nation in the world and which in some cases has only been met by sacrifices on the part of those peoples of their fundamental liberties and the establishment of a dictatorship.

Now is the time, as the gentleman from Virginia has so well stated, for us to consider these things and how we propose to face them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us take this one point, for instance: Here we put, say, 600,000 additional men under arms. What is to be done with reference to their social-security status in connection with the contributions they have made? Shall we freeze that into the proposition? You could raise any one of 50 questions that way.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is correct, and I should like to say to the gentleman that I understand an effort is being made to find the answer to and meet some of those matters in connection with the conference on the excess-profits tax bill. But I do not think that is the way to deal with them. I think we ought to stay here and consider it a week under a special bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Certainly we should go very carefully into all questions that affect the lives of the men we draw to serve their Nation in a military capacity.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As was very pointedly said in connection with the tax bill, we fiddle around wasting time failing to pass the tax bill, the very lack of which is holding up the whole defense program. I think it is disgraceful action on the part of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I want to see the interests of every man who goes into military training taken care of, but I think it would be done much better in a separate bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would like to go ahead for a couple of minutes, if I may. I should like to illustrate briefly the point of the thing I am talking about.

On the matter of unemployment, one of these days I would like to have some time when I could summarize briefly the final report of our House conference on unemployment, but I am not going to speak about that now. I want to illustrate something from the standpoint of national defense. The people in all history who have been perhaps more devoted to their Nation than any other group of people in all society are the individual owners of a piece of the soil, the farmers who own their own farms. Unfortunately there have grown up in this country in the last 50 years forces tending to drive that man off his land and deprive him of the ownership thereof. I am not going into detail about what needs to be done to reverse that trend, but I am saying to you today that it is a problem the solution of which we certainly ought to undertake.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Insofar as you can reverse the tendency that now makes tenants out of owners or makes laborers out of owners and tenants and turn those forces back to the point where these men can become landowners again, you have done something for national defense of incalculable importance. National defense means the hearts and minds of the people. It means their devotion spontaneously to the thing that is their life. That is the illustration.

Now I want to say apropos of what the gentleman from Virginia said about the responsibility of Congress not having ended when you have appropriated money. I think—and I said on the floor the other day—that the House of Representatives ought at this time to set up a special committee to do one job today, and that job is to carry on a continuing review of the effectiveness of the expenditures of money for national-defense purposes. I propose this not because of lack of confidence in the National Defense Council, the President, or the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or anybody else, but because I think now is the time for the House of Representatives to recognize the fact that it must act with unusual speed in the passage of these measures; that we all know they have been passed carrying billions of dollars without opportunity for full consideration of what was going to happen to the money. The gentleman from Virginia himself pointed out the difference between these appropriations and appropriations for ordinary expenditures. Under these circumstances if a committee were given that responsibility it could, with the defense program proceeding full speed ahead, at the same time discharge as time went on a responsibility which it seems to me is a basic responsibility of the House of Representatives. I had opportunity this morning to speak before the Rules Committee about a resolution which I have introduced on this very purpose.

I conclude merely by saying, Mr. Chairman, that our job is not completed when we have appropriated the money and the means for national defense; it is only completed when we protect the economy and the people of America against this future impact that the gentleman from Virginia pointed out, and when we show the American people that we know what national defense really means.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Along the line of the gentleman's statement let me say to him that the Committee on Naval Affairs is following up each one of these authorizations that has been made to carry out the national-defense program. We are constantly checking up with the manufacturers and with the Navy Department to see that the intent of Congress is complied with as speedily as possible.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have no doubt of that. My appeal is for a committee whose only job would be to do this one thing. It would not be busy with any other things as the gentleman's committee or the Appropriations Committee is bound to be.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, all of the items in this bill and all the items in future appropriation bills of this session, and there will be one more at least, providing money for the carrying out of the Conscription Act should be defeated and the act itself should be repealed before we adjourn. I base that statement on a change in international affairs. Within the past 2 weeks we agreed to the conference report on the conscription bill. The last argument was that England might fall any minute, then it would be too late for us, even if we adopted the Fish amendment postponing the whole thing 60 days. It would be too late. That is what we heard. Now it is pretty generally accepted that England is not going to fall soon any way. They cannot invade England. That has changed the situation in the last 2 weeks.

The war has been transferred to Africa and to Asia. We are beginning to see new duties as an ally of England. Where will that take us? Mr. Chairman, we ought to repeal the Conscription Act, then adopt the George Washington policy that we followed for so long, and until right now. We should take care of ourselves first of all.

It is wonderfully illuminating, is it not, that we find London has not been hurt very badly after all, that they lied to us, that in the press the worst pictures were shown, that they never quit riding horses in the parks or playing golf over there. It is stated now that they feared more the shells from their own antiaircraft guns than they did the German bombs. We did not get it that way at first. Now England is not going to fall. If that be so, we do not need this conscription bill. Then again the volunteers are coming along fine. Voluntary enlistments are holding up great. We do not need conscription.

Mr. Chairman, the ranking Republican member of the Military Affairs Committee made a rather interesting statement in the last minute or two before the vote on the conscription bill 2 weeks ago next Saturday. The argument arose as to who the author was, whether it was the distinguished gentleman in front of me from New York or a gentleman over in the Senate. The question came up as to who the author of the conscription bill was. He finally admitted it was the Army; that they had been trying for 8 years to get us to adopt this system, and that the Army had finally won out. We are not able to cross a "t" or dot an "i" in these deficiency bills except on Army authority. The Army is ruling this land right now, and we ought to wake up. We ought to repeal conscription because there are so many bad things that go with it; it is awfully expensive, and we are going to hear a lot of bad things about it before next spring. We do not need it. There is no great national emergency now. My stand has constantly been that this hysteria about national defense is "hooey," and I am ready to stake my political future on that proposition.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Briefly.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Does the gentleman think if there is an emergency it is one that has come to us because we have not kept our collective noses out of matters that have no concern to the people of this country?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Absolutely, and one of the pathetic things of this campaign, and I say this with temerity, is that there is no collision between the leading candidates. One emphasizes the international policy and the other emphasizes the failure of domestic policies. It does not seem that we are going to have collision in this campaign on any proposition. We have no one representing George Washington and the things he stood for in his Farewell Address in this great campaign and in this so-called national emergency.

This hysteria was started by the President of the United States in his speech to the House and Senate on the 15th of May, in which he depicted just exactly how many hours it would take Germany to bomb Denver and Kansas City. And they cannot even hurt London across a little creek after 3 months. That created a hysteria, it started all the hysteria, and the whole propaganda has been built upon that. Oh, there are a lot of reasons. Economic principles have failed. The war was going to give us prosperity. That was the last effort to raise us out of this depression. But we are not thinking about the aftermath like we should. What about it? Where are the smart men who lead our Nation and who know what happened after the last World War? The farmers have felt it for 20 years. As a matter of fact, they are not over it yet. There is no effort to help the farmers in this war. On the contrary, we are going to cater to South America and buy a lot of their food products.

Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to two or three other things. You may differ with me on the aforesaid, but there are a couple of things I want to mention, on which I am sure you will not disagree.

First, I want to ask, when is this national emergency going to end? Who is going to determine that? The armistice determined it in the other World War. That was specific, but who is going to determine the end of this national emergency? If Franklin Roosevelt is reelected for a third term, do you think he is going to terminate this national emergency while President? Not on your life. [Applause.] Who is going to determine, then, the end of the national emergency? That is the point.

We have also heard about our strained national credit. We were just about broke. We heard that for 7 or 8 years. Now, I am one of the meanest in the House so far as economy is concerned. I do not think there is anyone here more opposed to unnecessary expenditures. I have voted against more appropriations, perhaps, than most anybody else. We come along here and appropriate ten or fifteen billion dollars, and we will be talking about appropriating another $10,000,000,000 next winter, yet no one mentions the national credit, if it is for war, war material, and warmongers. If it is for war and warmongers, the national credit is not even thought of; it is not hinted at.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Does not the gentleman recall that it is only about 6 weeks ago, after the Republicans of the House had voted to stay here and were criticized by His Eminence in the White House for it, that we were asked for all these appropriations? None of these emergency appropriations were asked for prior to that time. Was there not an emergency then as much of an emergency as there is today?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. There should have been in the minds of those who are so much smarter than most of us. They should have seen it then.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the gentleman in the White House had in mind any such program of preparedness as he has presented to the country on a 15-minute schedule?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I think he has taken us a long distance past what public sentiment really wants, and he is taking us into this war by the back door. As sure as the sun rises, if he is reelected we will be sending men to England, Africa, or wherever he thinks we can best help the Queen of England to carry out the great purposes of the British Empire, involving us around the world. There will not be any question about it. As the gentleman from California said, there is not any politics in this and there should not be, but I say that the minute this election is over, if the President is crowned king for the third time, we will have a different national policy that will be as bold as Hitler's, and that he will take his election as a vindication that he can do anything he wants to with our Army. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, when I went to high school the teacher used to read from English authors or American literature a short sketch and then ask the pupils to name the author. I have listened to a speech, and if I had not been present and known who made it, if it had been submitted to me on the street, I would have said it was made by either Earl Browder or Fritz Kuhn. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the question of whether or not we are in an emergency I believe is water over the dam as far as congressional action is concerned. We have passed legislation under which men are being ordered to camp. It is our responsibility now to provide the funds for their pay, subsistence, housing, hospitalization, equipment, and general welfare.

I have considerable sympathy for those who argue that the so-called emergency has been created. Certainly little has been done by this country to avert one. How much encouragement has been given by representatives of this country to foreign nations to get into this war, the public does not know and may not know for years. I wish we did know.

Personally I have resisted many of the so-called steps short of war, because I have believed they were steps toward war. Certainly they have been steps in that direction; they have not been steps away from war and steps short of war have taken us in that direction faster and further than people generally have realized. So, I accept no responsibility for the emergency, but however we got here—here we are, and I join those who believe that it is better to have insurance and protection and not need it than to need it and not have it.

I am not going to go back home and boast of the fact that I have been here and voted for practically all of these appropriation bills to provide matériel and equipment. I am not going to be particularly proud of that fact because I do not regard it as taking any intelligence or superpatriotism to sit here and say, "Yes, yes, yes," as these requests come along, and vote for them. The thing I wish I could boast about when I go back home is that this Congress had taken more constructive steps toward preventing the emergency which has arisen than the steps we are taking helter-skelter to try to meet it.

The discussion that has come on this bill ought to make clear to the country, although it possibly will not be clear to the country unless we emphasize it, that this Congress does have within its power the authority to control the operation of the Selective Service Act. This bill is for the purpose, primarily, of providing the funds for the operation of that act. The act provides that it shall be operative only insofar as funds are appropriated, and the minute the Congress refuses to appropriate funds for carrying it out, then that minute the act will no longer be operative, at least beyond the funds that have been previously appropriated.

In connection with the discussion of the costs of preparedness, a table that was put into the hearings of the Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department last spring on the additions to the original defense bill will be of interest. The gentleman from Michigan asked about the comparative costs and the comparative economics in our preparation and that of other countries. During our hearings I asked General Marshall and General Moore for a statement on that subject. They gave us some figures, which are found on page 32 of the hearings by our subcommittee on the Senate amendments to the Military Establishment appropriation bill for 1941. Some of those figures, I believe, are worthy of bringing to your attention at this time.

In this table, based on 1937 figures, we find that the rate of pay for the private soldier in Great Britain was $23.55 per month. In France the rate of pay for the conscript private soldier was $1.05 per month. In Italy the conscript private soldier got a pay of 65 cents per month. In Germany the pay was $6 per month, in Russia the average was $11.77 per month, and in Japan $4.65 per month. At the time this table was prepared our base pay was $21 per month, and under the Selective Service Act, as you know, it is $21 per month for the first 4 months, but then becomes $30 per month.

In estimating the cost of preparedness in this country it is interesting to note the average cost of labor in the several countries in that fiscal year of 1937. The bricklayer in London received 41 cents per hour. In France the bricklayer received $1.33 per day. In Italy skilled labor received $1.60 per day and unskilled 85 cents per day. The bricklayer in Rome received 17 cents per hour. In Germany the bricklayer received 43 cents per hour. In Russia the average wage in the building trades was 36 cents per hour. In Japan the bricklayer received $1.33 per day, or 14 cents per hour.

In the United States a bricklayer in New York received $1.50 per hour. When that is contrasted, $1.50 per hour for a bricklayer in New York with 43 cents per hour in Germany, some realization can be had of the comparative cost of defense in the several countries.

General Moore, in specific answer to a question I had asked him, said:

The Assistant Secretary's office testified before the House Military Affairs Committee that an analysis had been made of what had been done in Germany in the last 7 years in the way of preparation, and an analysis was made of what it would cost this country to do the same relative preparations, as increased by the relatively larger population that we have. The answer is $100,000,000,000.

Then the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS] said "$100,000,000,000?" And General Moore said, "Yes, sir."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, we have concrete evidence that there was plenty of information to that effect as far back as 1933, when National Socialist Germany began a feverish rearmament program following a long number of years of disarmament, and while we did adopt many of the so-called social New Deal reforms of National Socialist Germany, we did not at that time take cognizance of their rearmament program and we passed that up until May 1940.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; and the gentleman could find further support for his thought in that regard by recalling that out of the twelve-billion-and-odd dollars which we will have appropriated for national defense when this bill is passed in this session of Congress, $8,104,109,000 of that amount represents Budget estimates that have come to us since the first of the year. In other words, two-thirds of the total appropriations for the Army and the Navy that will have been made in the appropriation bills by this session of Congress, have come to us in Budget estimates since the year began.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Following the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] was there anything to indicate that Germany at that time ever contemplated rearming herself to attack the United States, and was there any reason why we at that time should have gone into a state of feverish excitement and commence to prepare for war at sea, air, and on land?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me on that?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman really wants information, I will tell him exactly where to get it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am asking the question of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And I have yielded to the gentleman from Michigan to answer the question which grew out of the question that he raised here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will take the book recently published by Reynal and Hitchock, known as The German Economy 1870 to 1940, and the Voice of Destruction, published by G. P. Putnam's Sons in 1940, and the Economy Recovery of Germany from 1933 to the Incorporation of Austria in March 1938, published by Macmillan & Co., he will get a complete answer to the question, and the gentleman will find that the whole world was served notice that Germany intended to blaze its way across the path of the globe. We had all the information in the world that we needed, and by "we" I mean our official staff in the State Department and the executive department also had it, but they did not for political reasons put it before the American public and they refused to give it to me when I requested the President last fall to give it to me specifically, and he said he did not have time to answer my question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman think from the information he has received and that he has just told us about, that Germany then intended to lay the foundation for invading the United States, and does he think now that Germany intends to invade the United States?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Germany laid the foundation for invading the United States economically and that we should be prepared to meet it——

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am not talking about "economically."

Mr. CRAWFORD (continuing). Through the detailed informaton which Herr Hitler sets forth with reference to his proposed colonizations and economic invasions in Mexico and Latin America, which would constitute a direct attack against the entire Monroe Doctrine and our natonal defense.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is not any question but what she intended to compete with us in trade, but I am talking about from a military standpoint.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the whole weight of the talk here today is a question of economics which we must eventually face and our whole procedure with reference to the natonal debt, and we should leave no stone unturned to prepare for our successfully meeting that economic invasion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then it is not war you are talking about, but economics that you are talking about. Our defense program is grounded on the theory of military invasion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is all war is about at any time. We have no record to show Germany could successfully invade the United States of America unless by our will they do so. I do not fear direct military invasion. It may come through Mexico or South America.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, it is my personal conviction that with the sources of information that should have been available to the administration, the administration was fully capable of having known prior to May 1940 the threat of the German military machine, and on the same point I feel that the countries of Europe had plenty of opportunity to know what they were facing. I do not know whether Hitler originally intended to invade England, but if he ever did, he is giving the matter a second though at this time.

I do not know that he ever seriously thought of invading the United States. I doubt it. But I am confident that if we had the air force we should have had, he would not think of it. The American people are concerned more with our lack of preparedness in the air than at any other point.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additonal minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yet when visitors went to Germany and came back and told England and came back and told the United States what Germany was doing in the way of air preparedness, those people were criticized and crucified. Witness Lindbergh and his warnings 2 and 3 years ago.

Now, there are some other items I would like to discuss in this bill, but because of the limitation of time I will put them off until we come to consideration under the 5-minute rule.

In closing, I want to repeat that I am not going to boast about voting for these appropriation bills for national defense, because it seems to me that Congress and the administration had a far greater responsibility, and that was of trying to solve the problem of how the nations of the world will live together. If we devoted one-tenth of the money to that kind of a proposition that we are devoting to military preparedness, we would come far nearer solving the real problem confronting the world at this time.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the men of our generation, the leaders of the world in our day, are falling down on the great job of our times. I cannot think of the boys who went overseas in 1917 and 1918 in a war to end war and who did not come back and in my mind say to them "We are being fair to you" when 20 years later we are getting right back to the same proposition of a world-wide war. I cannot look at that picture of that little girl on Life magazine that came out the other day and see the bewildered terror in her innocent eyes and feel that we are doing our job if we simply sit here and say "yes" when requests for military appropriations come along. We have a much greater responsibility, and that is to try to find some way for the nations of the world to live together in peace. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I fear I have little contribution to make toward answering the great questions before us, except making an observation or two, I was struck by the solemn tone of the chairman of the subcommittee today as he pointed out that we are not taking thought of the future sufficiently; that we ought to be thinking of what will happen tomorrow. He is a wise man, yet admits that he sees dimly but fearfully the momentous problems ahead.

Following also the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] this come to my thought: There are some things too great for even the mind of man to grasp. Out in my State we have a majestic feature of nature which the human mind can scarcely comprehend, and the brush of the artist cannot portray. The greatest artists in the world attempt to paint natural beauty, but none attempt the grandeur of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River in northern Arizona. They are forced to admit that they are incapable, with all of their art and skill, to do justice to that awe-inspiring sublimity.

I recall at the opening of the World War that the literary world waited in vain for some master of the English language, some Kipling to come along and write a far greater Recessional. But none appeared. How did it happen that Kipling himself, yet alive at that time, was not able to surpass his earlier production? Certainly in 1914 and 1918 greater things were expected of a Kipling than those which inspired the Recessional in the first place. Was it not the immensity of it all that stunned the human mind? The times may be so awful as to deaden rather than inspire. Apparently it was so a quarter century ago.

How is it today? The same—or worse. The thing which has recently happened in the world is so cataclysmic that the mind of most of us cannot comprehend it. Heretofore we have sometimes tried to indicate the significance of an historic event by saying it marked the end of one age and the beginning of another. But this present world war may mark the end of one civilization and the beginning of another totally different.

In all our efforts at preparedness, let us fortify our minds and souls as well as our shores. Military preparedness is now the first essential. Along with that let us strengthen the American way of life against any and all eventualities. Let us take thought—if it is within human power—to cushion our Nation against the inevitable shocks ahead—economic shocks and those other shocks which are likely to come to the thought life and to the spiritual life of our people out of this time of trouble.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This bill carries an appropriation for $1,311,493,636 to take care of the expense of the draft and the drafted men for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1941. I spoke and voted against the draft. I felt that it was unnecessary to conscript the manpower of this Nation in peacetime. This Nation has never done so before. Press reports indicated yesterday that perhaps none of the men would be drafted—we could and would get more volunteers than are necessary to meet the requirements of the Army, Navy, and Air Corps. I pointed out in my speech against the draft bill that thousands of volunteers were on the waiting list to get into the Navy and Air Corps and about 800,000 men were subject to the call of the President for the Army, a much larger number than we can take care of at this time, and furthermore, that able-bodied young men were volunteering at the rate of more than 40,000 a month.

But the administration forced through this conscription bill and we must now appropriate money to take care of the expense and take care of the men who may be drafted; and I rise, not in opposition to this appropriation but to make some observations along the same line of those made today by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

I have said many times that the great threat to our Nation is because of conditions in our own country and not from any attack that may be made from foreign countries. This administration has been and is now neglecting the important domestic problems. Counting the sums set out in this bill, Congress will have appropriated and authorized for contracts more than $12,000,000,000 for national defense for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1940, and ending June 30, 1941. That is a tremendous sum of money, but it is only about half of the sum this Congress has appropriated since it met on January 3, 1940. Congress has appropriated and authorized the expenditure of approximately $23,000,000,000 this fiscal year. What a staggering sum! This is more than 60 percent of the actual sum of money spent during the World War when we had 5,000,000 men under arms, and 5 times as much as it cost to run the Government and win the 4 years of the Civil War. This will be three times as much as the revenues collected by the Government for the present fiscal year.

Our direct and indirect debts and obligations today amount to more than $50,000,000,000, and before this fiscal year closes, our direct and indirect debts and obligations will be more than $60,000,000,000. Does that tremendous sum mean anything to the safety of our country and our national defense?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am very sorry indeed that I cannot yield at this time to my distinguished and able friend from Vermont. My time is very limited.

A sound public credit is of the greatest importance to the defense and safety of any nation. What does this administration propose to do toward stopping this continued pyramiding of our national debt and further weakening of our national credit? This is the eleventh consecutive year of deficits. We shall have the largest deficit this year of any year. No one in the administration suggests that they plan to stop these deficits or halt the mounting national debt. President Roosevelt and his New Deal Congress will not stop the deficits, the increase of the national debt, or the increase of taxes. They cannot and will not solve this problem. They entered upon a career of taxing and squandering, borrowing and spending. The American people will have to elect an anti New Deal Congress and an anti New Deal administration in order to correct this condition and to protect the country.

THE FOLLY OF THE NEW DEAL'S GOLD POLICY

President Roosevelt forced through a subservient Congress a bill giving him the power to regulate our money and fix the value thereof, when, as a matter of fact, the Constitution gave this power to the Congress alone. Under this measure the President hiked the price of gold from less than $21 an ounce to $35 an ounce, and announced to the world that the United States would pay $35 an ounce for all the gold that might be offered to us. This caused the expansion of gold mines and developed new gold mines throughout the world, and under that policy we have bought $14,000,000,000 worth of gold, which, added to our supply of $7,000,000,000, gives us now $21,000,000,000 of gold. Eighty-five percent of this gold comes from foreign countries. This $14 bonus on each ounce causes a continued flow of gold from all parts of the world—Russia, Mexico, Central and South America, India, Australia, Canada, and other countries.

We now have 80 percent of the movable gold of the world. The balance of trade between nations is supposed to be settled with gold. We are the greatest surplus-producing country of the world. We have a surplus of farm and industrial commodities and the gold. Nations needing our commodities cannot buy them because we have already bought up their gold. This gold continues to pour in, and we bury it down in Kentucky. It is a bonanza for the foreign gold producers. Strange to say, you hear no plan or suggestion from the administration about stopping this tremendous folly. Can we continue throughout the years to take in all the gold of the world at $14 an ounce more than its value? It must stop sometime. We cannot go on forever this way adding to our national debt and stripping the commerce of the world of its medium of exchange. This administration will not stop this folly because when it is announced to the world that the United States will no longer take all the gold and pay $35 an ounce, the price of gold will go back to its real market value, and that will mean a loss of billions of dollars to our Government. The administration is unwilling to face the exposure.

The Under Secretary of State, Mr. Berle, has, however, made the suggestion that when the war is over that in order to have business with Europe it will be necessary for us to make a present of one-half of our gold to Europe. This is one of the greatest follies of all of the follies of the New Deal. It can only be stopped by electing a Republican Congress and a Republican administration.

AGRICULTURE HEADED FOR DISASTER

The New Deal pushed through its plan for agriculture. It loans to the cotton, wheat, and corn growers a greater sum than the market price of these commodities, and gives the growers the option to turn over these commodities and cancel the debt. The result is that the Government has acquired a tremendous surplus of cotton, corn, and wheat. Today the United States Government owns or controls 10,000,000 bales of cotton, 500,000,000 bushels of corn, and 100,000,000 bushels of wheat piled up in cribs. At the end of this crop season the Government will own and have under its control more than 14,000,000 bales of cotton, and will have additional hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat and corn sealed up in cribs. This cotton, corn, and wheat surplus has been growing and will continue to grow.

Before this administration put on its cotton program we exported more than 8,000,000 bales of cotton annually. Last year and before the war this had dropped to a little over 3,000,000 bales, and this year it will be less than 2,000,000 bales, and our exports of corn and wheat have been greatly reduced. It would take about 2 years without a stalk of cotton being grown to take up the surplus of cotton that will be owned and controlled by the Government at the end of this crop year. These surpluses like our gold supply are piling up day by day. At the end of this crop year the Government will have invested in cotton approximately a billion dollars, and one-half billion dollars in wheat and corn. This administration cannot and will not solve this problem. It must be solved some day and somehow. The Government cannot continue to borrow money and go on forever increasing the surplus of cotton, wheat, and corn. Like the gold policy they will persist in going on until we go over the precipice.

This administration has adopted a policy of scarcity instead of plenty. Some plan should be worked out similar to the McNary-Haugen plan which would fully protect the American farmer in a depressed world market and the Government dispose of the surplus every year and not allow it to accumulate as this administration has done and will continue to do.

Of course, under the farm policy of the present administration if this cotton, wheat, and corn should be put on the market it would break the market. The New Deal with this policy has run up against a dead end. Like the gold accumulation folly the New Deal is committed to its folly and it will require a Republican Congress and a Republican administration to correct this condition.

Our farm policy here has encouraged a greatly increased production of cotton and other farm commodities in foreign countries. They are now supplying the markets that the American farmers formerly supplied. Unfortunately, we have lost these markets to the American farmers forever. As our farmers have been forced to cut down their production it has increased production in foreign countries. As we have cut out acreage it has taken away the jobs of a million farming families in this country and has reduced the purchasing power which reflects itself in the loss of jobs to the workers in our factories, mills, shops, and mines. Great quantities of farm products and manufactured goods have come in under the reciprocal-trade agreements.

One of the commissions of this administration recently reported that there were 45,000,000 Americans undernourished—yes; and I might say underhoused and underclothed, needing food, shelter, and raiment; yet 10,000,000 bales of cotton are piled up in warehouses, 500,000,000 bushels of corn and 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are sealed up in cribs and elevators. But this administration will continue to pile up surpluses, and our people will continue to be unemployed, undernourished, poorly housed, and poorly clad. We must have a Congress and an administration that believes in the philosophy of plenty and not of scarcity. No people were ever happy, contented, or prosperous under a policy of scarcity. These blessings always come with plenty. [Applause.]

THE UNEMPLOYMENT MENACE

There are more unemployed today than when Mr. Roosevelt was a candidate for President in 1932 and pledged himself and his party to solve the unemployment problem. His great friend, John L. Lewis, has said in a number of public addresses that the New Deal administration has not solved the unemployment problem or any of the great problems that confronted Mr. Roosevelt when he took office March 4, 1933. Mr. Lewis further asserted that this administration had accomplished little or nothing except to increase taxes, create deficits and more deficits, and to pile up a huge national debt, and that the administration has offered no constructive solution for any of these great problems or held out any promise or hope of relief from the conditions that now confront the people of this country. The council of the A. F. of L. made a similar indictment.

We cannot hope to go forward until we have solved in a just and sensible way the problems of the farmers; put the shops, mills, factories, mines, and other private enterprises to work, and provide jobs for these millions of unemployed. The billions now being poured out for war have furnished temporary prosperity and temporary jobs to certain industries and workers, but we must not forget these are produced by borrowed money, by increasing the deficits, and by increasing our national debt. We are merely reaching out, eating up and consuming the future of ourselves and of our boys and girls.

WHAT WILL HAPPEN AFTER THE WAR?

I have never believed that Hitler would attempt the foolish and impossible task of invading the United States or the Western Hemisphere. I do not now believe he will make any such attempt. The real danger to our country is not a naval or military invasion of the United States or Latin America. Germany and other nations now engaged in war may attempt an economic invasion after the war.

Germany, Italy, England, France, Japan, and every other great country of the world will be bankrupt when this war is over. Our Nation has the gold. They will have nothing with which to buy our products. They will set about to produce manufactured and farm products in great quantities. Their people will work long hours and receive sweatshop wages. They will use child labor, and their working conditions will be bad. Then they will attempt to dump their cheaply produced products into the United States and South America. They will attempt an economic invasion.

It will be a tremendous shock to our standard of living. We will then need our money and credit to tide us over that period. We will then wake up to find that we have squandered and wasted our money and our credit and greatly weakened ourselves to meet this great economic struggle. We have been showering Central and South America with loans and other favors to build up our export trade there. Let me point out, however, that South Americans, when the war is over, will buy where they can buy the cheapest. When that war is over it will require a Republican Congress and a Republican administration to protect American farmers, American industrial workers, and American business from that economic foreign invasion.

BUT MR. ROOSEVELT HAS SUCCEEDED

Mr. Roosevelt has succeeded in creating more bureaus and commissions; he has succeeded in increasing the number of Federal officeholders from a little over 500,000 to more than 1,000,000; he has succeeded in increasing the number of people needing some form of public relief; he has succeeded in increasing the amount of revenues collected from the people annually more than 250 percent; he has succeeded in increasing the national debts and national obligations from approximately $20,000,000,000 to more than fifty billions, and with the commitments he has made it will be more than sixty billions. He has succeeded in increasing the amount of deficits from approximately $4,000,000,000 when he went into office to thirty billions, and when the commitments he has made have been met these deficits will amount to forty billions. He has succeeded in greatly increasing the enmity of the people of the world against the United States; he has succeeded in surpassing all other American Presidents in meddling in the affairs of other countries. He has succeeded in stirring up class hatred; he has succeeded in hindering private enterprise; he has succeeded in substituting doles for jobs; he has succeeded in greatly curtailing the liberties and freedom of the American people; and he has succeeded in gathering to himself more dictatorial powers than all the other Presidents put together.

I am alarmed to think what the results will be to our Nation if our politically ambitious President is given a third term. To preserve the liberties of the American people the third term should be denied to him, and to correct these conditions and to solve these problems there must be a change. Without a change do we not face disaster?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield me 13 minutes' additional time?

Mr. O'NEAL. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, considerable has been said today regarding the knowledge European countries and the United States had as to just what Germany was doing in the interim between 1933, when Hitler came into power, and the time we began to build our defense program.

I call attention to the RECORD of June 21, 1939, at which time I spoke on the floor of the House calling attention to certain facts. Colonel Lindbergh had testified before our committee some 2 hours. Only one and a half pages of that testimony was published in the printed hearings; the remainder was not published.

Colonel Lindbergh testified that he went through German factories in 1937 and 1938. His testimony was so amazing that I turned to him and asked him just what factories he went through. Colonel Lindbergh named factory after factory. I asked, "Did they not try to stop you?" He said, "No." Now, mark well this: I asked, "Did anyone go with you?" He answered, "Yes."

"Who went with you?"

His reply, to my amazement and surprise, was: "A military attaché from the American Embassy in Berlin."

If you will look at the RECORD of June 21, 1939, you will recall that I made the statement on the floor of this House that military attachés were not on the job.

I said at that time that apparently the first qualification of a military attaché to a foreign office was that he must have a wealthy wife to finance his social obligations; that apparently from the results obtained it does not make any difference whether he is a nincompoop or not, just so he can meet his social obligations in a financial way.

I asked Lindbergh at that time whether anyone else went with him. He replied, "Yes; an aviation expert from the French Army went with us on one occasion." Despite this statement the figures furnished us by the Army as to the number of airplanes each country had, including Germany and Italy, were absolutely wrong. It was upon these erroneous figures that we based our program.

We have failed miserably in research and development. We were told by General Arnold and Colonel Lindbergh a year ago last January that we were from 3 to 5 years behind

Germany. I quote a question from page 7648 of the RECORD of June 21, 1929, as taken from committee hearings:

If we were so far behind England, Germany, and France in airplane construction, why was it that France came over here to buy some of our military planes?

General Arnold replied that in the emergency France was in, they were ready to buy anything. This testimony was given off the record and never contradicted.

I have information that these planes sold to France took part in the battle of Flanders. The whole French air force was wiped out during the first 10 days. The German planes had self-sealing, leak-proof gasoline tanks. The American and French planes did not have that improvement. The German planes had armored pilot seats. The French and American planes were not so armored. Can you imagine what would happen if an armored bandit car went down the streets of Washington with machine guns firing through the sides and the police department were trying to capture it with an open touring car? If you can, you may realize what happened when these planes went into action.

Mr. Chairman, it is suicide for one of these planes to contact a plane equipped with armored pilot seats and self-sealing tanks.

You will recall the story in the press when the first of these German planes was finally brought down; they discovered hundreds of bullet holes through the gasoline tanks, with several hundred gallons of gasoline remaining in the tanks.

Mr. Chairman, the Army had the authority on January 30, 1939, to build 907 planes. They had had that authority from 17 to 19 months. The reason they did not build those planes was because they were waiting for development of various appliances to place in those planes. Then suddenly in January the President decided he wanted planes. They wanted planes and more planes. Up to then they wanted quality first, then quantity. Now they wanted planes. It did not make any difference what kind of planes—just planes. General Arnold testified as follows:

What we wanted heretofore was quality. Now we want quantity.

Mr. Chairman, in that speech on June 21, 1939, on the floor of this House I opposed the building of 2,200 planes of that type and the placing of them in the reserve of the Army. I took the position that they would be obsolete before they were built. We know today that they are obsolete. Only a few of them were built, and most of those that were built were released to France and wiped out in Flanders and elsewhere; thank God they did not have American boys at the stick.

On June 21, 1939, I spoke on the floor of this House as follows:

Mr. Chairman, this is a frank confession that we are building obsolete planes because we want quantity now instead of quality. Colonel Lindbergh said we should have quality first, then quantity. I maintain that this is absolutely outrageous, to build planes which they frankly confess are obsolete, as the testimony shows that even with our greatest development we are from 3 to 5 years behind European countries. How far behind will we be with these planes in 1941 when completed?

Now, I want to discuss the problem of plane construction, and I want to give you an illustration I gave some time ago on the floor of this House as to what one of our problems is. Two years ago I heard General Craig talk to a pilot in a plane 33,000 feet in the air. Thirty-three thousand feet, if straight up, would be 6 miles. Sound travels at the rate of 1 mile in 5 seconds. A plane that travels 300 miles an hour is obsolete, yet that plane will travel a mile in 12 seconds. A plane traveling 450 miles an hour is traveling at the rate of a mile in 8 seconds. We are today approaching in the speed of planes the speed of sound, 8 seconds a mile for a plane, 5 seconds for sound. It required sound 30 seconds to come down from that plane 33,000 feet in the sky to our sounding apparatus on the ground. During that 30 seconds the plane, if traveling at 300 miles an hour, would have traveled 2½ miles, and if traveling at the rate of 450 miles an hour would have traveled 4 miles. All we would know down here is that 30 seconds before up there 6 miles in the air was a plane, but during that 30 seconds it had gone 2½ to 4 miles God knows in which direction. That is what we have confronting us. The Army has actually solved this problem.

When I heard that broadcast I made the statement that we required antiaircraft guns that could reach 30,000 feet in the air, because we would have to use them at that range in the near future. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, Kansas ranks fifth in the States of the Union in the production of oil. Our State could greatly increase its production to the advantage of operators, farmers, and laborers, except for the fact that we conform to the proration agreement of the midcontinent field. Some wells in Kansas are given an allowable production of less than 1 percent of potential. The oil producers are cooperating in every way to keep the industry on a stable basis. It is discouraging, therefore, to note the rapid increase in oil imports.

Imports of low-cost foreign petroleum which make no contribution to American labor or American public revenues take a greater portion of the market for domestic petroleum products than the entire State of Kansas is permitted to supply. Kansas has been holding down its production while a few big companies who are the chief importers of foreign petroleum have been increasing their importations, displacing domestic oil in our own home markets.

Some idea of the importance of these imports may be gained by comparing the daily average production of crude oil in the State of Kansas with the imports which enter our domestic markets. The following figures make this comparison for the first 7 months of 1940:

	Daily average imports	Daily average Kansas production
	Barrels	Barrels
January	142,000	171,000
February	211,000	176,000
March	228,000	180,000
April	217,000	161,000
May	197,000	168,000
June	194,000	178,000
July	206,000	188,000

NOTE.—The above figures on imports are taken from data supplied by the U. S. Tariff Commission. Figures on Kansas production are taken from the U. S. Bureau of Mines report.

The self-restraint which Kansas places upon itself is illustrated by the fact that while the daily average production in Kansas during July was 188,000 barrels, the potential production on June 1 was 5,384,182 barrels, according to the Oil and Gas Journal, a recognized authority in the petroleum industry.

From these figures it will be seen that imports were larger than Kansas' production in every month of this year except January. We have another Kansas, in effect, but an uncontrolled and unregulated Kansas. It is a Kansas whose benefits flow not to thousands of citizens of this country but to a few large and powerful importing oil companies. It is a Kansas that does not have to make any contribution to the national conservation program. It is a Kansas without the high labor standards and fair wages enjoyed by the workers in this country. It is a Kansas that makes no contribution to the national defense, but rather, because of the reduced import taxes under the Venezuelan trade agreement, is actually permitted to enjoy an additional competitive advantage it did not have in former years. Certainly the domestic producers have a right to fear these imports, which show an increase of 30 percent for the first 6 months of 1940 over the same period in 1939.

The reciprocal-trade agreement with Venezuela became effective December 16, 1939. This agreement reduced by 50 percent the excise taxes on petroleum and its products imported for consumption within this country. The total quota established for all imports at the reduced rate is no measure of the total quantity of oil that can be imported.

For the first half of this year taxable imports from Venezuela increased 32 percent; from the Netherland West Indies, 127 percent; and from Old Mexico, 3,770 percent. Mexico's importation rose from a daily average of less than 800 barrels to an average of 30,000 barrels per day. Imports of petroleum and its products during the first half of 1940 totaled 38,449,347 barrels. This large increase must be made at the expense of the producers in this country as the imports increased 75 percent while there was only a 5-percent increase in the total petroleum consumption in the United States.

These imports of low-cost foreign oil are not a new problem for the domestic producers, but they are a particularly troublesome one this year. Several factors contribute to this. First, these imports have increased greatly, as shown by the fact that imports subject to excise taxes for consumption within the United States increased 76 percent in the first 7 months of this year as compared with the same period of 1939. At the same time the war has resulted in a loss of 26 percent in our export markets. The domestic producer is being squeezed between falling export markets and rising import supplies. There is not very much that the people of this country can do about our foreign markets, but they can and must do something about these imports which are threatening the life of the small producer in the State of Kansas and in all other oil-producing States.

Trade agreements reducing the excise tax on oil should be rescinded. In fact, the country would benefit from an increase in the excise tax on oil instead of having it further reduced. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that every Member of this House will at some time or other read the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] which were made in the course of his explanatory statement on the pending bill. He raised a very interesting question, and it is particularly interesting because today marks the second anniversary of Munich. Who could have envisioned when the stone was thrown across the world waters at Munich how far the repercussions would go, how they would embrace ultimately Norway, Poland, and Czechoslovakia, and provoke a tremendous defense program in this country? But there will be an end to the repercussions from Munich. There will come a time when the war will be over. It is reminiscent of that rather lyrical ditty of the gay nineties, as they say, "After the ball is over, after the break of day." In that vein one might suggest that after the war is over, after the firing has ceased, there will come a great many problems for this country, and the time to take thought of those problems is now, in my judgment.

There are many factors involved, of course. One of them is the enormous debt of preparation that we are piling up day after day and with each recurring appropriation bill. We give a great deal of thought, of course, to the end of the war in terms of the international situation and the possibility of an intensive world competition under which we must engage in barter in order to meet the efficacy of other countries, and the possible repercussion of that barter system upon the standard of living in this country, the curtailment of our own opportunities, and the prospect of even greater control for industry and agriculture.

The former Secretary of Agriculture, now a candidate for the Vice Presidency, has been emphasizing that very fact in the Middle West as he goes on his campaign tour. I allude to it briefly, and obviously 6 minutes is not enough in which to do it justice. One ought to have a couple of hours to discuss that matter. However, I think at least it serves the virtue of pitching and poising the question in your minds.

We think of war in terms of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. If you read the Apocalypse very closely you will find a fifth horseman. He is there, and he is the Horseman of Despair. He comes afterward. Of course, that despair will be dished up for this country. Here we have an economy now that is directed upon what we might call an artificial boom in armament, but do not forget there is only one purchaser in that kind of economy; that is, the Government of the United States or other governments. There is only one kind of merchandise, and that is the merchandise of death. But when the end comes, then there comes dislocation, the demobilization of those in uniform and, as they seek to retrieve their jobs, there comes the lengthening of those tenuous unemployment lines which are still long today. There comes the diminution of our national wealth, and also the collapse of national income. But do you not know that when the final score is written, the debt service will be $1,500,000,000 a year, but that income will have diminished, and so you have an annual standing interest charge with a diminished capacity to take care of that load. And then what? Then comes collapse.

It is high time that we stop thinking exclusively in terms of what the international-trade situation will be after the war is over. Domestic problems also demand attention. We have not solved the problem of stagnant capital. It is all right for these dollars to find their way into the armament industries and expand the figures, but when the war is over that will collapse. That will have to be curtailed. Then what about the American economy? It behooves us now to be thinking about it in the hope that by a judicious approach now we can meet that day when the fifth horseman of despair starts riding over all the earth, because that will be a great problem and a great responsibility.

Frankly, I may say to my good friend from Virginia, I am not at all sure about the answer, but I think there is a factor in the answer that we can see now, and that is that you cannot hobble industry too closely, you cannot press too many restrictions on it and then go out and demand the utmost of a crippled industry. The very fact that the conferees are wrestling with a tax bill today that has a very difficult amortization provision in it is the best testimony I know of. People often throw rocks and point an accusing finger at the industry of America and say they are engaged in a sit-down strike, so we must needs by some device in a conscription bill seek to conscript those industrial services.

I do not believe that that is the answer. I believe that when we ask industry to submit themselves to a single purchaser in the form of the Government to manufacture the goods of death we ought to play fair also and make it possible to amortize those plant facilities over a short space of time. They will be utterly valueless when finally the four horsemen—of war, pestilence, death, and famine—cease to ride. So the evidence is very much here. While I think it is a grand thing to hold onto the gains that have been made, yet there must be a relenting of certain restrictions if you are going to pitch this grave problem and this grave responsibility upon American industry and say, "You solve it." You must give them the legislative instruments and help to do it.

As we go along that is one factor that will show up continuously in the answer, and in proportion as we show a little more leniency in dealing with industry and what we demand of it, we can make preparation for what is to come after. I think it is going to have a tendency to head off some of these disastrous effects that will come as a part of a world-wide dislocation.

Casual reflection upon the domestic problems which will become acutely aggravated after the world forsakes its present madness and returns to sanity indicates that these problems will include demobilization of men in uniform, the cessation of the manufacture of war goods and supplies, the diminution of revenues, the shrinkage in national income and a continuing annual interest charge of one and one-half billion dollars which will weigh as a staggering burden upon the weakened economy of our country.

One hesitates to bring forth the unpleasant reminder that, in the period following the World War, Government obligations which sold at $980 per thousand in the latter part of 1918 had depreciated to $860 only 18 months later.

The present program in all its aspects manifestly requires the issuance of additional billions of Government paper as annual deficits continue and grow larger. The gross amount of such obligations which must be carried by banks, insurance companies, and other institutions of the country grows year by year. What a ghastly situation could develop if we fail now to exhibit a degree of vision and seek toward those things which will minimize the shock of dislocation when the present madness ends.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, there is an ancient Norse legend of Alaric, the Viking chief, hero of a thousand battles, who, on his deathbed, promised his companions-in-arms that if ever needed he would come back to lead them to victory; and in Denmark there has been told through the centuries the folklore story of a sleeping Danish king who would return to defend Denmark in her hour of need. A shepherd searching among inaccessible crags for a lost herd found himself in a vast cavern where the sleeping monarch clad in armor still sat upon his throne. As he gazed, the King stirred in his sleep and murmured, "Is it time; give me thy hand." Afraid to approach nearer, the peasant reached out the steel point of his alpenstock and the tough metal melted like butter in his grasp as he muttered, "Ah, there are men in Denmark still." Even in modern France, the peasants have always believed that in a national crisis their sainted Joan of Arc would arise to lead them. But the enemy came swift and terrible. The invader, unprovoked and unchallenged, savage and ruthless, ravaged Norway and Denmark without cause or occasion—and Alaric and Holger Danska, and even the dauntless spirit of the Maid of Orleans, slept on.

Here in America we likewise have had our legends. "It could not happen here." "The memory of Washington and Lincoln and of every hero from Bunker Hill to Chateau-Thierry would give us spiritual power." "A million men would spring to arms."

But what arms? We cannot fight today with the armament of 1776, or even with the weapons of 1914—as nations have learned to their cost. When Paul Revere rode through Middlesex arousing the minutemen, all that was necessary was for them to rise, pull on their boots, reach above the door for their rifles, and pick a convenient place behind a stone wall along the invader's line of march. That strategy was effective in colonial New England, but it would not protect New York or San Francisco today. Neither the rifle nor the untrained minuteman or even the stone wall would be of avail in modern warfare.

The French on the Maginot line complained that when the Germans came across they saw no men; they saw only tanks and machinery and flaming guns.

France had the men but lacked the machinery, and there was no time to provide it. And almost overnight a great world power, a nation that had dominated Europe, a culture and a civilization that had enriched every period of history, vanished like a falling star, and in darkened London men cower in subterranean shelter to escape the death that flies by night.

In this lawless age when continents are being robbed and enslaved without provocation or excuse, no nation can hope to survive that is not able to defend itself. And self-defense is merely a matter of modern armament and men trained to use it. We have already provided the money for armament. In this bill, the last link in the preparedness program, we provide money for men. One is useless without the other. With the passage of this bill we have now provided for both. With the passage of this legislation it is merely a matter of time before we will have planes, tanks, guns, and ships, and, most important of all, men trained to use them.

And it cannot be emphasized too strongly that this vast expenditure is not a step toward war. It is a step away from war. It is insurance against war. It is the shotgun behind the door, the knowledge of which will deter predatory marauders who otherwise might be tempted by our well-filled corncribs and our crowded chicken roosts.

I listened with interest to the gentleman who preceded me. He is one of the valuable members of the House and I hear him always with pleasure and profit. But I regretted that he devoted the time to a discussion of conditions which will follow the close of the war emergency, when we shall again beat our swords into plowshares and our spears into pruning hooks. Sadly enough that millennium is in the far distant future. Of course it is an intriguing speculation and I suppose I have hammered all the changes on that question harder than any man on this floor. From the beginning of this session I have repeatedly called attention to the fact that eventually the war must end and have insisted that we take into consideration economic conditions which must inevitably follow the war, especially with relation to agriculture. The certainty of this becomes every day more apparent. The huge flying fortresses, the stupendous 16-inch guns, and all the Gargantuan paraphernalia of war which we are so feverishly building at such astronomic costs will be junk when peace is declared. All combined will not be worth a dime except as scrap metal. And it is natural that we should permit our minds to stray even in these crowded hours to such eventualities.

During the hearings on this bill, I asked General Marshall what might be expected in 1944 when we have completed the program; when we have spent these billions of dollars. And of course he could not answer. Because, for the present, such discussion is purely academic. It is wholly irrelevant. We can cross the bridge of post-war economy when we come to it, but for the present there are but two objectives before us. And to those we should devote all time and interest and energy. One is to prepare as quickly and efficiently as possible to defend this Nation and this continent. That we are doing with every possible dispatch.

The other is to prepare with all circumspection to render an account of our stewardship in the disbursement of the vast sums we are voting to appropriate in this bill and have previously voted to appropriate for the preparedness program in this session. Necessarily, these appropriations are liberal. I have no doubt they are in some instances perhaps too liberal. For under present conditions we could not afford to take any chance. I am frank to say that the subcommittee that held these hearings and reported this bill, accepted every recommendation made by the Army and the Navy. At no time did we cut down any estimate by a penny. We provided every dollar requested, and then not content with that, we asked, "Now, do you need anything more," and they have assured us that we have provided every possible dollar that can be used to expedite the arming of the Nation at top speed.

But it would be unreasonable to suppose that in the disbursement of these vast sums in practically every industry throughout the Nation there would not be some mistakes, that there will not be inevitably some waste. It is to this contingency, if not certainty, we should be devoting our earnest attention and consideration. The day is coming when we must face this phase of the situation and we should have it in mind, and every disbursing agency of the Government should have it in mind, as we go along. This House will appoint some day in the future, and I trust it will be in the near future, an investigating committee with vast powers of inquiry.

They will start here with these appropriations and trace every dollar from the Treasury to its ultimate disposition. They will ask, "How did you spend it? Was it spent honestly? Did you get value received?"

And we must be prepared to show that we neglected no precaution; that we took every possible measure to insure the effective and honest expenditure of this money; and especially that we got results. And we call upon every administrator and every contractor down the line to remember that "they likewise shall give account in the day of judgment."

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I am in hearty accord with what the gentleman has just said about having a committee appointed for the purpose of watching the expenditure of this money. I would like to know whether or not the gentleman will initiate such a program?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman need have no concern about who will initiate it. There are many on this floor and elsewhere who will attend to that. At the close of the last war a committee spent $1,000,000 investigating the conduct of the war. Inevitably there will be investigations of this war. I hope it will be done more cheaply, but it will be done as exhaustively.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does not the gentleman believe that that investigation should be concurrent with these expenditures and ought to be done long before the war, or the alleged war, is over, if war ever comes to this country, so that while all the evidence is fresh we can go on and make the investigation and find out whether this money has been effectively spent?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The thing for us to do is to be certain that when the investigation comes, as it surely will come, we shall be prepared to meet it and will be prepared to show that we were justified in spending every dollar that was spent. But we cannot permit that consideration to interfere with the program. This is one of the times we cannot stop to count the cost. We cannot take the chance European countries took. We must be prepared. We have only ourselves to depend on. We are the last line of defense. There is nobody back of us. There are no allies that we can call upon. We stand with our backs against the wall. We have only America to depend upon, and America alone.

And these post-war questions of after-war economies may for the present take care of themselves. If America can meet successfully the problems of the present crisis, she can meet successfully any after-war problems which may arise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of the Army, $10,000.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time solely for the purpose of calling to the attention of the membership a matter which is deemed by the naval authorities in charge of the Corpus Christi Naval Air Training Station to be one of vital importance. It so happens that Admiral Towers and Admiral Moreell appeared before the committee in support of an item of $3,000,000 additional to the $25,000,000 which was appropriated by the Congress in the last major appropriation bill for the Navy.

At the time the naval estimates were made up the Navy Department estimated originally the sum of $26,650,000 for this project, and an additional sum somewhat in excess of $1,000,000 for the acquisition of land in connection with the project. For some reason or other in the presentation of the matter to the Budget it was apparently deemed that this matter could go over until Congress met again in January; at least, no other reason was assigned.

The present naval air training program calls for the intake of 800 student flyers per month, 300 of whom are to be trained at Pensacola, Jacksonville, Miami, Corey Field, and Selfridge Field; 200 more at Jacksonville, Miami, Corey Field, and Selfridge; and 300 to be trained at the naval air training station now in the process of being erected at Corpus Christi, Tex., my home town.

I want to assure the Committee, first of all, that my interest in this item has no local color whatsoever. The statement I am making here has to do with the effect of the failure to provide this $3,000,000 extra in this particular bill on the preparations program for the defense of our country.

Speed, Mr. Chairman, is of the very essence of the situation. Failure to provide the additional field authorized in the original plan came about by reason of the fact that when the costs were finally estimated carefully and accurately it was found they would have to leave one of the three primary fields out. Three primary fields were originally contemplated and set out in the plans and specifications approved.

Corpus Christi happens to be the only naval air training station where complete training is afforded from primary grades on through to the finished flyer.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to correct the gentleman in one of his statements. Admiral Towers and Admiral Moreell appeared before the committee in support of the item. The situation was that they appeared before the committee in support of other items.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The question of Corpus Christi came up and, as will be seen from pages 20 and 21 of the hearings, I asked Admiral Towers about the situation at Corpus Christi and he said that it was vitally necessary to their program and he was unable to understand why it had not been approved by the Budget.

The committee did not put it in the bill because the Budget had not approved it. We understood that the matter was taken under consideration by the Budget. But it was shown by both Admiral Towers and Admiral Moreell that they regarded it as a vitally essential item.

Mr. KLEBERG. I thank my colleague very much for his contribution.

In conclusion I have this to say, Mr. Chairman: The situation with reference to this particular item is now under consideration and it is hoped that the Budget will send up a suitable recommendation to the Senate where this item can and should be included; and I express the hope that when the conferees meet, if this item is put in the bill, that it will receive favorable consideration.

Mr WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should say, in justice to the gentleman from Texas, that he has been most diligent in this matter and appeared before the committee in its interest.

Mr. KLEBERG. I thank the gentleman very much. In substance the failure to provide the requested $3,000,000 for the third primary training field will prevent the completion of the naval air training station at Corpus Christi. It will seriously impair that school in its program for complete pilot training. It will result in delaying without reason the full possible pilot output contemplated by the whole Navy program.

In the final analysis, it will preclude the carrying out of the present plans there to begin the training of pilots in early March of 1941.

In all, and after all, this $3,000,000 additional will but bring the total funds up to a total only about 4 percent out of line with the Navy's original estimate for the full project.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, following my 1-minute statement this morning regarding the need for a chairman of the Advisory Committee on National Defense we received one of the finest statements concerning his point of view from the gentleman from Virginia that I have heard on the floor of the House. It was with respect to what might happen after this war or emergency had passed. He made a fine statement. It is a great pity that so many of us have to try to say so much in the minute we are given occasionally, or the 5 minutes we have now and then. We have not time to discuss as carefully as we should like the things we have some knowledge of. It is for this reason that I have asked this additional time. I did not quite complete the statement I wanted to make this morning because my minute was up when I was about half way through. So I am going to ask your indulgence for a moment while I complete the statement.

Every man and woman who belongs to any organization knows that every organization must have a directing force to push its work. Without a chairman, without a coordinator, men work at cross purposes. They turn in performances of notable value, individually, and yet they may snarl the entire procedure.

Our Advisory Commission stands in grave danger of precisely this trouble. There is no reason whatever why a chairman should not be appointed who would in turn be directly accountable to the President for the activities of the group.

It is simply one additional illustration of the desire of the President to retain within his own hands the complete direction of every one of the multiple activities which he seeks to control.

One-man government is not a remote consideration when the defense of the Nation is so handled. There is serious danger that this one-man government is already here. We cannot risk this kind of danger.

That is exactly the way I feel about this whole defense program. There is a need for a head, there is need for cooperation, there is need for speed as the gentleman from Texas so aptly put it.

A distinguished Senator from Virginia, Senator HARRY BYRD, requested the Army to supply him with information as to the present needs of the Army and as to its future needs. He had quite a hard time getting that information. I do not know whether he has yet received it, but one of our colleagues the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] has received some information concerning the progress we are making. I want to point out to you some of the facts with regard to Army equipment that was on hand May 1 and compare it with the equipment, according to the Army figures, that was available on August 1.

For an army of 450,000 men they had 448 3-inch antiaircraft guns. They had no 90-millimeter guns. They had fifteen 37-millimeter guns. Of .50-caliber machine guns, they had 1,014. They had 38,000 semiautomatic rifles. Of 37-millimeter antitank guns they had 228. Of 60-millimeter mortars they had 3.

Now let me cite the figures the Army has given us on these items as of August 1 and as of May 1.

Three-inch antiaircraft guns: On May 1 we had 448; on August 1 we had acquired 471.

Ninety-millimeter guns: On May 1 we had none, and we had none on August 1.

Thirty-seven-millimeter guns: We had 15 on May 1 and 59 on August 1.

Small arms: Of semiautomatic rifles we had 138,000 on May 1 for 450,000 men, and only 149,124 on August 1 for 519,000 men.

We had on May 1, 228 37-millimeter guns, and on August 1 we had the same number, 228.

On May 1 we had three 60-millimeter mortars and we had three on August 1.

On May 1, we had 183 81-millimeter mortars, and we had 223 on August 1.

On May 1, we had 83 caliber .50 machine guns, and on August 1 we had 330.

Let us take field artillery. We had 141 75-millimeter guns modernized from World War stocks on May 1 and on August 1 we had 241.

Modern combat planes: On May 1 we had 52 and on August 1 we had 300.

For an army of 1,200,000 men we would need, for example, 10,000 planes.

Tractors and motor trucks: On May 1 we had 498 and on August 1, 631, and the need for that size army would be 140,000.

We had 485 scout cars on May 1 and 525 on August 1. We would need for the size army we are thinking about 2,600 of these cars.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In fairness I think the gentleman ought to remember, particularly with reference to planes, that our plane production has been stepped up in the last 12 months from 250 a month to 1,000 a month. We do not have the planes for the reason that under a policy which I believe most Americans approve we have been letting other people have these planes. That applies to much of this material that would be on hand.

Mr. BENDER. I am glad the gentleman made that point.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia if he has any information whether any of these planes, and if so, how many, are modern, up-to-date planes which contain self-sealing gasoline tanks and armored pilot seats?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. What planes?

Mr. ENGEL. The pursuit planes we are now constructing.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know. I was answering the gentleman as to why we did not have more planes now than we have. We have been sending them abroad.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman said we are building them at the rate of 1,000 a month. I am interested in finding out how many of these are modern up-to-date planes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They are all modern and up to date.

Mr. ENGEL. With self-sealing gasoline tanks?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know about that, but they are the planes that our aeronautical authorities say we ought to have for the job they are doing.

Mr. BENDER. Semiautomatic rifles: We had 38,000 on May 1, and on August 1 we had 49,124. We need for the size army we are talking about, 500,000, and this would include conscripts and volunteers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It ought to be understood that while the semiautomatic rifle known as the Garand is now stated to be by far the best military rifle of the world, the next best military rifle in the world is the Springfield-Enfield of which we have over a million. That is not stated there.

Mr. BENDER. The Springfield-Enfield? The Army is derelict in its duty in not supplying that information to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That information as I hear it read applies only to those items which have recently been designed and are supposed to be the last word, but it does not give an accurate description of the armament.

Mr. BENDER. I read 75-millimeter guns, modernized from World War stock. We had 141, and there are now on hand 241 modernized from World War stock.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true. The modernized 75-millimeter gun from World War stock is a better gun than the 75-millimeter guns that were used in the World War, but the 75-millimeter guns that were used in the World War are still excellent guns, and they are not counted. I think we have 3,000 of them.

Mr. BENDER. Combat vehicles: Scout cars: On May 1, we had 485. On August 1, 525. The need for our Army, as is contemplated between now and the first of the year, is 2,600.

The fact remains that while we have appropriated $5,702,000,000 in direct appropriations, according to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], and that figure has not been disputed, and for contract authorizations for the Army $2,975,000,000, we are woefully lacking in the thing that the gentleman from Texas pointed out, and that is speed.

The gentleman from Virginia points out that we are manufacturing many planes but they are not being used for defense. They are being sold elsewhere for other people's wars instead of providing for our defense. What are we here talking about? We are a nonbelligerent. We are supposed to be nonbelligerent. You know the people of the United States have the right to ask their President, Where are we going? Today the answer to that question is clear. With Roosevelt in the White House we are going to war.

We do not pretend to be neutral. We call ourselves a nonbelligerent, but with 50 American ships on the way to England, along with these planes and guns, we are heading straight for Europe. I know that our people hate everything that Hitler stands for, we despise dictatorship in any form, but I challenge anyone to tell us the difference between the Executive orders issued by Roosevelt and those issued by Hitler. We in America hate secret diplomacy, but every step in the negotiations between Great Britain and our Government is secret.

The order was secretly planned and secretly executed. We, the people, knew nothing until the deal was completed. I say to the American people that we cannot and must not tolerate this kind of government. Every one of us, no matter what his political views may be, must recognize that American traditions have been violated, flaunted, and ignored, in the Roosevelt order. We must stop now before it is too late. Roosevelt has started us on the road to war. There is only one way to get off that road. We must change drivers before the accident. We must change our national administration before it is too late.

Let me point out to you that it is 2 years almost to the hour of the Munich conference. You remember that week, the unholiest week in modern history, the Munich conference, when the umbrella man from England was there along with the umbrella man from France, and the umbrella man from America was sticking his nose into the whole business and taking credit for the deal. While willing to take credit for the deal at the time, his associates disclaim all responsibility after the transaction went sour. I ask you to examine the files of the New York Times or the New York Herald Tribune of 2 years ago this week. He received great credit for his participation, and for his having at that time, as they felt, averted a war because of his appeal for these nations to get together and work the thing out. The thing that was worked out was the betrayal of Czechoslovakia. In that betrayal the countries involved in the Munich conference almost sealed their own doom.

I say, what about this secret diplomacy, and what about all this business? I say it is essential that we on the floor of Congress at this time consider the implications that are involved in this whole situation. You will recall that Bismarck once said that whoever held Bohemia, or Czechoslovakia, as we better know it, controlled Europe. Here was a small nation, right in the cockpit of Europe, surrounded by natural barriers of mountains. Hitler after he had taken possession of Czechoslovakia marveled at the kind of a line they had. It had the Maginot line beaten in every respect. Here was a small nation with 1,400,000 troops trained, highly trained, the best soldiers in the world.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to this extension, but I may say to the gentleman that 20 minutes of debate by one speaker under the 5-minute rule is extremely liberal. I want the gentleman to have the time he wants because I am going to ask for 5 minutes to answer. I shall not object to the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. I say to you that here was this little nation with 1,400,000 trained men. In addition, they had 1,700 planes. Incidentally, the planes that were turned over to Hitler by Czechoslovakia were used to mow down the French, and many of them are being used today to mow down the British. They were used to mow down the Dutch, the Belgians, and the Poles. When they took over Czechoslovakia they took over the finest munitions works in the world, the Skoda Works. They took over 171 tanks, and the Skoda Works had for delivery to France over 70 tanks. The tanks they had for delivery to France were used to conquer the French.

It was one of the blackest pages in the history of the world when that little nation, our ally during the war and the ally of the Allies, was sold down the river, and sold down the river by a combination of leaders who were supposed to know what was going on. As the distinguished gentleman from Michigan pointed out, Lindbergh visited the plants in Germany. He was with an attaché of the American Embassy in Berlin, and certainly he could readily see and tell the people of America what Hitler was doing.

We in our short-sighted policy here have waited until the eleventh hour to rearm and provide for defense. We are paying premium prices now for defense mechanisms which, if Mr. Roosevelt had been on his toes and had made the request of a Congress that was his, if he had asked for the money, it would have most certainly been forthcoming. If he had let us in on what the picture was, or if he had known what the picture was, certainly we would have provided the money for him. Every appropriation bill for defense passed with very little argument when he told us that our country was in danger and our defenses needed to be strengthened.

I was in an elevator of the Mayflower Hotel with a group of men, and joined in the conversation with them. These men had contracts for war materials. They said, "Is it not a pity that we did not know this sooner. Our Government is spending double the amount of money for materials that it would have paid under ordinary circumstances."

Let me say this about the economic whirlwind of which the gentleman from California and my distinguished friend from Virginia, the chairman of the subcommittee, spoke. We are in that economic whirlwind today because of the manner in which the whole system has been unbalanced by spending us into a condition where today no one knows what will happen next. Our first line of defense is to keep our people employed. We find now as many people unemployed as when the present administration went into power. They have had 8 years in which to perform, and in giving an account of their stewardship they can point to 10,000,000 people unemployed today. They can point to secret diplomacy and the lack of knowledge of international affairs.

They ask us today to think about the economic repercussions and the position in which we will find ourselves after it is over. My God, men, what position do we find ourselves in today and what condition do we find the country in today? It is certainly a most unwholesome condition. Certainly, with the country in debt to the extent of some $50,000,000,000, the woman who said she had a mortgage of $48,000,000,000 on her home when the census taker came around was absolutely right. She now has a mortgage of about $50,000,000,000, and she does not know whether she is afoot or ahorseback, and neither do any of the rest of us. [Applause.]

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HENNINGS. I would like to ask the gentleman how he has voted on defense measures, naval appropriations, and expansion bills.

Mr. BENDER. I voted for every one of them.

Mr. HENNINGS. The gentleman has voted for all defense measures?

Mr. BENDER. Absolutely; every one of them.

Mr. HENNINGS. I am glad to know that. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has injected a partisan note into this discussion of a defense measure which comes before the House with a unanimous report from both the subcommittee and the full committee. There has been no politics in the Appropriations Committee in the consideration of these defense items. There has not always been unanimity of opinion on procedure or on amount or things of that sort, but the only inquiry has been what is needed to give us the defense that we think America ought to have. So I am sorry to see it used as a vehicle for any sort of political discussion.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Sure.

Mr. RICH. Did the gentleman say this is a unanimous report from the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is what I said.

Mr. RICH. Did not the gentleman hear the "noes" that were uttered in the committee meeting this morning?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, the gentleman votes "no"—I hear that frequently.

Mr. RICH. How does the gentleman know that I voted "no"? I am sure there were a number of "noes" in the committee.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will examine the report he will see no minority report filed when the bill was ordered reported. Is the gentleman against the bill?

Mr. RICH. No; the question I asked the gentleman was whether this was a unanimous report from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Maybe I am wrong, and I will seek to correct myself by asking if the gentleman is for the bill or against it.

Mr. RICH. I will tell the gentleman this: There is merit to having national defense, but I say you are going too fast to be sensible and you will see the time in the next 2 or 3 years when there will be extravagance in the administration of these great sums you are appropriating for national defense, and I think you are going entirely too fast, if the gentleman would like my own opinion.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman and I appreciate that. Now, would the gentleman be good enough to point out what particular item in here we went a little too fast on?

Mr. RICH. Of the $12,000,000,000 you are appropriating for war now, you will find that you cannot spend that money judiciously and wisely in the way you are trying to make the appropriation. I think you are not using good common business sense in giving these Departments, including the War Department and the Navy Department and the President, everything they want, and you have no knowledge of where you are going to get this money to carry on in the extravagance appropriations.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman; and now will the gentleman go back to the question I asked him, as to which one of the items that the committee unanimously reported we should take out of the bill?

Mr. RICH. If I started in, I would cut every item down by quite a considerable sum.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is going to have an opportunity to offer amendments all through the bill to any item he thinks is too much.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows that if I offered any amendments here on the floor this afternoon the gentleman would call in the New Deal organization and I would not have a ghost of a show to cut down any appropriation. Anybody who tries to buck up against the Congress we have now to cut down spending might as well go out and bump his head against the side of this Capitol Building here. He would get just as much results in that way as to offer amendments for economy in spending in this Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think any amendment the gentleman would offer to cripple this defense program would not stand a ghost of a show, because I have too much confidence in the judgment of the Committee to think otherwise.

Now, to get away from this bit of pleasantry with my belligerent friend from Pennsylvania, it is hard to follow the reasoning of some gentlemen who in one breath are complaining because the present administration did not start way back and build up an adequate defense, and in the next breath are complaining because now that we are building it up we are leading the Nation to war. I think they ought to make up their minds whether they are for it or not. Mr. Willkie made that great mistake. He said that the President intervened at Munich and sold Czechoslovakia down the river, committing that blunder that so many of us make sometimes when we talk about something without being pretty careful that we know what we are talking about.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The only mistake Mr. Willkie made was that he used the word "telephone" instead of "telegraph."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No.

Mr. TABER. The rest of it was just as Mr. Willkie told it, according to the announcement of the State Department.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; the President did at Munich what the American Republic always has been in favor of in trying to use its economic and its moral influence to settle disputes around the conference table rather than to take them to war.

The President did at Munich what he has done time and again since this world conflagration started. He begged, implored, and pleaded with the belligerent war-hungry people of Europe to try to settle their disputes, but he did not undertake to tell them how to settle them.

Mr. JONKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. JONKMAN. Is not that what they call "appeasement"?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, the gentleman can call it what he wants to. He can call it "appeasement" if he wishes, but after all, knowing the implications of this world conflagration I believe the people of this country would want to see their country use its moral influence if it could to try to avert this catastrophe that we are driven into and that now makes it necessary for us, for defense purposes, to obligate our Government for these stupendous sums.

Mr. BENDER. But not to intervene.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But not to intervene. There has been no intervention whatsoever. Everything that has been done, so far as I know, has been approved, at least tacitly approved—maybe belatedly approved—by the leaders on that side of the aisle; certainly by the candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Are there any funds provided for in this bill for development of the naval and air bases on the British possessions in the Atlantic?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Does the gentleman know whether the Appropriations Committee has considered any funds for this purpose?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We have not. We have understood that if such funds are needed they will be provided, in part, at least, out of the emergency fund that the Congress gave the President for emergency purposes. There has been no specific recommendation.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I would like to ask a question in all seriousness, if there has been any more investigation concerning this bill than there was on the original $5,000,000,000 bill? The reason I ask that is this: Shortly after that, I would say about a month, a very well-known businessman came to my office. I have known him a long time and he is very close to people who have been connected with the defense program. He said, "What were you thinking of when you voted for $5,000,000,000? Do you not know that the sum is outrageous? I have talked to manufacturers who have been contacted in connection with these contracts. They say the Army does not know what it wants. They say that industry does not know how to accept $5,000,000,000. They think it is a ridiculous sum to appropriate, and apparently there was no rhyme or reason for it." Some of us do not want to vote for appropriations and have that kind of protest made. The conversation I had with him led me to think that his protest was justified.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman was probably one of that group of citizens who will be calling upon Members of the House and Senate, where they have sought war contracts and have not been successful in getting them. [Applause.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I assure you that this information was not from that kind of source. It was an old, old friend; in fact, a lawyer.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Seven billion dollars' worth of contracts have been let to American manufacturers who have accepted those contracts. You will find in the Defense Commission, if you are interested, progress charts showing exactly what will happen and the dates upon which these deliveries will be made. Those facts were laid before our committee. The astute, able, careful, and cautious gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] was there to assist us in going over these matters, and, as far as I am concerned, I do not think there is the slightest doubt about the fact that the Army and Navy know what they want. They have a definite, concrete program. They are going to be able to award these contracts and expend this money for the purpose for which we appropriated it.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I think I ought to say to the gentleman that I have a great deal of confidence in him and I wanted that assurance from him.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the lady, and I am glad to give it.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The information I have with reference to most of these contracts is that practically half the funds which were carried in that $5,300,000,000 bill have already been contracted for and operations are under way for the rest of it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think that is right.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is there any provision in the Constitution, or any rule of law, that would prevent any of the gentlemen who are making these criticisms from originating the idea, the necessity for preparedness 2 years ago about which they are complaining?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the gentleman's question answers itself.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, whether he does not share with me a certain feeling of discouragement when the gentleman from Virginia and myself tried today to point out some things that obviously any American needs to be concerned about and to face, and then when suggestions are made that there is a terrific partisan point to be made about these matters from representatives of a political party which to my knowledge has never put forward any constructive program for facing these issues that we have presented?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think it is unfortunate to inject partisanship. We have got enough stuff that the two political parties can quarrel about—plenty of it. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I am led to take these few minutes because I am somewhat stirred by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. He says that we must protect ourselves and the whole Western Hemisphere. Send forth the news to all South American nations and Canada that no matter whether they prepare or not, that we will protect the entire Western Hemisphere. And he also said that we have no allies we can depend upon, and that we stand all alone. It occurred to me that we have done a good deal lately to make friends and allies among the other nations of the Western Hemisphere. But he has proclaimed today: "You need not spend any money in arming. We, the United States, are going to take care of the Western Hemisphere." That is most disturbing to me. Does he discount the agreements made at the Habana Conference?

I have not allowed politics to influence me in these defense measures. I voted to repeal the embargo. I think that our first line of defense is Great Britain, and that we should help her all we can. That is my attitude. Politics or no politics, that is my viewpoint.

But the best-laid plans amount to nothing now. One hopeful sign I have. I recall to you the words spoken by the gentleman from Virginia yesterday evening:

> The Congress should keep a firmer hand on the administration.

Did you read that? That is indeed encouraging to me. But day by day as the days pass something new occurs. Are we Congressmen not disturbed today after the proceedings of yesterday when Secretary Hull said to the French people, "We are interested in Indochina. All the material we can possibly spare will be sent to you. And we will now refrain from sending Japan war material." Do not all thoughtful men in this Nation foresee a newer and a greater peril by far than has yet appeared on the horizon? Are we to be held dumb today?

But diplomatic action always precedes congressional action, and all we can do is to mop up results of whatever decision may have been made by the State Department. But as I read that statement made on yesterday I foresee serious consequences. That there would be a tripartite agreement between England, the French Vichy Government, and ourselves to see to it that Japan does not further invade Indochina is apparent. If this is the understanding we are led in a little quicker by a back door little expected and from which we may not be able to retreat.

I am voting for this appropriation. I cannot, of course, criticize the President for this recent action, much as I blame him for many things relative to our economic tottering condition. But like the English Government, like the French Government, those in power should have insisted on preparedness for defense, although they might have been relieved of their positions. Their successors probably would not have done better, but they should have warned their people. I claim that we were not convinced of this necessity even 1 or 2 years ago—neither party was. That did not excuse those leaders who were informed. I do not excuse the British or French Ministry in power for not daring to tell their people of conditions in Germany because they feared they would lose their jobs. I have little sympathy for that lack of courage. Roosevelt ought to have insisted, if he knew; but he just talked about the edges in matters of defense, and what money we gave him for defense he spent only for light housekeeping.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does it not seem to the gentleman that it would be extremely helpful if the President told us just what he knew about the situation in the Far East and Europe? I believe everyone knows that the reason the British are doing so extremely well is because they have been told the truth by Winston Churchill. They know just what to expect.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am sure the lady understands that Roosevelt does not trust this Congress whether it be the matter of selling ships or scarce anything else.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want time enough to excuse myself for entering this debate at the moment. I am too much aroused over the situation to hold my peace. Rest assured, however, most of us are watching and worrying about our diplomacy. I happen to be in a position where I have been able to talk with men who know more about these matters than I. Thank God, I hope that those who are in authority know what they are doing. I am somewhat like the boy who did not know what he was fighting for. He said, "I am fighting for my rights." "What are your rights?" "Perhaps I do not know, but there's them that does know." I do earnestly hope "there's them that does know." [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in discussing this appropriation bill I want to read from the report of the committee two paragraphs [reading]:

Assuming the instant bill becomes law carrying the appropriations and contractual authority recommended by the committee, the Congress will have made available to the Army and Navy for the fiscal year 1941 a total of $8,334,700,507 by way of immediate appropriation, and $3,802,132,009 by way of contractual authority. The grand total would be $12,136,832,516.

That sum excludes commitments sanctioned for constructing approximately 349 naval ships, excluding a number of small patrol craft, the total estimated cost of which, exclusive of the added expense attendant upon emergency construction, has been represented to be $4,734,051,880.

A few moments ago the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER] made a statement about a certain manufacturer who could not understand what all the appropriations were being made for. I want to say that I, a Member of Congress and a member of the Appropriations Committee, am baffled. I do not know what they are all for. We have not been told except as we get these reports. We got this bill in the Appropriations Committee and had just about an hour and fifteen minutes on the bill in committee. You talk about billions and say these are just the items we need for war, and they only came up in the last few minutes. A manufacturer in this country cannot fathom these great sums. They do not speak in terms of billions. You can see how much brighter and more intelligent the Members of Congress are than the businessmen of this country. That is the point I think the gentlewoman from Illinois was trying to make, the inability of the businessmen of this country to fathom what the Congress is doing. I share in that inability of the manufacturer who asked her the question.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I was additionally disturbed when, a few weeks later—I think it is within the past 2 or 3 weeks—I read in Collier's magazine an article by Davenport which showed his investigation of conditions in Detroit where they had attempted to fill defense orders and had gotten themselves enmeshed in red tape with politicians and were in a very great turmoil.

Mr. RICH. Well, that can easily happen. I am for national defense, and I want to do everything I can for national defense to protect this country against aggression from anybody, whether it be in the Eastern or Western Hemisphere. The best way we could do that is to tell the President of the United States and the public officials to keep their noses and their fingers out of other people's business. That is the first thing we ought to do, else we are going to be in a war in the next 6 months or a year. What business is it of Secretary Hull to go over there and monkey around in Indochina at the present time? He will get us into war with the Japanese. We do not want to go over there 4,000 miles to fight Japan, nor do we want to go 3,000 miles to fight Hitler. I say let us stay in our own back yards.

Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated $12,000,000,000 for the operations of the Government before we started appropriating for war. Our income next year will be $5,600,000,000, according to the present estimate—$1,007,000,000 under the tax bill we put through recently and then about $230,000,000 from another tax bill, called the excess-profits tax, which was recommended by the Ways and Means Committee. That will only be a drop in the bucket compared with the amount we have appropriated and authorized. By the time the next administration comes in power—and I am sure it will be a Republican administration—we are going to have a real problem in America in trying to handle the finances of this country and make it safe financially to carry on our Government in a sound business way. At the rate this Congress spends it will be necessary to tax our people till they almost break their backs to carry the burden we are now imposing on them. We will break down financially unless we do, and that is a terrible situation for any country to be in or for any people. A sound country needs a sound government, a sound financial structure.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, while considering a little bill here for only thirteen hundred millions of dollars, a supplemental national-defense appropriation, I think we might listen to our constituents. They sometimes wonder what this money is to be used for, then wonder what the men are to be used for that the money will support. I may say, first, that I have voted for every appropriation bill for defense purposes since I have been a Member of this Congress, and I have advocated national defense for long years before that, for we must be prepared to defend ourselves until the world permanently abandons war as a means of settling disputes.

Now, let me read to you from a copy of a letter which was addressed to the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States, by a constituent of mine:

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I see by the papers that Japanese troops have marched into French Indochina and that you are again viewing with alarm and considering the appropriate steps to take to counteract this move.

I realize I am dumb, but for the life of me I can't seem to get very much worked up over what's taking place 8,000 miles from our shores. In fact, I had to look at the globe map to find out where French Indochina is.

I sincerely hope that you are not planning any drastic steps, such, for instance, as those designed to throw Japan out of there. If you are planning any such steps on my account (and for my fellow Americans), please drop the whole thing right now. Of course, I know there is tin in French Indochina and that we need tin. But did it ever occur to any of the bright boys in Washington that we could perhaps buy that tin as well from Japan as from the French (or the English intermediaries)? Maybe this is too obvious a solution and one not in keeping with diplomacy, but if it is, just skip it. As I said above, I'm just plain dumb. But, at that, I should like to inquire how many $70,000,000 battleships, $200,000 airplanes, etc., not to mention several hundred thousand lives, we can afford to spend in order to maintain status quo in such an ungodly place as French Indochina.

While I am about it, I should like to inquire if anyone in Washington has ever given consideration to the possibility of cultivating Japan's friendship. I have an idea that if we would quit making faces at her and begin treating her as a civilized nation, we might find that we didn't need a two-ocean navy after all. But, I repeat, I'm just dumb.

And, by the way, what's this business of our sending the U. S. S. Augusta to Singapore? Don't we have enough worries already without deliberately breeding more? God, one would think we were a part of the British Empire, the way we are acting.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. R. MCGILL.

Mr. Chairman, whether or not we agree with all of the sentiments expressed in this letter, yet Mr. McGill has raised a number of questions that will be raised by others. The people will want to know the answers. They are entitled to know them, for it is their blood and their treasure that may be called upon, and will be sacrificed in the event the United States decides to intervene in Asia. Would that sacrifice be worth what is hoped to be gained, and what is to be gained by it?

The term "status quo" is not understood by many people, but, simply, it refers to the condition of things existing at the time. When we say that it is to our interest to maintain the status quo in the Orient we then mean that it is to our interest to have French Indochina stay a colony of France, Java a colony of Holland, China a free republic, Australia and India colonies of England, and so forth. There is no question that it is to our interest to maintain the status quo in the Orient for the time being at least. That condition would give us assurance of oriental trade and commerce without interruption, and we need tin, rubber, silk, and tea from the Orient. The question is, however, would it be worth our blood and battleships and the aftermath of war if it became necessary to fight in order to maintain it, and Mr. McGill properly raises that question.

It is to our interest as a nation that peace be established and maintained throughout the world. When "things as they are"—the status quo—is challenged by some dissatisfied nation, then there is war. The rest of the world has now been challenged by Germany, Italy, Russia, and Japan, a powerful combination. They have determined to change things.

They intend to take from England her colonial empire, and they hold France and Holland and other European empires by the throat. They do not immediately threaten the United States, but because of their methods of doing business and their forms of government they are a threat to our foreign trade and perhaps to our own cherished form of government if they succeed in becoming the dominating power. For those reasons we hope that England is not defeated, and we render England every aid that we can without ourselves entering the war.

But in the Orient we have what appears to be a very difficult situation. All of these European countries either have Oriental colonies or hope to win them as the result of war. Meantime, while they are busy fighting each other in Europe, Japan is busy gobbling up the colonies, or at least pointing that way. It would appear to be in the interest of Germany and Italy and Russia, as well as of England and France and Holland, to prevent Japan from taking these colonial possessions, certainly until they can settle their fight in Europe. It would be to Russia's interest for Japan to be out of China.

Apparently the only nation of consequence that is not at war just now is the United States. We are known not to have ambitions toward establishing a colonial empire. Consequently it would be very convenient to these European nations if the United States would engage Japan in a war, or at least prevent Japan from doing any colony gobbling until the war in Europe is over and those countries have a chance to again center their attention in the Orient.

Of course, Germany would also like to do something that would prevent us giving aid to England. If the United States could just be gotten into war with Japan, then aid to England would have to be curtailed, so Germany would have a double purpose in fomenting a war between the United States and Japan.

It is quite evident that we in this country are in a most dangerous situation. For a long time we have been on the slippery path toward war, and yet we have done very little to prepare for it until quite recently. Now we are engaged in an hysterical scramble for preparedness which may lead us beyond our desires.

I do not claim to know the answers, but I have an idea that for our own welfare and for the future welfare of the world as well, we should not permit ourselves to engage in any war unless it be brought to us in the Western Hemisphere; that we should not attempt to settle the questions in the Orient nor to aggravate the frictions there, but to concentrate on rehabilitating our own country, our own economy, our own defenses, and continue to give such aid as we rightly can to Great Britain.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have been surprised at the criticisms of a great many Members of this House when they talk constantly about what Roosevelt might have done 2 years ago, what he might have recommended, and when I recall especially that there is no provision in the Constitution, no law, no rule, that I know of or have ever heard of that would have prevented those brilliant gentlemen themselves from raising this question of the necessity of a powerful preparedness for defense 2 years ago. In looking up the RECORD, I have not found a single one of these gentlemen critics who had anything to say on that subject.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I ask that the gentleman look at the discussion that took place between the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] and myself 2 years ago with reference to an appropriation for airplanes and flying fortresses.

Mr. KELLER. Of course, we have been talking about airplanes for a good many years. I am talking about the matter of general defense as we are doing it now.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will look at the RECORD he will find the answer.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Arkansas talked sensibly on that subject 2 years ago; they are the most distinguished men in this House on that subject, and I take off my hat to both of them, if they really did.

But I repeat that what the American people ought to see is these gentlemen who are pushing out these criticisms on Mr. Roosevelt for not seeing and not announcing and not "telling a cockeyed world all about it." None of these critics did it; yet there was no law preventing their doing it. If they had so much brains to foresee it, why did not they do it? They are Members of this House, and some of them are bragging considerably about the duty of this House to do these very things. I should have been delighted to join with them, because before very many Members of this House here now saw it I not only wrote on the subject but wrote a bill covering the subject of preparedness in this country at the request of Senator Chamberlain, of Oregon, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, in February 1916. I know a little bit about it, not a lot, because I do not believe anybody knows too much. But I am getting tired of the criticism here of the gentlemen who are so eternally criticizing the administration, when they had the same opportunity and never used it at all. They are demonstrating how much better their hindsight is than their foresight has been.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. I made a speech in 1937 on the floor of this House on preparedness, a speech which the Chief of Staff and the Army officials all received.

Mr. KELLER. Fine. I sent out 5,000 of them, and I am not up here bragging about foreseeing it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. RICH. In the appropriations for the War and the Navy Departments 2 and 3 years ago it was discussed on the floor of the House that we needed a larger air force and less naval construction and less money spent in other ways, but they did not seem to take to that, because nobody wanted to increase our air force.

Mr. KELLER. I said I would yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. RICH. They have taken advantage of that. The gentleman knows that an air force and mechanized warfare, according to Hitler's results, are the things that made Hitler's army great.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest, something like 15 years ago, at least, General Billy Mitchell brought up this whole subject of airplanes. He should have been listened to and he was not. That was a mistake. The 12 years of Republican rule was noted for its complete disintegration of our Army and Navy.

Mr. RICH. It was not 15 years ago.

Mr. KELLER. About that time, following the World War. He ought to have been listened to. But what is the sense of getting up here and laying it all onto one man? I do not think this House, as a rule, wants any one man to do all our thinking for us. I am glad when the President leads. I am glad that he had the courage to announce conditions so dramatically that it awakened this body to conditions as they are, because if he had not done so we would be sitting here with our fingers crossed, and our eyes closed, and there would be nothing doing toward this whole program of preparedness, and there is no question at all about that. We ought to be honest enough to admit it, and patriotic enough to be glad of it. I am going to go on insisting that we do see that fact in the case. I am glad he had the courage and the foresight to say all these things to us so that we could finally be awakened to the facts in the case.

Mr. RICH. Who is the indispensible man?

Mr. KELLER. BOB RICH, I think, to Mrs. Rich.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot of talk about what the situation is with reference to national defense and what it has been over the past few years, and this has caused me to make a study of the situation, going over the appropriation bills of the last 8 years for military activities. With the permission of the House I shall extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD covering that situation.

While I have the floor at the moment I am going to call attention to a few of the items the Congress, with the approval and on the recommendation of the War Department subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, has been able to accomplish. It has made a material accomplishment in developing our military defenses. I am not going to make this political, but it is entirely a matter of what the Congress has done.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman says he is not going to make it political. I am sure he would not, and I am sure what the gentleman will put in the RECORD will be very enlightening. However, it will be more enlightening if the gentleman will go back through the three administrations prior to 8 years ago and put in the RECORD what was done during that period.

Mr. TABER. At a time when we were protected by disarmament treaties and when we did not have the Hitler menace to contend with? We have had the Hitler menace to contend with the last 7 years.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman has tried to bring politics into what I was trying to bring out as a development of Congress. I will not yield to anyone else to interfere with what I intend to say. Any time anybody tries to get the truth out here somebody tries in some cheap way or other to bring politics into it.

I am going to tell you a few of the things the Congress has done. In the 1934 bill over $9,000,000 was added on the recommendation of the House Appropriations Committee to build up the National Guard, at the time the President recommended a cut of $4,000,000. In the 1935 bill a start on mechanization of a substantial character was made when for combat automobiles and tanks the Congress added to the recommendations of the President $2,119,200. In the same year an increase beyond the President's request for experimental and development work in connection with airplanes of upward of $1,000,000 was provided. In connection with the procurement of airplanes, Congress also revised the number of planes to be purchased so that those obtained would be more useful and more suitable for defense purposes. Congress provided for continuing the work of the Chemical Warfare Service upon an increased basis, and refused to swallow a cut proposed by the President of 33⅓ percent.

In 1936 the Army training pay for the National Guard was again increased and the equipment for the guard was increased. Amongst the increased activities of the Department there was $475,000 provided above the Budget for the purchase of tanks, a considerable amount of munitions, and helmets.

Under the Air Corps nearly $5,000,000 additional was provided for 97 planes in addition to those recommended by the President.

It made a second forward step in forcing a clean-up of overage officers which the Department had neglected for many years.

In this bill, the 1936 bill, Congress also provided a larger expenditure for the upkeep of military posts.

In the 1937 bill a program for improving the seacoast defenses, involving $6,725,000, was incorporated, for which the President made no recommendation, and they also provided $1,300,000, not recommended by the Budget, for modernizing the artillery of the National Guard and increasing its strength by adding additional contractual authority for the purchase of 58 additional planes to those already recommended.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. In the 1938 bill for the Air Corps, $6,783,000 was provided in contractual authority for the purpose of providing for an increase in cost of planes which had come about as the result of increased wages, so that the number of planes needed to keep the Army's quota up in full might be available.

This same year on the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee, additional funds were provided to recondition 800 of the 75-millimeter guns so that these guns might be modern and up to date. This was also without a recommendation of the Budget.

Another increase was provided in that bill of $800,000 above the figures recommended by the President so that this work might move along promptly and in good order.

The amount of the President's recommendations for the National Guard was increased for ammunition and modernizing equipment and guns by $1,468,000.

In the 1939 bill the work of the Ordnance Corps seemed to be lagging and reappropriations of $1,249,000 were necessary because of the failure of the Department to use the funds provided.

Now, in spite of all these things that the Congress had done, in addition to the recommendations of the President, and every one of them along vital lines, the Army subcommittee was told a couple of years ago that our research and development work was 5 years behind the Germans. Every single item that has been requested by the President to advance these things has been done. In addition to that, in this period that we are in now, since the 1st of January, the Congress, of its own motion, has provided funds on the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee for adding to the Regular Army 95,000 troops. It has, without a recommendation from the President, added $128,000,000 for the housing of the National Guard, and it has provided every single thing that seemed to be needed and that could in any way be thought of.

It seems to me that while, perhaps, Congress has not known everything that should have been done and has not appropriated every dollar that the most far-seeing person might have suggested, yet the Congress has gone ahead of the President and the Budget in every essential item of national defense. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, permit me to implement the remarks of the gentleman from New York and to express this thing in a rather compact way.

The first thing that the Members should have in mind is the question of what funds were requested by the President and the Budget Bureau for national defense. The second question is how much did the Congress provide, and the third question is what was the thinking and the demands of the country in relation to this problem?

Two months ago I addressed myself to this question on the floor of the House, and after obtaining the figures from the War Department itself indicated that for the 8 years, including the fiscal year 1933, the Budget Bureau and the President requested of the Congress substantially three and three-quarters billion dollars for the Army. Of that amount we gave them everything except 1 percent. We cut off only $37,000,000. Consequently, if there were any deficiencies or inadequacies in this whole defense structure, the blame must be laid on the doorstep of the Budget Bureau, which is the mouthpiece or instrumentality of the President of the United States and which occupies a spot in the Executive Offices. That is an answer in itself.

On the third question, what was the thinking of the country on national defense; there are folks, you know, who believe in the infallibility of the Gallup poll, and it is rather interesting sometimes to go back and see what they said 2 or 3 years ago.

You know this is the second anniversary of Munich, and 8 months before Munich, in January of 1938, the Gallup poll submitted this question to the people:

Should the United States build a larger Navy?

The answer was 74 percent in the affirmative.

Should the United States increase the strength of its Army?

The answer was 69 percent in the affirmative.

Should the United States enlarge its air force?

The answer to that was 80 percent in the affirmative.

This was 8 months before Munich, in January of 1938, and three times in that year the same proposals were submitted to the people of the country, and in each succeeding poll the percentage in the affirmative increased.

The people of the country were thinking ahead of the President of the United States on the whole question of national defense long before the Munich matter ever acutely crystallized the sentiment and made that poll go even higher. So that the people and the Congress were alert to the situation. They gave the President substantially what he wanted, and if there is any culpability, let it not be laid upon the doorstep of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. HORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HORTON. Have you any figures that would show what the Army and Navy requested of the Budget, which is a request to the President?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was speaking of the Military Establishment and indicating what came up here in the form of requests through the Budget Bureau.

Mr. HORTON. I do not mean that. I want to know what the Army and the Navy requested of the Bureau of the Budget; not what the Budget requested of the Congress. It seems to me that is the point, because the President was advised by the Army and the Navy of their requirements. Did the President in his message to the Congress indicate the requests of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no. They are under some interdiction when they come before the Appropriations Committee, and the only way we can get that information is by a direct question to the gentleman who may be testifying, asking him, "Despite the recommendation of the Budget message, how much did you ask for?" I do not know what the answer is. I do know what came here in the form of requests from the White House. I know what the Congress gave. They gave them what they wanted; but the executive branch was behind the thinking of the country, as indicated by the Gallup poll, if that is an instrument of infallibility.

Mr. HORTON. But you do not know whether the request of the President reflected the requests of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The chances are that those who were on the military appropriations subcommittee and the naval appropriations subcommittee, if they asked the question, could have elicited that information.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just by way of pleasantry, does the gentleman believe in the accuracy and infallibility of the Gallup poll?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say to my friend from Virginia that I cross my fingers on that matter as to whether they are infallible or not. [Laughter and applause.]

Perhaps one should observe that the Gallup poll is a most engaging thing. Either it is right or wrong, and those who rely upon this poll to prove the weight of public sentiment behind conscription, or the popularity of a candidate now, can hardly argue that the poll was wrong in 1938 in indicating to the President, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of this country, what the sentiment was in respect to a more adequate national defense. Reliance upon the poll now is a confession of dereliction as early as 8 months before Munich.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For welfare of enlisted men, $2,572,594.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GUYER of Kansas: Page 2, line 25, after the heading of "Welfare, enlisted men", strike out the period, insert a colon and the proviso, "Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated under this head shall be available for expenditure for the operation and maintenance of facilities where intoxicating beverages are sold or dispensed."

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it is a limitation upon an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HENNINGS. Only to say that it undertakes to place a limitation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. There is no question about that. That is what it does.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GAVAGAN). The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair feels that as the bill under consideration is a general appropriation bill, appropriating among other things funds for the personnel of the Army, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] is a proper limitation upon the use of the money and therefore in order. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point of order.

The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to tire the House with an address on this occasion. I do not think there is a Member of this House who does not feel just as I do about the desirability of limiting the use of intoxicating liquors in the Army.

I call attention to the fact that the Vichy Government has placed alcoholism as one of the main reasons for the collapse of the French Army. It was saturated with alcohol. You could not expect it to win.

This has nothing to do with any radical idea about drinking. It is a question of the welfare and efficiency of the boys who are taken to camp. A mother wrote to me and said, "For God's sake, if you are going to take my boy to camp don't give him liquor there, please."

I think the boys who go to the camp should be protected in this way from the injurious effects of alcohol, and especially for the sake of the defense of the country.

After the surrender of the French Army and the ghost of France set up at Vichy, General Petain has imposed upon the most bibulous people on earth a regime of prohibition which if instituted 20 years ago the great debacle in northern France and Belgium would never have occurred. That French Army a decade ago was the best army in the world, and if the present regulations with respect to drinking had been in vogue the past 10 or 12 years there would have been a different tale about liberty-loving France. But as it is she has suffered a far greater defeat and disgrace than at Waterloo a century and a quarter ago.

Today France has banished all liquors containing more than 16 percent alcoholic content and during 3 days of the week absolute prohibition. All this was the result of a military commission of experts reporting that alcohol had caused the collapse of the proud Army of France.

It was also concluded by this commission that one of the four most difficult problems facing conquered France was drunkenness.

The military leaders of the United States can read a lesson in the story of defeated France. With the recent development of mechanized and aerial warfare, total abstinence becomes a military necessity.

This amendment suggests that we do not wait like conquered France until the war is over to adopt a system for a sober army but to begin now as a necessary policy of the Army. This will conserve the health, wealth, and morals of the young men of the Nation. Gen. John Barleycorn must be driven out of camp and then put only sober generals, sober soldiers, and sober pilots on guard.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] will be harmful rather than beneficial to the men in the Army. This money undoubtedly will be used at new Army posts where the men selected under the Conscription Act will be housed. Is it not bad enough to take these boys away from their homes without depriving them of a glass of beer if they want it? I know I am not going to deprive men who might be required to defend my country of anything that I can get. Aside from that it will be in the interest of temperance to let them have beer.

The recreational facilities at the Army posts do not sell hard liquor. They sell beer. If you are going to say to the men, "You cannot have beer," there is danger that they will go out and get a bottle of something stronger and bring it to the posts.

There are millions of men in this country who drink nothing stronger than beer, so why do something that might result in their cultivating a taste for something they do not now want?

All post exchanges throughout the United States now sell beer. The placing of this limitation in this bill would not stop the sale of intoxicating liquors in all the Army posts throughout the country, but just where this money might be spent in new posts. Then again if they are not able to get beer inside the post, they will get it on the outside. The gentleman from Kansas knows that.

It looks to me that such a move as this might encourage the bootlegger to operate around the post.

I say the amendment should be voted down in the interest of the boys he seems to desire to protect. The more beer the young men drink, if it will keep them away from hard liquor, the better off they are going to be. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GUYER of Kansas) there were—ayes 16, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For horses, draft, and pack animals, $3,366,340.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

THE PLACE OF CAVALRY IN MODERN WAR

Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of misunderstanding, I think, as to the place of cavalry in modern warfare. During the hearings on the regular appropriation bill General Herr, Chief of Cavalry, in answer to some questions which we asked him, gave us some very interesting information. At my request, he prepared for us a statement on the subject, incorporating some remarks made by General Reilly, Officers Reserve Corps, and some observations by Colonel Hardy, Chief of the Remount Service, relative to the use of horses in the Polish campaign. Under permission previously granted by the House, I wish at this point to insert some excerpts from that statement.

[Extracts of the comments of Maj. Gen. John K. Herr, Chief of Cavalry, before the Subcommittee on Military Affairs, of the Committee on Appropriations, March 11, 1940]

It must be remembered that instead of charging with drawn sabers or lances the modern cavalry rarely fights mounted; for the most part it fights dismounted. It simply maneuvers mounted in order to get advantageous positions.

There are times when mounted action or when it may be used chiefly by small units in the case of effective surprise or when conditions of enemy disorganization are such as to render it effective. Under no circumstances will foolish mounted attacks be made against overwhelming enemy fire. You must remember that in spite of the fact that the horse is rarely seen on the motor road, the man is also rarely seen on the motor road except when hitchhiking or driving a car and that horses may also be carried in motors when need be to reach quickly the theater of action.

After one arrives in the theater of action in modern war, there will be very little chance to use roads, certainly not in great masses or at any speed, and it is there that the great flexibility and mobility of horse cavalry reaches its apex of value.

FIELD OF CAVALRY EXPANDED BY MACHINES

It is true that the precise methods of employment as well as the scope of action of horse cavalry have been affected to a great extent by air and mechanization. It is also true that these new arms are able to do some of the things formerly done by cavalry, such as distance reconnaissance. It is also true that, by cooperation with the air and by utilization of mechanized cavalry in conjunction with horse cavalry, the scope and effectiveness of modern cavalry has been greatly amplified.

The missions of reconnaissance are amplified by depending on the air to discover the enemy main concentrations at great distances and by utilizing mechanized cavalry at a considerable distance and wherever the road net is suitable.

The efforts of the horse cavalry may thus be concentrated with greater effectiveness to the closer terrain and over all those intervening areas often heavily wooded and cut up by streams or gullies and which cannot be adequately observed by the air nor can they be combed by any vehicle of whatever nature. Only the man on foot or the man on horse can execute adequately these detailed ground reconnaissances and the man on the horse can do it much faster than the man on foot.

Also, it is only the noiseless horse patrols that are able to slip by enemy detachments, secure information, and return with it.

CANNOT TAKE PRISONERS FROM A DRIVER'S SEAT

In delaying action, although the mechanized cavalry can be used very effectively where the road net is good and the terrain suitable, it can by no means flow over the intervening terrain which is often accessible only to horse cavalry. It may be used in cooperation with the horse cavalry but it is not suited for this type of action when used alone to the same degree as is horse cavalry.

In the pursuit we find again that the power of destruction is greatly amplified by the use of the air and the mechanized cavalry but it must be remembered that these echelons are not alone capable of accomplishing the maximum destruction unless we have great groups of horse cavalry in addition.

The air will unquestionably bomb and machine gun disorganized enemy groups, particularly where they are on the roads or concentrated. Mechanized cavalry will strike them along the highways and on favorable terrain but an alert enemy, even though defeated, will take every opportunity to destroy the roads and bridges and other avenues of pursuit, even laying waste to the entire country in his rear. This will stop in great measure any pursuit by mechanized cavalry or infantry in trucks.

Horse cavalry, because it is independent of such means and can cross practically all obstacles is supreme. Furthermore it can take prisoners which cannot be done by the air and is very difficult for mechanization.

HORSE CAVALRY CAN COVER ANY TERRAIN

In spite of the unwise and ill-judged assault on the horse in war by many fanciful thinkers it is obvious that their deductions are founded on unsound conjectures and assumptions. They jump to the conclusion that because we have mechanized cavalry that it will exclude the horse cavalry. Nothing could be further from the truth because mechanized cavalry, although very valuable in increasing the scope of the entire cavalry, is in nowise suited to replace horse cavalry.

Whereas horse cavalry can flow over all types of terrain and is not confined to the roads insofar as the horse elements are concerned, and can be supplied by air or pack, mechanized cavalry is going to be chained largely to the roads and will not be able to maneuver over a great part of the terrain which is found on this continent and in this hemisphere. It has not the flexibility of horse cavalry for each man on his horse, armed with his rifle and pistol, is an independent fighting unit.

It must be remembered also that, although armored vehicles will shed lead bullets, they are just as susceptible of being pierced by armor-piercing projectiles as is the man with respect to the lead bullets of rifle and machine gun. No armored vehicle has been made or can be made that cannot be pierced by armor-piercing projectiles fired by guns which cost but a fraction of the price of the armored vehicle.

Our cavalry is not the medieval cavalry of popular imagination but is cavalry which is modernized and keeping pace with all developments. We are particularly fortunate in having great resources both in horses and motors. There are more than 10,000,000 horses in this country and the motor industry is conceded to be the greatest in the world.

No one can read that statement, I believe, and ever again have the idea that the horse is as obsolete as the dinosaur—as one Member expressed it in the hearings on the bill now before us. There simply are some places that only a man on foot or horseback can go. The motorized cavalry is the adaptation of horse cavalry to the conditions of modern war.

The actual use of cavalry in the present European war has received little attention in the press. On this subject, the observations by Colonel Hardy and General Reilly are illuminating. They were supplied us by General Herr, and I insert these extracts from their reports:

THE IMPORTANCE OF HORSES IN MODERN WARFARE

(By Col. Edwin N. Hardy, Q. M. C., Chief of the Remount Service)

Certain situations, reference terrain, climate, mission, road nets, etc., give horse cavalry particular importance not only as respects horse cavalry itself, but as respects horse and pack artillery and horse transport. Balance and coordination is what we must have in military establishments just as we must have in all other activities. Each element and each type of weapon has its own function, and as stated above, must be able to perform some things better than anything else can do them.

We do not realize the great number of horses which have been used and are being used by the German Army since the outbreak of the European war in September 1939. Below are extracts from an article, The Horse in Poland, from the October 1939 issue of Sankt Georg, a German magazine.

"All cavalry will be interested in the part which the horse played on the German side in the Polish campaign. In this connection we may state without any exaggeration that the rapid advance of the Germany Army would have been impossible without the horse, and, furthermore, horses proved their worth in the manner that was expected. To be sure, the significance of the motorized and mechanized forces is unquestionable, but cavalry formations * * * moved at almost the same rate of speed. In accordance with the communications of the headquarters staff of the Wehrmacht in its report dealing with the campaign in Poland, five armies took part in the great decision. According to this, we may assume * * * that Germany used more than 200,000 horses in the campaign in Poland and that this large number made possible the pace of advance of the attacking armies."

The report of the German headquarters staff dealing with the campaign recognized horse cavalry in a special manner by saying:

"Division commanders expressed particular appreciation of the activity of their cavalry in their reports to the Fuehrer, who was on the battlefield with his soldiers. We also have reports of conspicuous cavalry actions led by separate squadrons. As an example, a squadron in the South Army, led by a well-known race-horse rider, boldly attacked a Polish battery set up on difficult terrain (in a great vineyard, rising terracelike) and captured it. The losses were small in spite of a direct hit within the squadron.

"When the weather (which during the main was extremely favorable and did not offer any obstacles to the advance of the motorized and mechanized units) became bad during the final concluding operations, cavalry and horse-drawn battalions came more into their own."

The above supplies us with the most recent examples of the use of horses in modern warfare as we are as yet without reports as to horse activities in the Battle of Flanders and the Battle of France. There were noticed, however, among the first pictures of the Germany Army to be received from France after its capitulation, those of horse cavalry, horse artillery, and horse transport marching through the streets of Paris.

* * * * * * *

The composition of an army depends in great measure upon the theater of operations in which that army will be used. It seems improbable that any army of the United States will be used on foreign soil outside of the Western Hemisphere. If we ever go to war, our theater of operations will probably be in the Western Hemisphere, but it would be difficult to attempt a prognostication as to the exact theater of operations in that vast area. Let it suffice to say that the difference in terrain and climate existing in that great area, and the many undeveloped sections therein, will offer more opportunities for the use of horses and mules in warfare than in closely organized and highly developed countries similar to those in which the present European war is being fought.

HORSED CAVALRY AND THE GAS ENGINE'S CHILDREN

(By Brig. Gen. Henry J. Reilly, Officers' Reserve Corps. Troop C, Cavalry, New York National Guard, 1899–1900. Cadet, United States Military Academy, 1900–1904. Lieutenant (second and first), Second, Thirteenth, and Fifteenth United States Cavalry, 1904–14. Captain, First Illinois Field Artillery, 1915–17. Colonel, One Hundred and Forty-ninth Field Artillery, and commanding officer, Forty-third Infantry Brigade, both Forty-second United States Infantry Division, 1917–18. Has seen combat in Mexico, 1913; China, 1925; Europe, western front, 1914–18, except summer 1915 when on eastern front; Russo-Polish War, 1920; Spanish Civil War, 1938)

Franco's pursuit of the Catalonian Army was an excellent example of all branches—light mechanized, motorized troops, horsed cavalry, regular infantry divisions, pack and motor transportation and aviation—each using its powers to make good the limitations of the others so as to move successfully forward over all types of terrain and never allow the enemy to rest, reorganize, or settle down in a new battle position.

General Monasterio, who commanded Franco's cavalry, had definite ideas as to what cavalry should be. An old regular cavalry officer of the Spanish Army, always interested in horses, their breeding, training, and care, he knew that, after all, the horse is only a means of carrying a soldier and his weapons.

The author's first visit was made when Monasterio's cavalry was occupying a larger part of the loop of the Ebro River, the same territory in which the hard battle of the Ebro was subsequently fought. His headquarters were at Gandesa, later the high-water mark of the Catalonian surprise attack across the Ebro. At the time of the author's visit, the cavalry was out—posting and patrolling the Ebro in the same way as the Union and Confederate cavalry often watched a river during the Civil War.

During this first visit, General Monasterio, as on subsequent occasions, expressed himself as strongly in favor of the American cavalry methods of equipment, armament, and combat. He said, among other things, that he wanted to arm his cavalry with automatic pistols, one for each soldier, as is only true in the cavalry of the United States. Apparently, the only reason he had not succeeded in doing so was because, with the shortage of funds available for the armament of Franco's army and air force, only the most essential weapons could be bought. He emphasized the fact that frequently the opportunity exists for a wide and deep deployment and attack at the gallop in which the automatic pistol is the ideal weapon.

Monasterio insisted that the western front with its parallel-trench systems had made too many officers forget that in the open soldiers are only human beings subject to the same demoralization and panic which throughout history have given opportunities to cavalry. Above all is this true when the cavalry attack comes as a surprise, or, when beaten troops are in retreat, worn down physically by the battle through which they have just passed and morally weakened by their defeat.

Both the general and his officers recounted numerous examples of successful surprise in the long retreat of the loyalists in that series of battles which began with the Battle of the Alhambra, and in which the governmental troops were driven from the Teruel—Saragozza—Huesca line to the Ebro and the Mediterranean. Captured batteries, tanks, machine guns, and motor transport figured in the booty. In the battles themselves the cavalry had never hesitated to dismount and fight on foot.

In the pursuit where the cavalry met machine gun and artillery resistance too great to overcome, aviation, by bombing and dive attacks with machine guns, furnished them the necessary preparatory and accompanying fire.

Each visit to General Monasterio or talk with any of his officers strengthened this picture of a vigorously led cavalry seeking the weak points, the flanks, and the rear of the enemy determined to attack and knowing that its limitations would be augmented by the Spanish aviation, and when nearby, the Italian light mechanized and motorized troops. Talks at various times with Italian cavalry officers assigned for observation purposes to the Spanish cavalry confirmed this picture.

Franco's resources were limited. In building up his armed forces he linked his efforts to the necessities. Franco had never been a cavalryman. Yet he steadily built up Monasterio's force from one consisting of but 5 squadrons in the beginning to one of more than 50 squadrons. Amid war, energy and money are not expended for such an expansion unless the benefits and dividends are apparent.

Spain simply proved once more the principle so often proven by warfare; no arm is independent of the others. They are all part of the whole armed force of a nation. The children of the gas engines are not excepted from this rule. They are merely the youngest additions to the family. Each arm has powers and also limitations. The proper combination is that which arranges the whole so that the powers of each offset the limitations of the others.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard people ignorantly remark that there were no horses in the German Army. From the foregoing statements it is apparent that such statements are far from the truth. From the best sources available, I have assembled the following figures on the horses in the German Army:

HORSES IN THE GERMAN ARMY

Cavalry division	6,000
Corps cavalry regiments: 14 regiments identified (probably more units of this type exist) with about 950 horses per regiment; total	13,300
200 German infantry divisions, mounted platoons in infantry regiments, 30 in 600 regiments	18,000
Horse-drawn artillery, 200 divisions	406,000
3,859 horses per division × 200 (total horses in divisions, including artillery)	771,800
Horse-drawn supply units: The number of horse-supply columns in the German Army is unknown. Horse-supply columns are attached to German infantry divisions only in special situations.
Total horses in army (horses in supply columns not included)	791,100

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us carries funds for the purchase of 19,802 horses. On the basis of the testimony I have placed in the RECORD, and taking into consideration the terrain which might be the field of operations in hemispheric defense, I believe that the Members of the House will agree that the proper balance of the United States Army calls for the adaptation and development of the cavalry as contemplated in the funds provided in this bill. [Applause.]

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CASE of South Dakota was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POSTS

For military posts, $29,500,000, which sum shall be restored to the emergency fund for the President, created by the Military Appropriation Act, 1941, in reimbursement of a like amount advanced therefrom: Provided, That the appropriation under this title contained in Public Resolution No. 99, approved September 24, 1940, shall be available for all the objects and subject to the limitations and conditions specified under the same head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1941, except as otherwise provided therein: Provided further, That the last two provisos under this heading in title I of the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1941 (Public, No. 781, 76th Cong.), are amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, with respect to contracts for public works for the Military Establishment, whether or not for construction at military posts, entered into upon a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis out of funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1941 or authorized to be entered into prior to July 1, 1941, waive the requirements as to performance and payment bonds of the act approved August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 793; 40 U. S. C. 270a): Provided further, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract for public works entered into on or after September 9, 1940, for the construction and installation of buildings, utilities, and appurtenances at military posts shall not exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost of the contract, exclusive of the fee, as determined by the Secretary of War.": Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall submit monthly, within 10 days following the last day of each month, commencing on or before November 10, 1940, to the respective chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives a report of (1) all cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts concluded within the period embraced by each report, and (2) of all land acquisitions accomplished within such periods, such reports to show (1) as to cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts the object or objects thereof, the name and place of business of the contractor, the estimated cost of the contract exclusive of the fee, the amount of the fee, and the date of the contract, and (2) as to land acquisitions the location, area, intended use, the purchase price, the amount appropriated therefor, and the assessed value (first reports shall cover the period July 1 to October 31, 1940).

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr SCRUGHAM: Page 6, line 11, after the word "War", insert "and Secretary of the Navy."

Page 6, line 14, after the word "Military", insert "and Naval."

Page 6, line 16, after the word "report", insert "where such Secretaries are respectively concerned."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the last proviso here is language put in the bill to carry out the purposes of an amendment I offered during consideration of the bill for Army housing last week. At the time, it will be recalled, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, stated that the committee wanted to keep track of these expenditures and would be glad to have these reports made.

The housing bill had been printed for engrossing at the time the bill was before us, so to avoid delay it was agreed that my amendment might be incorporated in this bill now before us, and made applicable to the construction and land funds in both bills. The language of the proviso takes care of that.

As has been pointed out during the discussion this afternoon, the day will come when the country and future Congresses will scan closely the expenditures that are made from the funds we appropriate today. We believe that there will be less likelihood of excessive contracts and wasteful expenditures if these reports are made to the committee chairman regularly. If it becomes apparent at any time, then, that contracts are being made at excessive figures or under improper terms, the committee and the Congress can take steps to correct the situation.

This seems to be the only way we can keep any check on the expenditures and avoid delaying the construction program. With the approach of winter it is essential that the housing and hospital facilities be made available as speedily as possible. I hope that not only the members of the Appropriations Committees, but the Members of the House generally, will avail themselves of the opportunity to keep track of these expenditures through examination of the reports filed with the respective committee chairmen.

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The paragraph under the heading "Air Corps, Army", appearing in the Military Appropriation Act, 1941, is hereby amended by striking therefrom the words and figures "$76,205,988 shall be available under the appropriation 'Air Corps, Army, 1940,'" and inserting in lieu thereof the words and figures "$32,205,988 shall be available under the appropriation 'Air Corps, Army, 1939–40' and $44,000,000 under the appropriation 'Air Corps, Army, 1940.'"

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee just two questions in connection with aircraft production. Possibly the situation has been covered, but I did not hear all of the debate because I was unavoidably detained.

Could the chairman of the subcommittee tell me whether the bill carries money to take care of the situation for nonflying officers of the Air Corps?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does the gentleman mean flight pay?

Mr. MILLER. Pay; yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is nothing in the bill changing the flight pay rate; no.

Mr. MILLER. I noticed there was considerable discussion about that in the hearings, and I rather hoped there would be.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We provide for an increase in the number but not for an increase in the pay.

Mr. MILLER. The pay still stands at $720?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MILLER. The other question I desired to ask has to do with the $180,000,000 to speed up the aircraft program. I take it, of course, the whole amount is not in the bill; but is any of it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The whole amount is in here.

Mr. MILLER. If I am correct in my recollection, $180,000,000 was asked for.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Sixty million dollars in cash for the Air Corps and $90,000,000 under the head of expediting production. There is contractual authority of like amounts under both heads. Part of it is for expediting plant expansion and part for production of aircraft, but the full Budget recommendation was granted by the committee.

Mr. MILLER. In the hearings the case was made out that in order to speed up the program it was now absolutely necessary to put on two, and in some cases three shifts, which would involve a higher cost of labor. I believe, if I recall correctly, the increased cost was 5 cents per hour. I am at a loss to understand why the taxpayers of the United States should pay that increased cost for aircraft procurement at a time when the manufacturers are shipping their normal production out of the country. In other words, if anybody is going to pay a bonus for production, it seems to me it should be paid by foreign governments, and that our Government should have the advantage of their normal production plus their increased facilities.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman, of course, must understand that foreign purchasers are paying for what they get, and if the aircraft factories are working overtime in the production of planes for foreign governments they are paying for the overtime.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; but we are paying this increased price for speed at a time when we are allowing manufacturers to ship over there at any price, almost, the aircraft they are manufacturing to foreign powers. I do not see why we should pay a bonus for speed at the same time the manufacturers are allowed to ship abroad.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is no way to avoid that, if we are to let the foreign governments have priority, which seems to meet with approval.

Mr. MILLER. That is the part I object to, giving them a priority when we have to pay a bonus of $180,000,000. It is the question of priority that I object to.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. These foreign governments have already constructed tremendous additions to various aircraft factories all over the country. I have seen three of them and their construction runs into the millions of dollars.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Very large sums have been spent in America by foreign governments for plant expansion and the American Government ultimately will get the benefit of that.

Mr. MILLER. I am aware of that. I have one of the largest airplane-motor factories in the country in my own district. I know, for example, that the French Government put three and one-half million dollars on the line for that plant and they are getting all the engines out of that plant. But let us take the Platt-Whitney plant, for instance, with the British getting the normal output of that plant and the American Government having to pay a bonus. There is a priority clause in all these contracts giving the United States Government the right to step in and claim the entire production, if we need it. Now, if we need it so bad that we have to pay a bonus to get it, I believe we should exercise our priority.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations if the transfer or sale of the 50 flying fortresses we read and hear so much about these days was discussed with his committee? Certainly, not only the Congress but the country should be given the full details as to any plan for selling these extremely valuable and necessary flying fortresses. Congress has been twitted long enough of its ignorance regarding these matters.

Mr. WOODRUM. Nothing whatever of that kind was before the committee, and there is no provision in this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman would join with me in securing an investigation of that matter. It is very vital to us.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am perfectly well satisfied with the way in which the matter is being handled, and, as far as I am concerned, I am confident it is being handled all right.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman believe that our flying fortresses are going to be sold to Great Britain?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have no idea. In the language of Will Rogers, "All I know is what I read in the newspapers."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman is chairman of an extremely important subcommittee, and there is no more important committee in the Congress than the Appropriations Committee. It is amazing that the committee has not been given full information regarding our national defense. If the gentleman has not considered the matter before, I wish he would consider asking the administration what it plans to do in regard to our own national defense.

It is vital to us. Winston Churchill and England have told the people of England what to expect. Certainly we ought to be told in this country what to expect. We are not children. Most of the people of the country are adults, and they are entitled to know the entire fiscal situation of the country and the situation regarding our national defense.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. If it is going to be our accepted policy that our first line of defense is in England, why should we not expect to go over there?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think we should find out what they plan to do regarding the matter. We should be told just what the administration plans to do, just how dangerous the situation is. We know of the transfer of 50 destroyers after the transfer had been made in exchange for bases. We were told then it was because we were receiving the use of certain bases and that our national defense would gain much more than if we retained the 50 destroyers. The Secretary of State, in reply to a resolution of inquiry presented by myself, asking if they planned to transfer any more military or naval equipment in exchange for bases, replied that they did not. It is not that I am against the acquisition of such bases. Far from it. We need them and should have them. I object to the method used in acquiring them.

I feel sure in my own mind, after watching events and developments, that some further trading is planned in exchange for bases somewhere else. I want to know whether the administration plans to sell our flying fortresses or other equipment. The Congress should be told whether any such trading would weaken our national defense too greatly. I wish every Member of Congress would join with me in continuing to insist that we be told what will be done by the administration in shipping our defense equipment to other countries. We should have the full picture before us.

Mr. McDOWELL. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDOWELL. If the gentlewoman will recall, Members of Congress found out for the first time from the morning headlines that our airplanes were being flown across the Niagara River. Would it be asking too much to request that a committee be appointed to interview the press to find out what the Government is going to do next? Apparently the newspapermen can get information where the Congress cannot.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is absolutely true. It looks to me as if certain commentators have underground channels or telephonic communication, some way of finding out from the State Department what is going to be done before the Congress of the United States finds out. Indignation exists all over the country about these very things. If helping Great Britain is best for us, the people want to do it, but they are entitled to be told the truth, given the complete picture, and certainly the Congress is entitled to that information.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I want to commend the work and the interest that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has shown on this question, because it seems to me it is a ridiculous proposition for the Congress to exercise itself about making appropriations, and not have a clear-cut determination of what the foreign policy of the country is. I hope the resolution the gentlewoman has introduced will be given serious heed by the Congress, and that she will have support in her efforts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman very much. I know what he has done in that regard, and it is extremely valuable. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPEDITING PRODUCTION

For an additional amount for expediting production, including the same objects and subject to the same conditions and limitations specified under this head in the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1941, $90,000,000, of which $2,000,000 shall be made available to the Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, for the erection, equipment, and operation of a pilot plant or plants for the beneficiation of manganese ores and the production of metallic manganese therefrom by the electrolytic or other process, including personal services and other expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere for the preparation of plans and specifications, advertising, and supervision of construction; and for all expenditures requisite for and incident to the exploration of manganiferous deposits in accordance with Public Act No. 117, approved June 7, 1939; and, in addition, the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, and with the approval of the President is authorized to enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1941, for the same purposes to an amount not exceeding $90,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 11, in line 9, after "$90,000,000", strike out all of the committee insertion beginning with the words "of which $2,000,000" and ending with the words "Public Act No. 117, approved June 7, 1939."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, we were asked to provide $90,000,000 to furnish equipment for plants largely in connection with the Air Corps, $90,000,000 of cash and contract authorizations for $90,000,000. There was nothing on which the committee considered it could safely recommend to the House a cut. When the full committee met, this amendment segregating $2,000,000 of the money which was to be used for expediting production entirely, I may say, within the field of aircraft and ordnance production, was adopted by the committee and added to the bill. It provides $2,000,000 to erect an experimental plant in connection with the production of metallic manganese by an electrolytic process. This item has been put in other appropriation bills as we have gone along but it has never been used.

For my own part, I would feel that I was breaking faith with the people of the United States if I did away with what I was told was an essential item necessary to provide the proper aircraft and the proper ordnance for the Army, if I took $2,000,000 out of that amount and put it into this experimental proposition. It is entirely experimental. It is something that we do not know will work. It involves a very considerable item of money. It involves the construction of a plant at Boulder Dam, as I understand. I do not believe we are justified in making any such appropriation. If we were, it never should be considered in this way. We have nothing to justify the cut of $2,000,000 from this $90,000,000, we have nothing to justify the taking of this money out of a program for expediting the production of airplanes and ordnance material to put into this experimental proposition, which in my opinion is a wild-goose chase.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. With reference to the expenditure of this $90,000,000 for expediting production, what was recommended to the committee that these funds should be used for generally?

Mr. TABER. That they should be used for expediting production entirely on the airplane program and on the ordnance program.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. All through the consideration of this bill I have been wondering if they were carrying out the suggestion of Colonel Lindbergh that appeared in the newspaper after he visited the President last year. When the gentleman made his speech I wondered if that was related to this program of Lindbergh's.

Mr. TABER. This relates to a production program for airplanes. It does not involve an experimental proposition at all. We provided last winter, early in the winter, large sums of money for enlarging the experimental facilities of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and for the Air Corps and the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy, to go ahead with an experimental program of large size. We have no reason to believe now that more funds for that purpose are required. We followed the recommendations that were made to us specifically by Colonel Lindbergh himself when he was before our committee on that particular question. I hope that we will stick to national defense and not go into some experimental process and cut down the figures that are needed for the development of national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have very great respect for the honesty and sincerity of the gentleman from New York who proposed this amendment. He undoubtedly thinks he is correct in his statements. Of those which he has recited, to the best of my knowledge and belief, most of them are inaccurate or are based on incorrect information.

To begin with, the production or beneficiation of manganese is not an experimental proposition. The experimental work has been most thoroughly done largely under previous appropriations from the Congress. The process is all ready to go into practical production of several tons a day in the proposed pilot plant. This process has been carefully examined into by the advisory committee of specialists appointed by Council of National Defense. This committee had the further assistance of a group of experts named by the National Academy of Sciences. They have checked up every step and made a favorable report and recommendations for procedure.

I first presented the matter to Mr. Stettinius of the desirability of erecting the proposed pilot plant. He referred me to Messrs. R. C. Allen and C. K. Leith, who are the advisory committee experts who have been put in charge of such matters. Their recommendation I have here. It reads as follows, reading only a small essential portion of the whole report, I quote:

Attached is a recommendation from the Technologic Committee on Manganese of the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research Council, recommending the immediate release of $1,375,000 to the Bureau of Mines for specified construction and experimentation on the ores of manganese. The recommendations for the expenditure of the remaining $625,000 of the $2,000,000 originally set aside by the act, Public, 667, will follow later.

We strongly urge that the necessary steps be taken at once to release the recommended amount to the Bureau of Mines at the earliest possible date in order that it may begin at once on the planning of equipment and personnel.

C. K. LEITH.
R. C. ALLEN.

Those men are the experts who were placed in charge of manganese matters by the Council of National Defense. The opinions of the technologic committee are certainly worthy of credence. I am quite certain if the gentleman from New York knew anything about the details of the subject he would not have proposed this amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In a bill previously passed we gave the President or the Bureau of Mines, I am not clear which, permission to use funds for this purpose, but they have not used the funds.

The purpose of it is to have the proposed pilot plant utilize domestic manganese with the strong hope that some of our low-grade manganese ores may meet the tests for high-grade manganese that we so much need in our national-defense program.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes, sir. And this is almost a certain method of utilizing the abundant low-grade domestic man-ganese ores in this country, and thereby rendering us practically independent of such foreign supplies as come from Russia, and from India, and from the Philippines, and from Brazil. The metallic manganese also has great possibilities in alloys as a resistant to sea-water corrosion.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And is it not also a fact that in addition to the recommendation of the Advisory Committee, that the Appropriations Subcommittee for the Navy Department in its conference report on the naval appropriation bill and also the Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department in its conference report on the War Department bill, each recommended an appropriation of $2,000,000 for this exact purpose?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes; that is a matter of record apparently overlooked by the gentleman from New York when he endeavors to kill the appropriation.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I wish to state that I know of no one who is better qualified to speak in regard to this matter than the gentleman who occupies the Well of the House at this moment. As an Army officer at the beginning of the first World War he saw that the artillery and aviation program of our country was woefully short of these strategic minerals and that we suffered accordingly and that we may suffer again in that same way if we are so unwise as to adopt this amendment.

I want also to say that there are two parts to this great defense program with regard to strategic minerals and especially manganese. Of course, we may have to get them from abroad for the immediate occasion and have them in our stock piles. For most of them this is a precaution while we are getting into production. The gentleman has provided for that, beginning with the naval bill of 1937. At the same time, along with that, concurrently, we should develop home production now in order that we may have true national defense and that, I take it, is the purpose of this $2,000,000 appropriation. This home production is as much a part of national defense as the immediate stock piles.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I strongly recommend the defeat of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York because I am certain it was based upon his lack of accurate information, and I am also sure he would not intentionally thus handicap our national-defense program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 6, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the operation and maintenance of the Selective Service System as authorized by the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 (Public, No. 783, 76th Cong.), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, lawbooks, periodicals, and books of reference, payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Director of Selective Service; and purchase and exchange, and hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, including one automobile (at a cost not exceeding $1,500) for the Director of Selective Service, $24,825,108, to remain available until June 30, 1942: Provided, That the travel of persons engaged in the administration of the Selective Service System, including commissioned, warrant, or enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or their reserve components, may be ordered by the Director or by such persons as he may authorize, and persons so traveling shall be entitled to transportation and subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized by law.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the committee to some facts about the selective-service law or the conscription of men for the Army in peacetime. Here is an article from this evening's Star stating that receruits are flocking into the Army with the goal of 375,000 in sight, and it goes on to state that the men are making application for 3 years of Army service in order that they may fill the quota that is necessary and that it will not be necessary to conscript men.

I want to quote a statement made by the Senator from Montana who opposed conscription in peacetime. He charged that a campaign of deliberate, premeditated falsehood had been used to intimidate Congress into approving the draft.

I cannot for the life of me see why the Members of Congress were not far-sighted enough to permit the people of this country to volunteer within 60 days or 90 days, with the idea that they were to have 1-year enlistments. Had you permitted that you would have had two or three times as many men as you would have needed to fulfill the quota of the Army, and you would not have had to go out and start up this Hitlerized form of government in America.

It seems to me that the light of day ought to be seen by somebody in the Congress when we are told that if you give them 60 days' time you can get all the men you want, but instead of that you had to drive down the throats of some of the Members of Congress, against their will, the idea that they have to follow somebody at 1600 Pensylvania Avenue who, if you do not watch out, is going to be the Hitler of America, and it is not going to be very long until that day arrives, when the gentleman who is seeking a third term is interfering with the the President of the United States. There is something wrong in Denmark and I think we ought to have a congressional investigation to find out about this third-term candidate who wants to disobey all the rules and all the traditions of American history, and anybody who believes, Mr. Chairman, that he is the indispensable man—God forbid that the day should come when he will ever be put in the White House for three terms and, probably, you will all have to go out and holler "Heil Hitler"—God forbid that that day should ever come—"Heil Roosevelt," I meant [laughter], and God forbid that that day should ever come to this country. If you fellows are going to be hoodwinked into going down there and hollering "Heil Roosevelt," just remember what your constituents will say to you when you get back home.

Are you in favor of the third term? [Laughter.] Somebody told me to ask you men over there that question. How many of you are for a third term? There are about 25 or 30 in the audience now, and how many of you are in favor of a third term? Hold up your hands. [After a pause.] Four out of thirty. [Laughter and applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAMBERTSON: On page 11, line 16, strike out all to line 13, on page 12, all pertaining to selective service.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, this is in line with what I said earlier in the afternoon. The compelling factor 2 weeks ago to pass the Conscription Act was the fear that England would fall any hour. Then they were to come over here and get us immediately. There has been a wonderful change in sentiment in the last 2 weeks about the fall of England. If there is as much change in the next 2 weeks, before the conscription really gets into effect, the calling of the men, we ought, in all reason, to repeal this act. In view of the fact that we are getting volunteers and in view of the fact that England is disappointing the war jitterbugs by holding out, I think we ought to repeal that.

Then Mr. Hull hinted yesterday where this army might go. It might go to China. Then in cooperation with England they might go to the west coast of Africa. We are beginning to see now how we are being led into war through the back door. England does not need us so badly as we thought she did.

We have been fooled about the damage that Germany has been doing to England. The stories we have heard on this side have been very revealing in the last 2 weeks.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Did the gentleman note that the other day Major General Strong, Assistant Chief of Staff, returned from England and reported that England was going to win the war?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; and he is a very distinguished authority. Another distinguished Army officer came back and said they have never quit playing golf in London. They have not stopped riding their horses. The bathing beaches are running in full bloom. [Laughter.]

London has not been hurt at all like we have been told she was. That was the compelling factor for the passage of the Conscription Act—that they could not wait 60 days to find out more about it a little while back. The sink hole of iniquity in a democracy is conscription in peacetime—and we ought to start to repeal it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $400,000.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the passage of this appropriation bill and the general discussion on the preparedness program which we have had this afternoon, I note that nothing has been said and no inquiry has been made with reference to the progress we are making in the Navy Department with regard to the construction of ships. There is no part of the defense program that involves more detail, administrative work, and greater cost than that of the construction of combatant or fighting ships of the Navy.

For the interest of the Members of the House, I think it might be well to place in the RECORD what the Navy Department has done the last few weeks insofar as building up our combatant-ship facilities of the country as a result of authorizations and appropriations made by the Congress within the last few months.

If you will recall, in 1938, the first 20-percent expansion bill was passed by the Congress. In June of this year, the 28th, the 11-percent expansion bill was approved, and within 5 days all the ships authorized under that program were contracted for by the Navy Department.

On September 9 of this month, the Congress passed the 70-percent appropriation bill, increasing the size of the Navy 70 percent above the point then authorized; or, in other words, increasing it by 1,325,000 tons. Almost immediately contracts were entered into for the construction of practically all the ships authorized and appropriated for.

I might say that at the present time that the authorized strength of the Navy is approximately 3,000,000 tons. When the contracts for six cruisers are awarded in a few days there will remain only 81,000 tons not contracted for out of this tremendous program of ship construction.

Today the Navy Department has under contract a total number of 332 ships, and of this number 17 are battleships, 12 are aircraft carriers, 48 are cruisers, 173 destroyers, and 82 are submarines. Of the 17 battleships, embracing all the larger-type ships, the last of these will be delivered in 1947. Of the 12 aircraft carriers, the last of this group will be finished in 1946. The last of the 48 cruisers will be completed in 1946, and of the 173 destroyers now under contract the last will be delivered in 1944. The program calling for 82 submarines will be finished in 1944.

This shows the very exceptionally fine work which the Navy Department has been doing in carrying out this tremendous program of ship construction along the line that has been approved by Congress during the period of the last 3 years. Within a period of 7 years we will have trebled the size of the American Navy from the present under-age tonnage of less than 1,000,000 tons to a total of over 3,000,000 tons, which, together with our over-age ships, will give us the largest and most protective navy the world has ever known.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, these facts ought to become part of the RECORD so the Members of the House and the American people may know that the American naval officials are on the job doing a day's work each day getting these ships ready for whatever emergency may arise.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Can the gentleman tell us what proportion of these ships are being built in navy yards and what proportion in private shipbuilding plants?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The Navy Department has been able in the past to do about 50 percent of the work in the navy yards. Because of the limited capacity of the navy yards to carry on the whole program it has been found necessary to enter upon a program of expansion of private yards, as well as navy yards in order to permit the consummation of a tremendous program involving nearly 2,000,000 tons of new ships.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I want to express deep appreciation for the statement the gentleman has just made. It answers a question disturbing the minds of many, like myself, living miles from our coast. His statement will be quieting to the perplexed American people.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aviation, Navy, including plant expansions and facilities in private plants, $15,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to say just a word about the work of the Appropriations Committee. I have been a member of this committee for 20 years. In all that time the committee never has worked as hard in any previous year or put in as many days as it has this year. All the members of the committee deserve the thanks not only of the House and the Congress but of the American people for their loyal service day after day, holding hearings, and giving exhaustive consideration to the thousands of items involved in the appropriations for the activities of our Government and particularly the large amounts for the defense program.

When this Congress adjourns or recesses from its labors, temporarily or finally for the session, whatever it may be, I will, of course, as chairman, put in the RECORD an official statement summarizing and classifying the appropriations of this session.

I can say to you in advance in a preliminary way in round figures that the total direct appropriations carried in bills already enacted and in process of enactment at this session, including the amounts in the first civil functions appropriation bill, 1941, now in the Senate, and the third supplemental national-defense appropriation bill, 1941, now before you, amount to approximately $15,000,000,000. In addition to this sum there is the total of $1,825,000,000 permanent appropriations—other than trust funds. These two sums make a total of direct appropriations of $16,825,000,000. These figures include supplemental and deficiency amounts for the fiscal year 1940 as well as the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1941.

Of this total of $16,825,000,000 for this session thus far, approximately $8,611,000,000, or more than half of the direct appropriations, has been granted to the Army and Navy for national defense and in addition to this latter sum civil activities of the Government contributing directly and vitally to the national-defense program have received, or will receive, approximately $398,000,000.

The total of $16,800,000,000 does not include permanent trust-fund appropriations of approximately $2,149,000,000 which are payable from the trust-fund receipts, but does include over $815,000,000 for the Postal Service, which is largely payable from the postal revenues.

In addition to the total of direct appropriations, contract authorizations in the approximate amount of $4,000,000,000 have been granted or are pending in bills I have mentioned. Of this sum, $3,805,000,000 is for the Army and Navy for national defense and a large part of the remaining $195,000,000 is for civil activities contributing directly to the national defense program. This amount of $3,805,000,000 for contract authorizations for the Army and Navy does not include commitments authorized for the two-ocean and other naval ship expansion programs, the estimated cost of which, in addition to the appropriations toward them at this session, $148,000,000, will reach the sum of $4,586,000,000.

Summarizing national-defense provision by Congress at this session for both the fiscal years 1940 and 1941, it is as follows:

Army and Navy, direct appropriations	$8,611,000,000
Army and Navy, contract authorizations	3,805,000,000
Navy ship-expansion program; long-range commitments in excess of present appropriations	4,586,000,000
Civil activities contributing to national defense	398,000,000

In granting the huge outlays for national defense for the Army and Navy the Congress has not confined itself within the Budget estimates. Wherever the facts seemed to justify additional sums have been provided and these total, for the session, $620,000,000 in excess of Budget requests.

These are preliminary figures which will need revision as the pending bills progress to final enactment. We are hoping this will be the last appropriation bill. If we stay here, however, there is the chance that we may have to appropriate further sums between now and the 3d of January. If this is necessary for national defense, we will do so.

I believe I express the firmly held conviction of each member of the committee when I say that our object is to preserve our country, our liberties, and our system of living and to go whatever distance is necessary in the judgment of our responsible officials and the prominent people who are advising in this matter. You all know, of course, that the President has called in a great many of the most distinguished people of the United States, leaders in all the great lines of agricultural, industrial, and social endeavor of both political faiths who are contributing their services for the benefit of our country. We appreciate it, and we compliment them for making that sacrifice and becoming dollar-a-year men for the sake of preserving our form of government.

I feel that the ends justify the means. I feel that we must first look to our own defense. When we finish, if we are triumphant in preserving our country from the maelstrom of destruction engulfing the world I feel we shall have the brains, patriotism, and courage to work out the aftermath, no matter what that may be. I believe that our present policy is to prepare for defense of the Western Hemisphere.

I want the country to know of the loyal service, the hard work, and the conscientious consideration that we give to all these appropriation items, and that these bills are the result of the best judgment of the Committee on Appropriations. The deliberations of our committee are harmonious and the members are rendering patriotic service. I hope I may dispel any impression that there is politics or demagoguery in the Appropriations Committee, for that is not so. The Appropriations Committee never has been a political committee.

I particularly want to express my thanks to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] for the assistance he has rendered the committee and to me in handling these special defense and emergency measures. He has at all times been cooperative, painstaking, and industrious in these labors and has given wise, patriotic, and courageous counsel in arriving at conclusions. The gentleman is outstanding in his usefulness to the committee and to the House through the fine character of service he is rendering. [Applause.]

I want also to pay tribute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. There is hardly a meeting of the committee at which the distinguished ranking minority member has not been present. In the great majority of matters he goes along with us. Sometimes he asks us to reduce the amounts. Sometimes we agree with him. We all admire and respect him. He is honest, courageous, industrious, and a great help to the majority members, and we thank him. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GAVAGAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10572, the third supplemental national-defense appropriation bill, fiscal year 1941, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the new majority leader tell us, if he knows, what the program will be next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be called and bills on the Private Calendar will be called. There will also be one suspension, a bill covering an amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act.

The Committee on Military Affairs has a bill relating to the Home Guard, and if unanimous consent can be secured, that will be brought up.

There is also a bill that we are all acquainted with relating to the civil service relative to lawyers. It is proposed to call up that bill some time next week. There is also a bill reported by the committee of which the distinguished gentleman is a member, known as the confiscation bill that may be considered. Conference reports will also be taken up if ready. That is a general outline so far as next week is concerned.

Mr. MICHENER. We are primarily interested in what will come up on Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. Bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and bills on the Private Calendar, then a suspension of the rules in connection with an amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act. If unanimous consent can be secured for the consideration of the Home Guard bill, that bill will be called up.

Mr. MICHENER. There is the civil-rights bill. As I understand it, there are three bills from the Committee on Military Affairs. One of them is the bill to which the gentleman referred. Another one has something to do with installment payments of draftees, and then there is another bill. Are those all coming up next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not my understanding, whether or not other bills will be called up is something I cannot say at the present time. I have given the gentleman the schedule for Monday. The other bills I have referred to will in all probability come up next week, together with conference reports. What other bills may be called up I am not prepared to say at the present time but I am prepared to state that the bills I have previously referred to will come up next week.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING SPECIAL AGENTS OF DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR TO ADMINISTER OATHS

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah submitted a conference report on the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement recently made by me before the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech I made before the National Convention of Postmasters in New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, this morning I asked and secured unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD. Since that time I have had a check of the remarks made and I understand they will take about four pages. I therefore renew my request to extend my remarks, notwithstanding that they run over the limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today, I ask unanimous consent to insert certain tables of my own.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a speech recently delivered by a former Member of this House, Philip P. Campbell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT]?

There was no objection.

MEMBERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY THE ANTHRACITE EMERGENCY PROGRAM

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 564, Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Special Committee to Study the Anthracite Emergency Program, the following Members of the House: Messrs. FLANNERY, FLAHERTY, and FENTON.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, this body has appropriated many billions of dollars to be used to buy and to make supplies for the United States Army, Navy, and the Marine Corps, that the Nation may guarantee itself against the ever-growing threat of invasion from foreign enemies.

The city of Pittsburgh, which has been the armory of the Nation for more than a century, has received many million dollars worth of orders that range all the way from tear-gas shells to ship sides for destroyers and battleships. My own district has received, to date, approximately $47,000,000 worth of orders from the national-defense forces. My people are busy up in Pennsylvania making the things the Nation needs.

We have the greatest pool of industry there in the world. We have there concentrated the greatest number of skilled mechanics the world has ever seen in all branches of the industrial arts. If a foreign foe were to choose one major spot in the Nation to strike a blow at the United States, he would choose above all others Pittsburgh and its environs, because the destruction of our city now could be the greatest blow at our defense program that could be wrought.

The day before yesterday this House passed, without a dissenting vote, a bill which provides a fine of $10,000 and a maximum of 30 years in jail to be imposed upon any person who would willfully destroy or attempt to destroy or hinder in any manner the defense program of the people of the United States. This bill, when it becomes a law, as it undoubtedly will be, will affect practically every industry, utility, and transportation device in the Nation. It is a good bill, and it will undoubtedly slow down the activities of those enemies of the Nation who are now in our midst.

During the very brief debate on the bill, I offered an amendment, which would include among those who could be punished by the bill the members of any political party which was not altogether of our Nation, but which had branches in countries outside of ourselves. The amendment specifically named Communists, Nazis, Fascists, and required authorities in defense plants to dismiss any of these on their rolls.

I withdrew the amendment because the sponsors of the bill pointed out that it was not germane to the bill and that the measure should be written into a law of itself. That I have done, and today I have introduced a measure which should receive the approval of every Member of the Congress and of every loyal citizen of the United States, because it will legally prevent enemies of the Nation from working in any defense operation of our country and provide a penalty for those who violate its intent.

The reason for my efforts in the past few days are very interesting, and I desire now to call to the attention of the House of Representatives, the people of the United States, and in particular to the chairman of the Committe for the Investigation of Un-American Activities, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Mr. Hoover, the following facts:

Within 3 miles of my home, back in Pennsylvania, is the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., which is one of the most important plants manufacturing defense materials in the Nation. To date they have received approximately $17,000,000 worth of orders that include in their list things that range from generators for warships to gun emplacements.

This company is one of the great manufacturing companies of the world; it devised and gave to the world radio broadcasting. It is equipped to furnish the Army and the Navy right now, and right now it is doing countless objects that are so very necessary to the fighting forces of the Nation.

In the local plant in Pennsylvania, which is located principally in the Turtle Creek Valley, there are some 11,000 employees. It was my good fortune to be born there and to grow up among these people. The employees of the various plants are typical Americans, loyal, frugal, hard working, and as patriotic as any Member of this body. They compose one of the largest groups of local organized labor in the Nation; and some years ago they organized and became a part of the United Electric and Radio Machine Workers of America and affiliated themselves with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Everybody agrees that the labor relations of the workers and the employers in the Turtle Creek Valley for more than a score of years has been almost a model circumstance. Strikes have been at a very minimum, labor strife is almost unknown, of violence we have had practically none, and our wages and conditions there are among the best in the world.

The workers of the great Westinghouse plants are good, faithful members of their union. Their official title is Local 601; and if all of the members of Local 601 were to be suddenly removed from active service in behalf of the defense program of this Nation, that program would be seriously slowed down. Everybody agrees to that.

At the present time there is a dispute between the owners and operators of the Westinghouse plants and Local 601 as to the signing of a work contract. The men are working and the plant is producing, but the contract between the two still remains unsigned. Now, my colleagues, the bizarre part of all of this is that the Westinghouse owners and officials are eager to sign the contract, and so are the men who work in the plants, but the contract still remains unsigned.

I have had the word from many of the authorities of the Westinghouse Co., high, medium, and low, that they sincerely believe that they have the finest group of skilled workmen in the world, and they are proud of their great efficient personnel. The wages and the bonuses that have been arranged by agreement between the owners and the men who work there are a model that should be copied by every other great manufacturing concern that exists. Hardly a man who works for the Westinghouse would tell you otherwise.

The entire situation presents one of the most pleasant pictures of labor relations and employer relations that exists in industry.

Now, let me get down to the milk in the coconut. Let me tell you why the contract between this great body of men and that great industry still remains doggo in the desks of the company's officials and in the union's desk.

There can be no question that a great mass of the American people will be astonished to know that in this great defense plant there are working and circulating every day enemies of the people of the United States. We know them; I can name them. The company knows them, and they can name them. The workmen themselves know them and they can name them; and still they are there plotting and planning and conniving as all enemies of the Nation are doing. They cannot be fired; they cannot be laid off. They stay there by legal right—by the right of the provisions of the Wagner Act—and if the company or the men would do the highly patriotic thing and bodily toss them out, both the union and the company would be subject to the provisions of the Wagner Act and could be hailed before the National Labor Relations Board for judgment—and if we are to judge precedent—punishment.

I am one of those Members of this body who believes in the Wagner Act and believes it to be the Magna Carta of labor and who will vote to maintain it so long as I remain a Member of this body, and who voted to maintain it during my service here. Like all other great social advances, the Wagner Act needs to be readjusted to fit and conform with the American way of living, and it was unforeseen when the act was adopted by the Congress that it would eventually protect a very small slice of enemies of the Nation and maintain them in the places where they could do us the worst damage.

Local 601, with its 11,000 employees, is completely in the hands of a gang of men who are as "red" as the Soviet flag, although 98 percent of its membership are good, honest, plain workingmen, who are as patriotic as the average American is, and always will be. The "reds" grabbed control of the union of this vital industry by reason of the traditional American carelessness and indolence.

The members of Local 601 pay their dues, believe in organized labor, and hope that their local is going to be properly operated for the benefit of themselves—and that is very proper—but, like too many Americans, when organization day comes around, and when it is time to elect officers and adopt rules, the great mass of the members are at ball games, or mowing the lawn, or doing something else. As a result, the union has been operated for some years with a maximum of three and four hundred members voting, and has fallen completely into the hands of skilled Moscow-trained organizers who now dominate its offices.

The president of the local is a sick man, and very rarely functions. The vice president is a native-born American named Logan Burkhart, who is a faithful admitted member of the Communist Party, and who also admits that his constant endeavors are in behalf of the Communist Party. The business agent-secretary and real boss of the union is one Charles Newell, who is a stranger to western Pennsylvania, who helped organize various communistic groups in the city of Boston and in the city of New York, and who was sent to Pittsburgh by his "red" superiors to enter and gain control of the great Westinghouse union. He has done a magnificent job for his Soviet superiors. He is running the union in the way that should gain him the highest Soviet decoration that could be granted by the Kremlin in Moscow.

Newell does not like the United States Government, and thinks it should be supplanted by that operated by Stalin in Russia—and remember that Mr. Newell is businessman of the 11,000 patriotic Americans who, by their own rules, that he has choked down their throats, are prohibited from doing anything to help themselves.

This Newell is a close friend of one George Powers, of McKeesport, Pa., who likewise has a throttled grasp on the throat of the great steel industry of that city, which has also millions of dollars of war-defense orders. Mr. Powers is an immigrant from Europe. He spent several days here in Washington as a subpenaed witness before the Dies committee. The committee did not get very far with Mr. Powers. They found out a few unimportant things—that he had been a labor agitator in North Carolina, that he had the most magnificent capacity for forgetting that the committee has ever seen, that he could not recall the boat that he came to America on, and the day I listened he could not even recall the port he arrived at.

Last Friday night I sent reporters from my newspaper to a meeting in McKeesport, at which Mr. Powers presided in his broken English. After making the usual communistic harangue against everything that is American, his wife passed out to those who were present—and, again, who were 98 percent patriotic Americans—copies of the Daily Worker, which, speaking as a newspaperman, I can fully assure you is perhaps the rottenest, lyingest, smelly publication it has ever been my misfortune to read.

If we get into a war, I cannot believe either Mr. Powers, which is not the name he was born with, or Mr. Newell can want us to win it, because they do not like the Government of the United States; they like the Government of Soviet Russia. Like all other stool pigeons of the bloody Russian politicians, they hastily slide over the complete betrayal Stalin has given the Russian people and insistently pound on the theory that all American workmen are mistreated and underpaid.

These are the men who are empowered to call a strike. This is the reason the Westinghouse Co. cannot sign a contract with the union; and who can blame them?

My newspaper, the Wilkinsburg Gazette, has been carrying the story I am telling you now for several weeks, and it may surprise you to know that I am printing the story at the request of the ordinary buck private in local 601 who loves his country. As the laws exist now, the only way these men can be taken out of power in these great defense plants is for the men themselves to do it. They have a reasonable, logical, legitimate excuse for not taking the initiative in the matter. They are plain workmen; they have to have their jobs; they cannot expose themselves to the organized ridicule and the persecutions that Moscow visits upon those independent thinkers who dare criticize crooked labor officials. Thus they came to the only person they thought could help them in their community—their Representative in Congress—and in all sincerity and without political motive; and as a plain citizen of this country I am laying their story before this body.

The mills and the mines and the factories of my country have enemies of the Nation in them, and by God it is time to get them out of there legally without going through any of the extra legal and awkward methods of mass voting by the members of the union themselves.

In my home town of Wilkinsburg there is an organized bund, which, up until a few months ago, was a very noisy outfit. Being composed in the main of smart and intelligent Nazis, they have quit being noisy and I do not hear anything of them any more from themselves, but those fellows are working in those factories back in Pennsylvania, and is there any Member of this body simple enough to believe that they are not hoping for the success of their Nazi master whether this country is in the war or not? In the name of the honest workmen of Pennsylvania and of the people of the United States, I am laying this matter before the Congress for its immediate attention and asking that you do something about it.

My colleagues, do you know that there are now twice as many members in Communist and affiliated movements in the United States today as there are at present in the Communist Party of Russia? Do you know that there are over 610 national Communist and affiliated organizations with thousands of State and local branches? Do you know that there are over 300 Communist newspapers and magazines in the United States? Let me show you one.

Here is a small monthly newspaper called the Union Generator, the official organ of Westinghouse Local 601, United Electric, Radio, and Machine Workers of America. It is published under the name of the workers of the Westinghouse plant, but this paper is directed from the office of Comrade Earl Browder, of New York City.

Last week John A. Metcalf, president of the union, became alarmed at the situation inside his own local and he wrote out a statement saying that he would not be responsible for anything that was published in the Union Generator. The editor of the Generator, acting in true Moscow manner, refused to give the president of the union space in the president's own newspaper; whereupon Mr. Metcalf was required to distribute handbills up and down the Turtle Creek Valley, stating that he had no control of his own newspaper.

This Congress has taken longer steps into unknown things than any other in the history of the Nation. The Congress is going to draft the young men of the Nation, it has given the administrative branch the power to draft the Nation's industry. We have authorized and are building another complete fleet. We have given part of our Navy to England. We are shipping Navy planes from our own defense forces to another nation. We have determined that any person who commits sabotage can go to jail for 30 years. That is very fine and good, but why lock the stable after the horse is stolen?

Across the river from my district, night before last, a chemical plant blew up—nobody knows why, but the plant is not there any more. A few days ago the Hercules Powder Co. over on the coast blew up—nobody knows how it happened, but a lot of men and part of that plant are not there any more. Spies and saboteurs are clever men that usually do not get blown up.

It appears to me that the Congress of the United States had better take some steps toward drafting the enemies of the Nation out of their defense plants. I cannot see why any of you would oppose such a bill—just good politics ought to put you against the enemies of the Nation. These "reds" and Nazis and others of their kind are of a very tiny minority—they make a lot of noise, but thank God they do not control the country, nor its politics as yet. Thus you are safe in adopting a strictly American law.

My bill prohibits any Communists, bundsmen, Fascists, or members of any poltical party that has branches in any other nation, or any person certified by the Department of Justice as being affiliated or associated with any such political organizations, or even sympathetic to such political philosophy, from working in any capacity in any plant, utility, or transportation device that is connected with the defense program of the United States Government.

The bill, if made into a law, will clean out thousands of seriously dangerous enemies, and we will replace them with good, honest, patriotic American workmen. It is time to quit stalling with these people; it is time to take action. There is not a Member of Congress who goes back to his district that does not hear the question a thousand times, "Why doesn't the Congress do something about the 'fifth columnists'?" Well, here is a way the Congress can do something for the sake of our industry, for the sake of our national defense, and for the sake of our country. I ask you to support the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a newspaper article and excerpts from official publications.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

A FEW OF THE FALLACIES OF THE NEW DEAL

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, in asking for this time today I did it for the purpose of clarifying some of the issues before the people of this country and not for the purpose of making a partisan speech or a personal attack upon anyone.

To my way of thinking, the New Deal is fundamentally wrong.

First, the New Deal legislates for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many. The expressed thought and philosophy of my State for two generations has been based on a program of the greatest good for the greatest number, and this philosophy has been impressed upon every student at our great State institution of learning. We think and we vote on this premise.

Secondly, the New Deal proceeds on the basis that the end justifies the means. This is basically wrong, and the results are already becoming evident in an attitude whereby many public officers no longer fill their office in a spirit of its being a public trust. President Roosevelt and his family set the pace with its insurance, mattress, and Sweetheart soap projects.

The Jeffersonian Democrats and Lincoln Republicans desire to preserve our form of government, its ideals, its principles, and its institutions. This is a constructive force built on fairness, justice, love, and tolerance. They realize this country has been made great and can be preserved by following these social and economic principles.

The New Deal Progressives desire a new brand of government, based on foreign ideologies and is one that has a defeatist viewpoint. The "superman" has been their need and now the "indispensable" man is their cry. This philosophy of government is diametrically opposed to the political philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, who had such great faith in the people themselves.

The New Deal Progressives say, "the last frontier is gone"—when millions of undeveloped acres lie in our land; they say "Youth, millions too many" when never before did youth have the opportunities of achievement they could have today.

The New Deal Progressive Party would destroy our form of government. It is a destructive force. It sings a hymn of hate; it pits class against class; it thrives on spite, envy, hate, intolerance, and greed.

The time has come to bring the Government back to the people and unless we do we will have as completely a totalitarian form of government as any European country. On November 5 we vote on whether to have a republic or a dictatorship. On November 5 we decide once and for all if we are to have a government of laws or a government of men or man.

The New Deal is material, with little or no regard for spiritual values. It falsely claims that dollars mean contentment and happiness.

AGRICULTURAL FALLACIES OF THE NEW DEAL

First. One of the most fallacious acts of the New Deal occurred on August 26, 1937, when the rubber-stamp Congress passed Senate bill 2229, which permitted Members of Congress themselves to enter into agreements under the agricultural program in order that the Members could personally enjoy the benefit of their own legislation. Up to this time the law of the land would not allow Members to enjoy legislation which gave them personal emoluments, but the New Deal changed this procedure to enable Members themselves to profit. This type of legislation is a violation of the public trust and it was passed without the inconvenience of a roll call. It is in direct opposition to the spirit of the Constitution and the act should be repealed if the people are to continue to believe that we are being selected for the general welfare of the public.

Second. The New Deal confuses even its own members. On March 28, 1939, one of our colleagues, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], on the floor of the House said, in part:

Let me tell you this: I hope this will be a lesson to the American Congress, to the American farmer, and to the American people as a whole, that we are going to abandon these foolish philosophies of trying to do something by cutting down acreage, killing cattle, killing hogs, and things of that sort, and restore the American farmer to the estate of decency, at least, that he used to have. We can do that. We can give him parity and better than parity. We can give him cost of production. There is a petition on file up here, No. 5, that will give to the farmers of this country what it costs them at least to produce a pound of cotton or a bushel of wheat or any other commodity that we grow on the farms of this country. Let us give it to him. We have got to quit this. Congress cannot go on year after year appropriating five hundred million to a billion dollars a year in order to carry out this darned fool philosophy that some fellow has picked up somewhere and tries to foist on the people of the country and make the farmers endorse it in order to get an imaginary payment. [Applause.]

Millions of the American people have Mr. MASSINGALE'S views on this subject.

Then, on September 9, 1940, another colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON], placed an extension of remarks in the RECORD in which he tried to enumerate and count the blessings of the New Deal agricultural program. He gives it credit for benefits which have never been obtained by the farmers of this country under the present administration.

For example, take the matter of low interest rates to farmers for which he gives the credit to the present administration. Let us look at the facts. Here they are: Monday, June 7, 1937, was Consent Calendar day in the House, and on page 5377 of the RECORD for this day I find that bill H. R. 6763 was brought up. This bill provided for the reduction of the interest rate of Federal Land Bank loans to 3½ percent and the rate on Commissioner loans to 4 percent. No objection being raised, the bill was unanimously passed. There is no record of any Republican opposition, nor any other for that matter.

But here comes the "fly in the ointment." On July 12, 1937, I find in the RECORD a message from President Roosevelt, Document No. 290, which is headed "Message from the President of the United States returning without approval H. R. 6763," and so forth. It was ordered to lie on the Speaker's table. In this veto message President Roosevelt said, in part:

The reduction of the rates of interest on Federal land-bank loans to 3½ percent for the fiscal year 1938, and to 4 percent for the fiscal year 1939, as required by the bill for loans made through national farm-loan associations would, it is estimated, necessitate payments from the Treasury in the amount of approximately $31,700,000 for the former year and $21,200,000 for the latter, a total of $52,900,000. The effect of such an arrangement is that part of the individual borrower's interest is paid for him by the United States. In other words, it constitutes a gift to individual borrowers from the Federal Treasury.

The contemplated reduction in interest rates on commissioner loans from 5 to 4 percent under the bill would reduce the annual income of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, which owns those loans, by an amount of approximately $8,350,000. No provision is made for a corresponding reimbursement of this sum by the Treasury to the Corporation. Losses suffered by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation ultimately fall upon the United States as the sole holder of the Corporation's capital stock. More than this, the payment of principal and interest on all bonds issued by the Corporation is guaranteed by the United States.

Any reduction in the interest rate on commissioner loans will place the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation in such a position that there is a definite possibility that it may not be able to meet its obligations from its own income.

Following up this matter further, I find that on page 7132 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 13, 1937, there were 260 votes to override the President's veto. There were 65 Republicans voting "aye." There were 98 nays, of which only 4 were Republicans. This is conclusive evidence that the Republican votes were necessary for the farmers to obtain the lower interest rates. A few millions off the farmers' backs seemed unthinkable to President Roosevelt.

Still further, I find that on Monday, May 16, 1938, on page 6926 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, H. R. 10530 was unanimously passed. This bill extended for 2 years the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans and provided for a 4-percent interest rate on commissioner loans until July 1, 1940.

However, I also find the following message from President Roosevelt, Document No. 713:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 10530, entitled "An act to extend for 2 additional years the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land bank commissioner's loans until July 1, 1940."

Section 1 of the bill extends for 2 additional years, beginning July 1, 1938, the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans.

Section 2 of the bill extends for approximately 1 year—that is, from July 22, 1939, to June 30, 1940—the 4-percent interest rate on land bank commissioner loans.

Also in the June 15, 1938, RECORD, page 9501, I find the vote to override the President's veto.

Now, just what does this RECORD disclose? First, it shows that 85 Democrats and only 2 Republicans voted to sustain President Roosevelt's veto and against the lower interest rates for farm mortgages. There were 244 votes required to override the President's veto, and the Republican votes were necessary to get a two-thirds majority as 85 Democrats had voted against repassage over the veto. In reading the record of this vote, I was impressed by the large number of new dealers that voted against this lower interest rate for farmers. The new dealers want to take credit for reducing the farm-interest burden but their votes are indisputable evidence that they are making false claims. The unvarnished fact is that the Republicans in Congress, by their votes, made it possible for the farmers to have a 3½-percent to 4-percent interest rate.

HERE IS THE RECORD

Mr. FERGUSON says "by their fruits ye shall know them." So may it be.

Below is the record of the roll call on June 15, 1938, page 9051:

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this is the same type of bill as was vetoed 2 years ago and passed by the House over the President's veto. The same issues and the same provisions are involved. This simply carries forward for another 2 years the rates of interest that have prevailed during the last 2 years. It seems to me the need for the 3½-percent rate on Federal land-bank loans and the 4-percent rate on land bank commissioner's loans is just as great as was the case 2 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the Constitution, the vote will have to be taken by the yeas and nays.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 244, nays 87, not voting 97, as follows:

[Roll No. 123]

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the bill was passed, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Lemke and Mr. Cole of New York (for) with Mr. Hook (against).

Mr. Jenkins of Ohio and Mr. Smith of Washington (for) with Mr. Curley (against).

Mr. Reed of New York and Mr. Hoffman (for) with Mr. O'Connor of Montana (against).

Mr. Eaton and Mr. Ditter (for) with Mr. Boylan of New York (against).

Mr. Arends and Mr. Drewry of Virginia (for) with Mr. Fitzpatrick (against).

Mr. White of Ohio and Mr. Hartley (for) with Mr. Sirovich (against).

This roll call is educational. It shows only 178 Democrats voting to override the President's veto, and for the lower interest rates to the farmers of the Nation.

This roll call also shows 87 votes against overriding the President's veto, of which 85 were Democrats and only 2 Republicans.

The nays on this roll call look like a homecoming of the followers of Tammany Hall, Hague, and Kelly-Nash.

This is no attempt to pit the farmer against any class except the machine politicians of Tammany Hall, Hague, and Kelly-Nash, whose disciples are vociferous in their pleas for the common people, but whose votes are for "cheap" food. If they cannot get it cheap from domestic sources they vote to lower the tariff and get it cheap from foreign sources.

In the same RECORD of Tuesday, July 13, 1937, we find several interesting speeches when the question of overriding the President's veto and giving the farmers of the Nation the benefits of lower interest rates was under consideration.

No. 1. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] wishes to balance the Budget. I was pleased to note that at that time this matter was really considered, as I have not heard anything about this very desirable action since I have been here. I had come to the conclusion that the present administration had held that the balancing of the Budget was but an empty dream.

Mr. RAYBURN. If we are to do this for the farmer, we will be asked to do the same thing for the urban home owner. I think the gentleman will agree with me that the farmer in his country and mine is pretty well out of the depression as far as farm prices are concerned. I think we are selling the produce of our farms at about as reasonable prices as we have had in his time and mine. What argument would we have with reference to the urban home owner should he say he is paying an excessive rate when he is trying to acquire a little home? What argument are we going to make against him if the Committee on Banking and Currency brings out a bill affecting his interest rate? That would cost the Government maybe $25,000,000, maybe $50,000,000, or maybe $100,000,000. I am sure my friend, the gentleman from Texas, knows that I do not ask these questions or make these statements in criticism of him, because I know he has a very hard job, but it is quite possible that all these things added together would increase our annual outlay from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000. I think we all realize, I do at least, that it is vitally necessary, and one of the most important things that faces the country, to balance the Budget not later than 1939. [Applause.] We should strive toward that end. I know there are sections of the country in dust and drought which have not in any very great degree recovered, but I believe that the average farmer in this country, the average landowner in this country, with an interest rate reduced 40 percent from what it was if the 4 percent obtained—and I am confident I speak for the vast majority of the farm people of my immediate section in saying this—while he wants a low rate of interest he is willing to pay what it costs the Government with the cost of administration added.

It appears to me that if the President's veto is sustained, that the gentleman from Texas and his committee would in all probability be able to work out something—and we are to be here for some time yet—that would protect the farmer in a lower rate of interest than he has ever had except this 3½ percent, and yet not take money out of the General Treasury.

We also find on page 7124 of the July 13, 1937, RECORD the following speech made by our colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] the ranking Republican member of the Agriculture Committee:

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few brief observations with respect to some matters which I think should be considered in connection with the President's message.

The President's veto message is predicated upon the idea that the emergency is over as far as the farmers of this country are concerned. It is stated in the message that farm income has increased and that the level of farm prices has increased. This is true; but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that high farm prices do not do the farmer any good when he has nothing to sell, and that is just the situation in which a large proportion of our farmers have found themselves during the past year. Prices have been good because of drought and crop failures, but the farmer who had nothing to sell got no benefit whatever from that situation. This is the reason, very largely, why a continuing farm emergency is with us. Perhaps in another year, with good crops and good prices, the situation may be different; but for the present the emergency is still with us. If there was reason last year and the year before for giving the Federal land-bank borrowers an interest rate of 3½ percent, that reason prevails to the same extent today.

Later this afternoon the House will act upon the conference report on the farm-tenancy bill. We adopted that legislation for the purpose of doing away with the evils of farm tenancy. We are very foolish, it seems to me, to start a long program of farm-tenancy relief in this country unless we do what we can to prevent the lapse into tenancy which will take place under present conditions unless interest rates are somewhere near what the farmers can pay under existing conditions. During the last 5 years the net increase in the number of farm tenants in this country has been 200,000, or an average of 40,000 per year. Unless we can stop this drift it is idle to talk about solving the problem of tenancy.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. In regard to the economy phase of the President's veto message, is it the program today that we are to vote upon the proposal to give the President 6 additional secretaries, making a total of 10 secretaries? He already has 4, 2 more than any of his predecessors had. I ask the gentleman also if it is not true that at this time the Federal Government is lending money to shipbuilding concerns for less than 1 percent per annum? The farmer is to pay from 4 to 6 percent.

Did we not just recently provide $60,000,000 additional out of the Treasury to build more ships, the builders of which will likely receive these low interest rates? These ship concerns also receive subsidies. There are other groups in the country that are being more preferred out of the Federal Treasury in regard to interest rates than the farmers. Therefore other groups are being greatly preferred.

Mr. HOPE. I am in agreement with the gentleman in his contention that there are a great many favors being shown other groups which are being denied the farmer. Furthermore, if the matter of economy is involved, it would take the rest of the afternoon to even enumerate the places where waste and extravagance can be stopped. As long as we can spend over $500,000,000 a year on the Navy and almost that much on the Army, and can spend over $1,000,000,000 in 6 months buying gold from all over the world at artificial prices, we can afford to spend a little to ease the interest burden of the farmer.

But right in connection with Government savings let me call attention to the fact that so far as the farmers of this country are concerned we have been doing pretty well in making savings out of the appropriations which the Congress has made for their benefit. Most of you read in the press this morning that $60,000,000 is to be turned back into the Federal Treasury by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration out of the $500,000,000 which was appropriated last year for soil-conservation payments. Two years ago we passed a bill making an annual permanent appropriation of one-third of the customs receipts for the benefit of agriculture.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, out of the $109,000,000 which was made available last year under this appropriation, only $18,000,000 has been spent. The remainder will eventually go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mention has been made of the great variation in the interest rates on these Federal land-bank loans. I think something should be done in connection with that. We cannot remedy this general situation at this session of the Congress, but we ought to take the matter up at the next session and work out some permanent plan whereby all farmers will have a uniform rate. We can, however, relieve the existing situation by voting to pass this bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

I have the same high regard for the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration and the way in which he has administered the affairs of that organization as the distinguished chairman of our committee. I know that Governor Myers opposes this legislation; but, after all, it is up to the Congress to determine the policy of the Government in this regard. Governor Myers and his associates have carried out the policies that we have heretofore declared in a splendid way. They are entitled to a lot of credit. They will just as cheerfully and as willingly, I am sure, carry out the policy that we declare today, if we override the President's veto.

This speech has the earmarks of being very strong Republican support for the lower interest rate to farmers. Other Republicans, including the gentleman from Kansas, the Honorable EDWARD H. REES, also made a strong speech in support of the lower interest rates.

THE PRESENT SESSION

During the present session of Congress, bill H. R. 8748 was introduced to again extend this lower interest rate of 3½ and 4 percent. I offered an amendment to equalize and reduce the interest rate on the commissioner loans to 3½ percent, the same as the interest rate on the Federal land-bank loans, and it was accepted. The House passed the bill providing for 5 years of the lower interest rate, but the Senate reduced this length of time to 2 years, and the House concurred in the Senate's decision. This is election year and Mr. Roosevelt signed the bill; he did not appear to have so many reasons for vetoing it as he had the two previous times. These facts leave no doubt as to the Republican support for farm measures that make common sense.

ONE OF MANY EXAMPLES OF NEW DEAL OPERATIONS

On page 7129 of this same RECORD of July 13, 1937, we find a speech by our Republican colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]. He calls attention to the cross-purposes of the New Deal agricultural program, whereby President Roosevelt vetoes one bill to lower the interest rate to 3½ to 4 percent and on the same day he has another bill to make 100-percent loans for 40 years at 3 percent interest. This is just one more of the New Deal examples of fake humanitarianism and one more of the alleged social gains we hear so much about. The speech is as follows:

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how anyone in the face of the facts can justify a vote in support of the President's veto of the bill which continues the present 3½-percent interest rate on Federal farm loans. There is now before the House a conference report accompanying H. R. 7562 and which will undoubtedly be voted upon today. This is a conference report on the farm-tenancy bill, which would loan 100 percent of the value of the farm to tenant farmers to purchase farms with at 3 percent interest. If this bill is carried out to its fullest extent, it will mean that $11,000,000,000 will be loaned to tenant-farmers of America at 3 percent interest to provide money with which to purchase farms. I am informed that this is an administration measure and that it has the full support of the President. How can the President veto a bill, which veto, if sustained, would compel the farmers to pay the old interest rate and which would discontinue the present interest rate of 3½ percent on farm loans and at the same time support the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which would ultimately loan to the tenant farmers $11,000,000,000 at 3 percent interest? To be consistent, the President would, of course, have to veto the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which is his own administration measure.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I believe the farm-tenant problem is a real problem in America and ought to be solved, but I am simply pointing out the inconsistency of the policy of the President in supporting a bill that will give one class of farmers loans at 3 percent and at the same time vetoing a bill which would give another class of farmers 3½ percent interest on his Federal farm loan. Under the Farm Tenancy Act he is trying to make farm owners out of tenants. In vetoing this interest measure he would be making tenants out of farm owners.

Mr. Speaker, the majority leader in his remarks made a statement that if we continued a 3½-percent interest rate on farm loans, what argument would we have against the reduction of the interest rate on Home Owners' Loan mortgages. The President advanced a similar argument in support of his veto.

On August 17, 1935, and during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress (p. 13577) I introduced a bill to reduce the interest rate on home-owners' loans from 5 percent to 3½ percent. At that time I made the following statement on the floor of the House:

"According to a statement furnished me by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, giving the latest available figures, $2,665,061,750 has so far been borrowed on bonds and loaned to home owners. The rate of interest paid on these bonds varies from 1½ percent to 3 percent per annum, averaging a little more than 2½ percent. The rate charged home owners on mortgages is 5 percent. The Government is charging annually on the above mortgages $133,244,817 in interest and paying out on these bonds $70,511,765 annually. In other words, the Government is charging the home owners each year approximately $63,000,000 more in interest than they are paying out on the bonds."

I also placed in the RECORD a table showing the amount, the serial number, the date of issue, and the interest rate on each home owner's loan bond issued up to June 1, 1935. This verifies the statement I made that the average interest rate paid by the Government was approximately 2½ percent. In view of the fact that the Government is paying 2½ percent and making the home owner pay 5 percent, what justification can the administration have for failing to reduce the interest rate to at least 3½ percent? Why should the home owner pay double the interest rate on the mortgage that the Government is paying on the bonds?

The following article from the September 19, 1940, issue of the Spencer (Wis.) Record, which no doubt was prepared by the New Deal propaganda mill, is a concrete example of the happenings shown in Mr. ENGEL's speech of July 13, 1938:

UNIT REORGANIZATION OF FARMS UNDERTAKEN

Big farms to fit land of low production—is building a permanent agriculture in the southern Great Plains, an area attracting Nation-wide attention in the recent drought years. In these years, the United States Department of Agriculture finds almost without exception, the few farmers able to survive operated farms of 2,000 or more acres, most of which were in grass, with cultivated acres producing supplemental feed.

This pointed the way to unit reorganization, begun last year by the Farm Security Administration. The objective is operating units of 2,000 to 4,000 acres, in contrast to farms of about 500 acres or less, which were common when the land was broken up in the wet years immediately following the World War. Dry years have shown that wheat is not dependable as a major source of income in the western part of the southern plains and have increased absentee ownership. Thousands of acres have been abandoned or returned to the State through tax delinquencies.

The reoganized unit of Fred Bosley in Baca County, Colo., shows how the idea works. In 1935 he had 320 acres. Nearly 2,100 acres could be added to his unit, consisting of 1,060 acres of land to be restored to grass, 90 acres for cultivated crops, and 930 acres of grassland. Negotiations with 8 landowners were necessary before the acreage was acquired. Serious wind erosion had been a menace on land now being restored to native grasses.

Bosley's loan of $2,000 from the F. S. A. was used to purchase a used tractor and equipment, a herd of 8 dual-purpose cows and 17 range cattle, a pressure cooker for use in the home, for payment of $236 delinquent taxes and $95 cash leases, and $331 for operating expense. His subsistence is provided by sale of produce from the farm. His cash crop is broomcorn. His plan of repayment began with $200 in May 1939 and is $300 each spring for the following 6 years.

One hundred and thirty-three reorganizations of the Bosley type have been accomplished since the program was inaugurated last year, the average loan amounting to $1,740. The average change has been from approximately 600 to 2,500 acres. Approximately 300,000 acres have been brought into better use through this program up to the present time.

About 300 other reorganizations are under way. Although the number of farm families affected is small, the program is new and time is needed to get it in full swing. It is estimated that about 75 percent of the farms in the southern Great Plains must be grouped into larger units if they are to survive.

Here we have a mental picture of the New Deal in action. President Roosevelt had many reasons to veto the reduction of interest rates for the people already on the land but the New Deal took another man, a Mr. Bosley, who had 350 acres and decided he needed 2,100 acres more in his farm. Eight other farmers had to make way for Mr. Bosley. The New Deal had loaned him $2,000 and started him merrily on his way. Now what has become of the other eight families? Are they in the migratory camps of California? And what about the fatherly help given to one individual and the using of public funds to finance this big-scale program, which is most assuredly operated for the few at the expense of the many? This is not only an example of a lack of common sense but of common justice. How much of this $270,000,000 of public funds invested in such enterprises will ever be recovered will be an interesting, though painful, observation for the American taxpayer to make?

THE NEW DEALERS VOTE TO LOWER THE TARIFF

President Roosevelt promised not to lower the farm tariff when he was elected in 1932. He promoted the Hull brand of reciprocal-trade treaties that lowered the tariff on over 160 farm commodities. When the first treaty was made with Canada and the tariff reduced 2 cents per pound on cheese, there were 14 times as much cheese imported in 1936 as in 1935. In 1938, when cheese averaged 12.6 cents per pound for the year, the second treaty was made and the tariff reduced by another 20 percent. There were 3½ times as much cheese imported in 1939 as in 1938 even though cheese was only 11.7 cents per pound the first 6 months of 1939.

The following shows the vote on extending these trade treaties as shown on pages 1935–1936 of the February 23, 1940, RECORD:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 216, nays 168, answered "present" 3, not voting 38, as follows:

[Roll No. 31]

Yeas—216: Alexander, Allen of Pennsylvania, Anderson of Missouri, Arnold, Barden, Barnes, Barry, Barton, Bates of Kentucky, Beam, Beckworth, Bell, Bland, Bloom, Boehne, Boland, Boren, Boykin, Bradley of Pennsylvania, Brooks, Brown of Georgia, Bryson, Buck, Bulwinkle, Burch, Burgin, Byrne of New York, Byrns of Tennessee, Byron, Cannon of Missouri, Cartwright, Casey of Massachusetts, Chapman, Clark, Claypool, Cluett, Cochran, Cole of Maryland, Collins, Colmer, Cooley, Cooper, Costello, Courtney, Cox, Cravens, Creal, Crosser, Crowe, Cullen, D'Alesandro, Darden, Davis, Delaney, Dickstein, Dies, Dingell, Doughton, Doxey, Duncan, Dunn, Durham, Eberharter, Edelstein, Ellis, Evans, Faddis, Fay, Ferguson, Fitzpatrick, Flaherty, Flannagan, Flannery, Ford of Mississippi, Thomas F. McMillan, Maciejewski, Mahon, Marcantonio, Martin of Illinois, Massingale, May, Mills of Arkansas, Mills of Louisiana, Mitchell, Monroney, Murdock of Arizona, Murdock of Utah, Myers, Norrell, O'Day, O'Leary, O'Neal, O'Toole, Pace, Parsons, Patman, Patrick, Patton, Pearson, Peterson of Georgia, Pfeifer, Poage, Polk, Rabaut, Ramspeck, Randolph, Rankin, Rayburn, Richards, Robinson of Utah, Rogers of Oklahoma, Romjue, Sabath, Sacks, Sasscer, Satterfield, Schaefer of Illinois, Schuetz, Schwert, Shanley, Shannon, Sheppard, Sheridan, Smith of Connecticut, Smith of Illinois, Smith of Virginia, Smith of West Virginia, Snyder, Somers of New York, South, Sparkman, Spence, Starnes of Alabama, Sumners of Texas, Sutphin, Sweeney, Tarver, Tenerowicz, Terry, Thomas of Texas, Thomason, Tolan, Vincent of Kentucky, Vinson of Georgia, Voorhis of California, Ward, Warren, Weaver, Welch, West, Whelchel, Whittington, Williams of Missouri, Wood, Woodrum of Virginia, Zimmerman.

Nays—168: Allen of Illinois, H. Carl Andersen, Andersen of California, A. H. Andresen, Angell, Arends, Austin, Ball, Bates of Massachusetts, Bender, Blackney, Bolles, Bradley of Michigan, Brewster, Brown of Ohio, Buckler of Minnesota, Burdick, Cannon of Florida, Carlson, Carter, Case of South Dakota, Chiperfield, Church, Clason, Clevenger, Coffee of Nebraska, Cole of New York, Connery, Crawford, Culkin, Curtis, Dempsey, Dirksen, Disney, Ditter, Dondero, Douglas, Dworshak, Eaton, Edmiston, Elliott, Elston, Engel, Englebright, Fenton, Fish, Leland M. Ford, Gamble, Gartner, Gearhart, Gerlach, Gifford, Gilchrist, Gillie, Graham, Grant of Indiana, Green, Gross, Guyer of Kansas, Gwynne, Edwin A. Hall, Leonard W. Hall, Halleck, Hancock, Harness, Harter of New York, Hawks, Hess, Hinshaw, Hoffman, Holmes, Hope, Horton, Hull, Jenkins of Ohio, Jennings, Jensen, Johns, Johnson of Illinois, Johnson of Indiana, Jones of Ohio, Kean, Keefe, Kilburn, Kilday, Kinzer, Knutson, Kunkel, Lambertson, Landis, Leavy, LeCompte, Lemke, Lewis of Ohio, Luce, McDowell, McLean, McLeod, Maas, Magnuson, Marshall, Martin of Iowa, Martin of Massachusetts, Mason, Michener, Miller, Monkiewicz, Mott, Mundt, Murray, O'Brien, O'Connor, Oliver, Osmers, Peterson of Florida, Pierce, Pittenger, Plumley, Powers, Reece of Tennessee, Reed of Illinois, Reed of New York, Rees of Kansas, Rich, Risk, Rodgers of Pennsylvania, Rogers of Massachusetts, Routzohn, Rutherford, Ryan, Sandager, Schafer of Wisconsin, Schiffler, Scrugham, Seccombe, Secrest, Seger, Shafer of Michigan, Short, Simpson, Smith of Maine, Smith of Ohio, Smith of Washington, Springer, Stearns of New Hampshire, Stefan, Sumner of Illinois, Taber, Talle, Thill, Thorkelson, Tibbott, Tinkham, Treadway, Van Zandt, Vorys of Ohio, Vreeland, Wallgren, Wheat, White of Idaho, White of Ohio, Wigglesworth, Williams of Delaware, Winter, Wolfenden of Pennsylvania, Wolverton of New Jersey, Woodruff of Michigan, and Youngdahl.

Answered "present"—3: Hendricks, Wadsworth, and Wolcott.

Not voting—38: Allen of Louisiana, Andrews, Buckley of New York, Caldwell, Camp, Celler, Coffee of Washington, Corbett, Crowther, Cummings, Darrow, DeRouen, Drewry, Fernandez, Folger, Gehrmann, Jarrett, Jeffries, Jenks of New Hampshire, Johnson of Oklahoma, Kelly, Maloney, Mansfield, Merritt, Moser, Mouton, Nelson, Nichols, Norton, Robertson, Robsion of Kentucky, Rockefeller, Schulte, Steagall, Sullivan, Taylor, Thomas of New Jersey, and Walter.

So the joint resolution was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Merritt (for) with Mr. Jarrett (against).
Mr. Kelly (for) with Mr. Darrow (against).
Mr. Nelson (for) with Mr. Thomas of New Jersey (against).
Mr. Drewry (for) with Mr. Jenks of New Hampshire (against).
Mr. Sullivan (for) with Mr. Caldwell (against).
Mr. Schulte (for) with Mr. Gehrmann (against).
Mr. Steagall (for) with Mr. Wolcott (against).
Mrs. Norton (for) with Mr. Coffee of Washington (against).
Mr. Mansfield (for) with Mr. Rockefellow (against).
Mr. Cummings (for) with Mr. Wadsworth (against).
Mr. Moser (for) with Mr. Hendricks (against).
Mr. Robertson (for) with Mr. Crowther (against).
Mr. Maloney (for) with Mr. Corbett (against).
Mr. DeRouen (for) with Mr. Jeffries (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Taylor with Mr. Andrews.
Mr. Walter with Mr. Robsion of Kentucky.
Mr. Allen of Louisiana with Mr. Folger.
Mr. Fernandez with Mr. Nichols.
Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma with Mr. Celler.
Mr. Buckley of New York with Mr. Mouton.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement of the pairs I ask that my vote in the negative be withdrawn from the record and that I be recorded as voting "present."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MOSER. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I therefore withdraw my vote and vote "present."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. STEAGALL. Were he present, he would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." For that reason, I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The interesting fact in connection with this vote is that it gives administration approval to the lower tariff on farm products. Here we not only have recorded the free trade inheritance of the South, but we find the big city cousins from the lairs of Tammany Hall, Hague, and Kelly-Nash political machines lined up for what they think will be cheaper food. They have many reasons to ask support for their constituents, but they want the farmer to continue to produce in competition with the cheap labor of Europe, Asia, and South America.

These new dealers of the school of Tammany Hall, Hague, Kelly-Nash and company not only voted against lower interest rates for farmers but also for lowered tariffs for the protection of the farmer. They, by their votes, are opposed to the American market for the American farmer, and indirectly their votes harm labor as well.

LAGUARDIA IS AGAINST THE FARMER

The new-found friend of the farmer, Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, is to make New Deal speeches during the campaign, according to press reports. I am sure the farmers of the country will be interested to know how he opposed the tariff increase on their products when he was a Member of Congress.

In the Friday, May 24, 1929, RECORD, on pages 1885 and 1886, Mr. LaGuardia, along with Mr. Ramseyer, of Iowa, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], who were in favor of a 14-cent tariff on butter, spoke as follows:

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is an amendment to increase by 2 cents the rates on butter and butter substitutes. The bill as originally prepared by the committee fixed the rate on butter at 12 cents and the related products, milk, cream, and so forth, on that basis.

The butter rate was fixed on a cost study between the United States and Denmark, and the 12 cents represents an increase from 8 cents to 12 cents, which was made by the President April 5, 1928.

After the bill was reported—in fact, during the hearings held during the past week by the Republican members of the committee, and before which appeared both Republican and Democratic Members of the House, this is one of the subjects that was brought up—and the claim was made that the rate was too low.

I personally took this matter up with the Tariff Commission, and there found some cost studies that they had on the production of butter in Canada and in the United States, and also between New Zealand and the United States.

The cost studies made by the Tariff Commission a few years ago between this country and Denmark showed a difference of 12.92 cents per pound.

The President increased the duty to the limit—that is, 50 percent—which raised it from 8 cents to 12 cents.

In the Tariff Commission there is a report on butter obtained from a special report of the Canadian House of Commons showing the cost of producing butter in Ontario. Based on this report, the cost difference between Canada and this country is 13.25 cents per pound.

Then we have two reports in possession of the Tariff Commission on the costs in New Zealand, one is from the Wisconsin Experiment Station, which was conducted in New Zealand by Dean Russell and Professor Macklin, men who have the confidence of members of the Tariff Commission. Upon this study it is shown that the cost of producing butter in New Zealand is 27.9 percent less than in Denmark.

At the time the butter study was made by the Tariff Commission of the United States, a gentleman by the name of Mr. S. Sorenson, of Denmark, was here and testified as an expert before the Commission on the cost of producing butter in Denmark. From here he went to New Zealand and conducted a cost study on producing butter in New Zealand. Mr. Sorenson's report shows that the cost of producing butter in New Zealand is 25 percent less than in Denmark. Remember, now, that the 12 cents we have now on butter is based on the cost difference between Denmark and the United States.

This report from the Wisconsin Experiment Station and the report made by Mr. Sorenson, of Denmark, one found that the cost of producing butter was 27.9 percent less in New Zealand than in Denmark, and the other found 25 percent less in New Zealand than in Denmark, are almost together. On this basis the difference in producing a pound of butter in New Zealand and the United States is about 19 cents per pound.

The committee therefore determined to recommend to the House an increase from 12 cents to 14 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. This 14 cents equalizes the difference in cost between the United States and Canada. If the New Zealand competition should become injurious, the Tariff Commission, having power to increase or decrease 50 percent, could take care of that situation.

The committee does not recommend a change in any of the rates in the related paragraphs to butter.

On milk we increased the duty from 2½ cents to 5 cents a gallon. This is on the basis of 12 cents on butter, and the cream we increased from 20 cents to 48 cents per gallon.

The question may arise, if we increase butter from 12 cents to 14 cents, why should we not increase the other products in the milk paragraphs? Since the hearings before the committee closed the Tariff Commission made a report to the President as to the differences in the costs of producing milk and cream in the United States and in Canada, and this report shows that the cost difference in milk amounts to 4.3 cents per gallon. The rate in the bill is 5 cents a gallon.

The difference in cost of producing cream in the United States and in Canada is 41.2 cents per gallon, and the rate in the bill is 48 cents a gallon. On the basis of the differences in costs of producing milk and cream, no changes are necessary in the proposed rates in the bill.

Mr. KETCHAM. Before the gentleman leaves that point, will he yield for one question?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Referring to New Zealand and their production cost of butter, is it not also necessary that we have a differential higher than the one against Canada for the simple reason that they produce their surplus at the very time when our production costs are the highest?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Their winter comes during our summer, and vice versa.

Mr. KETCHAM. And, consequently, their costs are lowest when our costs are highest.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; and the committee is of the opinion that this 14 cents will take care of that situation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman explain to the members of the committee why it is that the committee in its wisdom is not recommending to the House an additional tariff on the product of dried whole milk in view of the raise in the rates on butter?

Mr. RAMSEYER. When you take into consideration that this late report of the Tariff Commission shows the differences in the costs of producing milk and cream in the United States and in Canada are less than the rates in the bill on milk and cream, and although we have not the difference in cost of production of dried milk, if such a study were made, it would probably be found that the rates in the bill are high enough to equalize the cost difference in this country and Canada.

Mr. WOODRUFF. What I had in mind was not the difference in cost between this country and Canada but the condition that exists in the importation from Scandinavian countries. They are importing thousands of tons of dried milk, and it seems to me that this is an opportune time for the Ways and Means Committee to recognize the situation.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The proposed rates in the bill on dried milk represents a considerable increase over the existing law and should take care of the situation the gentleman has in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. Mr. Chairman, after the Committee on Ways and Means had given this matter a great deal of study they reported the bill leaving butter at 12 cents a pound. This was no mere accident, it was the result of very careful study, and there was considerable data available, because the Tariff Commission had made a study of butter conditions, and the rate was increased from 8 cents to 12 cents not very long ago. Under the 12-cent rate the importation of Danish butter practically stopped. Figures will bear me out on that.

It is true that New Zealand is producing butter, but New Zealand is not exporting any great amount of butter to the United States. You will find a very heavy exportation of butter from New Zealand to the Philippines, and the greater part of that butter is consumed by the United States Army in the Philippines.

If you want to cut off the New Zealand market you can do so by writing into the appropriation bill for the Army that all food for the Army in the Philippines shall be purchased in the United States. It would not be necessary to write that into the appropriation bill if the 15 States which represent agriculture would go to the Quartermaster General and point out that the United States Army in the Philippines is consuming New Zealand butter. By doing that they might bring about the desired result.

But I submit that there is no justification for an increase of duty from 12 to 14 cents on butter, because there is very little butter being imported. Butter is so expensive now that it is a luxury. Much has been said about the producer, the industrial worker, and the farmer, but let me say to you that if you run the price up so high that the consumers are not able to purchase butter it will not do any good.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman wish to eat foreign butter instead of domestic butter?

At the time Mayor LaGuardia was protesting about the high cost of living in his district the racketeers were in control. It cost more at that time to transport a carload of poultry four blocks from the terminal to the killing pens in New York City than it cost in freight from Wisconsin to New York City.

The New Deal with all its trimmings here caused a greater spread between what the producer gets and what the consumer pays. To help both the producer and the consumer this spread should be narrowed instead of constantly widened as it is by the New Deal.

The following remarks in the RECORD of May 24, 1929, by our colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] shows that even then he was looking after the interests of the dairy farmers of this Nation; and we all know he has been trying to do so ever since but without much success under the New Deal:

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the committee amendment. I was under the impression that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] was for the farmers, but hearing his talk here this afternoon on the question of the increase of 2 cents a pound in the rate on butter, it seems to me that he has deserted the farmers of this country. He referred to 15 States that are involved in the matter of this question of butter. Why, every farmer in the United States who has a dairy cow will be benefited by this increase in the tariff. It is not a sectional proposition; it is a national proposition, and it is the only agricultural tariff where all of the farmers in the country will be benefited, and we are asking for this increase from 12 to 14 cents for that reason.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not want the 19 cents?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Further, the gentleman states that the Tariff Commission recommended certain changes in the tariff on butter, based on an investigation some years ago. At that time, in 1924, Denmark was the principal competing country, and the Tariff Commission naturally took the principal competing country and the conditions they found there, but the situation has changed since then and New Zealand today is the principal competing country, and the difference in the cost of production there and here is 18 cents per pound, less transportation. The farmers are entitled to have 15 cents on butter, but they will be satisfied with the 14 cents at the present time and then appear before the Tariff Commission for further increase when conditions demand it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman, then, is supporting the committee amendment and not the amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I rose in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is some relief.

Mr. ANDRESEN. As far as raising the cost to the consumers of butter is concerned, I say to the Members of the House that they need have no fear as to a rise in the price of butter on account of this increase in the tariff, for the reason that the farmers are not today receiving the full benefit of the 12-cent tariff.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

SPEECH FROM NEW JERSEY

The following speech by Mrs. NORTON, of New Jersey, is in this same May 24, 1929 issue, page 1881. This speech is against raising the tariff on cattle. It is well to note here that ever since the Democratic administration of 1912 the United States has been on a beef-importing basis. The production of pork in the United States is gradually equaling the domestic consumption, and no doubt if the New Deal stays in power, we will soon be on a pork importing basis, whereas, a few years ago we were large exporters of pork and pork products.

The speech is as follows:

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

This tariff was supposed to be revised principally to aid the farmer; that we all admit; but the tariff placed on imported beef and lamb is outrageous.

It is admitted by all the packers in Chicago that, as a result of decreased production during the last 5 years, beef has increased to the point that it cannot be sold to the masses, and there is no profit for the distributor. This is conceded by Wilson, Armour, Swift, and Cudahy in their reports; and their remarks can be found in the tariff hearings, volume 7, schedule 7, page 3947, fresh meats.

I would also like to refer to Mr. Alfred H. Benjamin's brief on page 3951, containing important statistics dealing with the cattle in this country, showing there was a decrease of 1,800,000 cattle during the last 5 years; but, notwithstanding that decrease, the cattle on hand had increased to the extent of $500,000,000. The figures quoted in the brief referred to were taken from the Yearbook of the Department of Commerce, 1928, volume 1, table 70, page 246, which shows a big increase in livestock prices in 1927.

Think of it! We now pay $1 for four lamb chops, and the price of steak is beyond reach of the workingman's dining table.

I am told it takes 5 years, at least, to produce cattle. If we increase the tariff at this time, every family in this country will be taxed for the next 3 years from $1,000 to $1,500 per annum over and above the present high cost of living.

The vital necessities of life, and particularly for the Nation, are meat, butter, milk, cream, and sugar, and all of these commodities call for an increase of 100 percent under this new tariff.

During the past year, with the prevailing high prices on all meat products, it has been difficult for the average wage earner to purchase meats. The meat consumption has not declined in localities where people have money enough to buy it; but it is a pitiful sight in a meat market to find women who formerly were able to buy enough meat to properly feed a family, picking around from item to item and then having sufficient money to buy meat for only half the family.

This is true of your Government employees, living on a starving wage, right here in the Capital City. I know many who have tried to budget, and found these economic experts failed to give the true prices on foodstuffs, in order to arrive at certain conclusions.

The small amount of foreign meat products imported helps reduce the cost for those who badly need it, and the so-called chain stores have been a godsend to the working class, which is the backbone of the Nation.

To place an embargo on this food product will put the domestic meat at such a value that it will curtail consumption and destroy the object for which it was intended.

The President of the United States, in his message to Congress, said:

"I have called this special session of Congress to redeem two pledges given in the last election—farm relief and limited changes in the tariff."

We have been in session more than 5 weeks. Nothing has been accomplished of benefit to the farmer to date.

It has often been said that the power to tax is also the power to destroy. We all believe in a protective tariff—we must, to save our own industries, whether we come from north, south, east, or west. However, the building up of a high wall of tariff around the things that the people of the United States must buy is serious and will limit the amount of things that they would like to buy. Tariff should be written without any sectional interest.

I have tried to be fair and study both sides of the argument and digest some of the reports of the hearings before the committee. Many will acknowledge it to be a rather difficult task, and I am talking simply from the standpoint of the housewife, or the "consumer," so often referred to in this debate.

I cannot, in all fairness, see any logic in the proposed tax on sugar. It seems to me we are placing this heavy duty on the people of the United States to save a few acres of land in certain States where they raise sugar beets and employ Mexican labor and women and children, violating all our labor laws.

Some ambitious gentlemen are trying to foster an industry here and reclaim land at the expense of the American people. If this bill becomes a law, I am informed this Republican Congress will place a charge on the people of the United States on this one item alone of $240,000,000 a year.

Why should we make the consumer bear the cost of foreign labor on sugar-beet industry in the United States when we can get it so cheaply from our island possessions? Sugar is one of our most valued products. It is necessary to life. Why destroy our Territories by placing such a tariff on sugar? It is not economic, not sound. It is not the beet grower that will be benefited by this vicious increase but the beet-sugar manufacturer; the dirt farmer never seems to get anything, because it is not the tiller of the soil who is considered but the manufacturer, always. It is the manufacturer who contributes to the compaign; therefore he receives his reward in tariff, a despicable custom, but true.

I also protest against hides being taken off the free list. It will not benefit the farmer but only increase his cost of living, for he will be bound to pay more money for his boots and shoes. We all pay enough now. Only the large packers would be favored by placing a tariff on hides.

I am willing to protect the boot and shoe industry by placing a duty on shoes and finished leather to offset the foreign competition, especially in women's fancy shoes; but I am not in favor of taking hides off the free list. What this industry needs is free raw material and protection for its products. The domestic supply of hides is decreasing and importations are increasing rapidly.

I am not an alarmist, but I see in this situation of unnecessarily burdening our people a far greater cause of dissatisfaction than in anything that has ever happened and a big step forward to encourage "red" sentiment in this country.

Then, too, raising a high tariff wall certainly is not a step toward world peace. We talk about peace. We spend millions and millions of the taxpayers' money to build new implements of war to insure peace and protect our shores, while we neglect the greatest implement of peace in all the world, "brotherly love."

We call ourselves "allies," yet raise a barrier wall of tariff so high that it is equivalent to serving notice on the nations of the world that we do not want their goods, even at the loss of their friendship.

We are so well satisfied with ourselves we prefer to live alone. Of course, we will magnanimously sell to them; but we do not want to buy from them. And the worst part of it is that we pretend it is because we would help the working people of our country and keep them employed; when, as a matter of fact, for every extra dollar the working man or woman is paid in wages they spend a dollar and a half in food and clothing to make up for that extra dollar.

What a sham! What hypocrisy! How long do you think it will take the working men and women of the Nation to wake up? Do you not think they know who really gets the extra dollar?

Certainly not the dirt farmer whom you are pretending to assist. He is usually a pretty wise man, says little but thinks much; and while I confess he did not show much wisdom in the last election, he will have 4 years more to realize his mistake, and maybe we will have better luck next time.

If I were not thinking of the already overburdened housewife and her undernourished children, I would encourage you to build a higher tariff wall, realizing that it would be so much easier for my party to be returned in 1930; but not even to realize this ambition would I hesitate to plead with you to think twice before you place a greater burden on our people and prevent our children from getting the food they require to build their bodies.

Members of Congress have lost much of the respect that was and should be rightfully ours. We do work hard; many of us think straight; and, therefore, we should not allow a group of reactionary Republican leaders, working in the interest of powerful corporations, to lead us away from the service we solemnly swore to render to all the people of our country. Such procedure is not only dangerous from a party point of view but it is inhuman and endangers the lives of the people we have sworn to protect.

Since I came to Congress many fine men have passed to the great beyond. When they came to the judgment seat to render an account of their stewardship, which service do you think counted in their favor? Their service to humanity or their service to the Power Trusts and overlords of the business world?

The higher tariff on foodstuffs is indefensible. To satisfy the greed of a minority, it will work great hardship on the majority; and I cannot believe that any Member of Congress will deliberately do this great injustice to the already discouraged poor people of the country.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Beck, in his brilliant speech on Wednesday sounded a note of warning, which I hope will be considered by even the superprotectionists.

President Hoover started his journey to the White House through feeding the starving children of Europe. He was supported then by a great leader—President Wilson.

I sincerely hope his journey away from the White House may not begin through neglect of the children of his own country.

Let him show his leadership now and prove to all the people of the country that he is big enough for the great position he was elected to fill. [Applause.]

It is well to note that in 1932 Mr. Roosevelt knew of no tariffs that were too high. He has reduced the tariffs and caused great increases in beef importation. If the Smoot-Hawley tariff is so unfair why does not the New Deal repeal it? They talked against it before passage, but they still keep it on the statutes.

This LaGuardia attitude is the attitude of Tammany Hall, Hague, and Kelly-Nash and company. Legislation for the few, and give us cheap food—either domestic or from cheap foreign sources. This spirit is among this group in the present Congress as they vote in a body to support lower farm tariffs.

With the huge imports of cattle and meats under the New Deal these big-city friends should be happy, and if the Argentine treaty can be effected after the elections on November 5, mirth should go unrestrained in the bailiwicks of Tammany, Hague, and Kelly-Nash.

THE NEW DEAL QUOTATION AND THE ANSWER

Why anyone should brag about running the country in debt $3,000,000,000 a year for 7 years is beyond my reasoning, but this is what the New Dealers do.

While the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] quotes the Bible, saying: "Wherefore by their fruits we shall know them" in reference to the Republicans' attitude, I wish to say that he should carefully consider two other Biblical passages, one of which is: "What does a man profiteth if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" and the warning, "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation."

In regard to the first quotation, it is well to call the attention of the farmers to the fact that they must not be misled by empty promises. The new dealers should tell the farmers that there is nothing left in the United States Treasury to promise as they have spent it and that the third and fourth generations will be paying for what has already been spent and wasted by the New Deal.

In regard to the second quotation, the farmers will not be deceived for long into thinking they can get subsidies of borrowed money because they will lose their own soul in becoming tools of the New Deal and the whole house will fall, due to the increased public debt. No one can deny that New Deal subsidies are nothing but money borrowed by the New Deal and given out to the people that furnish the money. The new dealers may say they are robbing Peter to pay Paul, but in fact the New Deal robs both Peter and Paul.

THE FACTS MR. FERGUSON AND OTHER NEW DEALERS WILL NOT TELL THE FARMERS

(1) The new dealers will not tell the people that they drove 91,195 farmers from their homes because they could not pay $112 interest on an average $2,800 loan; and during the same time, under the U. S. H. A., they built 90,436 housing units costing $4,350 a unit, and pay an average of $193 per unit of the rent each year for 60 years. These U. S. H. A. units cost $28,000,000 a year subsidy for 60 years, or a total of $1,680,000,000.

In other words, the New Deal drove more people from their farm homes than new homes were provided by the New Deal, and the public debt was increased by $1,680,000,000. This is fake humanitarianism and a false social gain.

(2) The new dealers will not tell the people about the $2,800,000 worth of fluid milk that was purchased in the Boston area, the only city in the United States.

(3) The new dealers will not tell the people about the $1,000,000 worth of fish purchased with Federal Surplus Commodity funds, when many agricultural products were bringing 50 percent of the cost of production. The new dealers thought they controlled the food produced on the land and wanted to start controlling the fish in the seven seas.

(4) The new dealers will not explain in detail the fake parity-payment program. They will not tell the farmers of the country, as a whole, that up to January 1, 1940, cotton farmers alone have had 69 percent of this so-called parity money. They will not reveal the fact that one State, Texas, received 27 percent of the parity money in 1 year. They will not reveal that the New England States did not receive a dollar of the so-called parity money. They will not reveal that some States averaged no payment per farm per year while other States averaged $80 to $86 payment per farm per year. This procedure is not based on common sense nor is it based on common justice. They will not tell the farmers that this money is still a part of the public debt and must be repaid with interest. They will not reveal that they refused to make milk a basic commodity, so other farmers could be included.

(5) The new dealers will not tell the farmers that, while they have been receiving $3,000,000,000 in subsidies, which is borrowed money, the farmers' share of the public debt has risen over $6,000,000,000. They will not tell that, while the farmer, on the basis of total farms in the United States has obtained a subsidy of $48 per farm per year for 6 years, or $288 per farm average for the 6 years, the increased public debt has increased so much that there is an invisible mortgage of $1,000 placed on every farm in America by the New Deal. The subsidy to capital in tax-exempt bonds amounts to thousands of dollars a year, but to the few.

(6) The new dealers will not reveal that the lower farm prices obtained under the New Deal cause a loss of many times more money than the subsidies of borrowed money obtained by them through the New Deal. They will not tell of the 50-cent wheat, and 5-cent lard, and 10-cent cotton under the New Deal.

(7) They will not tell the farmers who have Federal farm mortgages on their farms that President Roosevelt twice vetoed the 3½- to 4-percent interest-rate reduction for farmers while at the same time the New Deal was appropriating millions of dollars to make farm owners out of non farm owners and giving them 40-year mortgages at only 3-percent interest. They will not tell the people that in 1940—election year—that the President did not veto the lower interest rates. This is a striking example of fake humanitarianism and one of the alleged social gains. The new dealers will not tell the public about the hundreds of Communists, and the foreign collectivist sympathizers on the United States pay roll, including the Agricultural Department.

(8) They will not tell the farmers of this country that the New Deal agricultural program is not based on common sense. They will not tell anyone that this program has caused many farmers to operate on a large scale in order to get the Federal subsidies and has driven tenants by the thousands on to the relief rolls and into migratory camps.

(9) They will not tell the public that this agricultural program was put into operation under the guise of soil conservation while its activities are becoming more and more centered on New Deal conservation.

(10) The new dealers will not tell the public that, though $500,000,000 may be appropriated annually under the guise of soil conservation, the actual facts are that the most fertile and productive farm in America can be depleted in its fertility and still have the operator obtain New Deal subsidy checks of borrowed money.

(11) The new dealers will not tell the public that, after criticizing one government for bartering and subsidizing foreign trade, they turned around and paid an export bounty of 25 cents per bushel on wheat and $7.50 a bale on cotton in an effort to show increased agricultural exports.

(12) The new dealers will call no one's attention to the fact that subsidy checks vary from $7 to $9 per farm per year on a total farm basis in some States while in other border States they have averaged $150 to $175 per farm per year. They will not call your attention to the fact that the fake parity checks amount to nothing at all in a half dozen States, $1 to $2 per year in other States and over $85 in still other States, with no plausible reason for this allocation.

(13) The new dealers will not call your attention to the large subsidy checks of $257,000 issued to one insurance company in 1 year on its farms when the average county in the United States received about $150,000 for all its farmers. They will not tell you that while the average farm would be entitled to but $48 per farm per year, one large corporation farm received $112,000 in 1938 and $122,000 in 1939. They will not call your attention to the fact that one State received one-eighth of all the agricultural subsidies.

(14) The new dealers will not call your attention to the fact that on January 1, 1933, the average Federal land bank loan was $2,254 while on April 1, 1940, it was $3,062.

(15) They will not tell the people of the thousands of foreclosures on Federal farm loans. They will not tell you that in Wisconsin, in 1939, a higher percentage of loans and a larger number of loans were foreclosed and acquired than ever before in the history of the Federal land bank.

(16) They will not tell the public of the cross-purpose schemes of the New Deal. They will not tell of the $500,000,000 annual appropriation to control agricultural production; the appropriated millions to increase agricultural production, and the appropriated millions for export bounties to get rid of the surpluses which they appropriated public money to create.

(17) They will not tell the story of how the New Deal land and farm policy drove thousands upon thousands of farmers off their farms onto the relief rolls and into migratory camps at great expense to the public.

(18) They will not tell the public how they drove the farmers from their farms, appropriated money for the migratory camps, appropriated more money for the Civil Liberty Committee to go and call on the camps and bask in the California sunshine and then turned around and appropriated more money for a new joint committee to evidently find out why the farmers ever left their farms in the first place.

(19) They will not openly tell the cotton farmers that the New Deal has really bungled his business so that he has lost a large share of the world's cotton market for all time to come. For all these subsidies that represent a third of the assessed valuation of the farms, many of these Southern States have 35 percent delinquent land bank commissioner loans and some States, like Mississippi have 48 percent delinquent commissioner farm loans.

(20) The New Deal will never be able to explain how they can, in justice, follow a scheme to loan one man 57 cents per bushel on his corn and then loan none to the rest of the corn farmers of this country. This is most assuredly legislation for the few at the expense of the many. We must have legislation for all and not for the few. I believe in making loans in order to put a bottom under farm prices, but it should be for all farmers, and not for the few.

(21) The New Deal will not tell the dairy farmers that cheese was 17.5 cents per pound the 7 years before the New Deal, 14.7 cents per pound the last 4 Republican years, 13.2 cents per pound the first 7 New Deal years, and in 1938 was only 12.6 cents per pound, and in 1939 only 12.8 cents per pound. They will not tell them that the New Deal reduced the tariff on cheese 42 percent. They will not tell them that on January 1, 1936, when the tariff was reduced 2 cents per pound, the price of cheese immediately dropped 2 cents per pound, and that 14 times more cheese was imported in 1936 than in 1935. They will not tell you that, according to Bulletin 201, United States Department of Agriculture, pages 33–41, that the average price of butter on farms was 35 cents the 6 pre-New Deal years and only 26 cents the first 6 years of the New Deal; and in 1939, after 6 years of the New Deal, it was only 25.8 cents per pound.

(22) The New Deal will not tell the people that in 1932 President Roosevelt said that he knew of no tariffs that were too high. The New Deal will not tell the people that the New Deal immediately began reducing the tariff on over a hundred and sixty farm products.

(23) The new dealers will recite the sins of the Smoot-Hawley tariff, but they will not explain to the people of this country why they do not repeal the act.

(24) The new dealers will vociferously defend the reciprocal-trade treaties, whereby the power is delegated to one man to control the milk check of every dairyman in America.

(25) They will not call your attention to the fact that the new dealers themselves could not stomach the delegation of power to the burearucrats in the Government, so the lawyers effected passage of the Walter-Logan bill in the House this session. This bill gives a court review of New Deal bureaucratic decisions. However, they think that the farmer should like to have the control of his milk check delegated to one man. They will not bring Thomas Jefferson in on this one.

(26) The New Deal Members from the vicinity of the milksheds will not try to explain why they want a domestic tariff, putting up a Chinese wall in order to keep the local fluid milk market for their farmers and will then vote to justify a tariff reduction on the manufactured dairy products, putting these farmers in competition with the cheap labor of South America, Europe, and Asia.

(27) The new dealers will not tell how they had a booklet, one-half inch thick, printed, telling about the sins of interstate trade barriers and then turned around and erected trade barriers in the milksheds of the country. The New Deal fixes prices for the few but opposes price fixing for the many. They "blow hot" and "blow cold."

(28) The new dealers like the protection of a tariff when they can benefit from it. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] and a dozen other new dealers were much opposed to the Argentine treaty last year and protested against any reduction in the tariff on their products and even went so far as to oppose the tariff on turkeys; then turned around and gave their stamp of approval to the 42-percent reduction in the tariff on cheese. The Smoot-Hawley tariff seems to be agreeable to them when they can benefit from it, but they want the loss to be sustained by other groups.

The new dealers can hardly wait for election day to take up another trade treaty with the Argentine.

(29) The new dealers will not tell the people about the 750,000 head of cattle imported in 1939. They will not tell about the small agricultural exports that have resulted from the New Deal program, the lowest in the history of the country.

(30) New dealers may use the new-found friend of the farmers, LaGuardia, to gather votes, but there is one outstanding fact and that is that in past sessions the Representatives from the boss-ridden cities like Tammany, Hague, Kelly-Nash, and company are more interested in cheap food than any other part of agricultural procedure.

This is shown in the present Congress. Take Chicago, located in the greatest agricultural area in the land, sends Representatives here that vote for lower tariffs and against lower interest rates for farmers.

Chicago, the world's greatest livestock market, is doing well to maintain its lead. These yard people should realize what it means to the yards and to the labor of Chicago if cheap foreign meats are to be imported from the Argentine in such great amounts. They should also realize what these cheap imports will mean to the surrounding rural area. The Representatives from this livestock business district should be fair enough minded to see what these low tariffs mean to the life of this great livestock center, as well as the farmers of this territory, and not be voting against lower interest rates for farmers and for lower tariffs, as they do vote.

(31) The new dealers will not tell the farmers of the country that they were able to exclude agricultural products from the provisions of the interstate traffic of convict-made goods. Our colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], made every effort to give the farmer the benefits that other groups obtained from this legislation, but to no avail.

(32) The new dealers praise the stamp plan. They like the red and blue stamps. There are 2,240 foster homes with an enrollment of 242,000 children that could be supplied with food if the new dealers wished to provide for this nonvoting group. The only fly in the ointment about this program is that the farmer has to carry the burden. The New Deal fixes prices for some small groups of farmers, but turns around and buys the wares of the majority of farmers that have a surplus on bids, and as cheaply as they can, and gives it away to the farmer's customer to sit down and eat. The farmers of this country have for 10 years furnished 25 percent to 35 percent of the cost of feeding the Nation, and this includes the rich as well as the poor. The farmers should not be further impoverished in order to carry out any New Deal schemes. We should have a program with a little more of the red, white, and blue, and not only the red and blue. The farmer cannot be expected to feed the Nation at a loss indefinitely.

(33) The Department of Agriculture has become a New Deal propaganda mill. There was a time when their writings were academic and nonpolitical.

(34) The New Deal has loaded the top offices of the Department of Agriculture with political agriculturists that have never had agricultural training. This has been done in the face of the fact that agricultural colleges have been turning out graduates for over 50 years. Thousands of Smith-Hughes agricultural teachers are in our land.

(35) We must forget the visionary New Deal schemes, and inaugurate the philosophy of the McNary-Haugen bill, and give all farmers an equal opportunity.

(36) No; the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] does not need to worry about what will happen to the farm people of this Nation if and when the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., is in the Speaker's chair.

Every Member of this House knows that Mr. MARTIN is one of the fairest-minded men here, and that agricultural groups, as well as all groups, will have equal, fair, and honest consideration from this outstanding American. No one dares, nor will, deny this assertion.

The danger will come from listening to the bedtime stories of your New Deal professional politician and political agriculturist that will ruin this country if they continue their wasteful, extravagant, cross-purpose, collectivist schemes that are based on neither common sense nor on common justice. Mr. Speaker, the fact is, I do not think much of the New Deal and no one else would if they took time to decipher it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

CONGRESS SHOULD NOT ADJOURN

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, early in June, when there was considerable discussion that the Congress should adjourn, I felt that it would be a serious mistake under existing world conditions to do so. It will be recalled that the President at that time, at two separate press conferences, stated that there was no necessity for the Congress remaining in session. I believe it will be admitted by all now that it would have been a grievous mistake to have adjourned at that time.

Since that time the greater portion of the legislation which is necessary for national defense has been passed by the Congress, including appropriations and authorizations for a two-ocean navy, as well as a total authorization and appropriation of something over $15,000,000,000 to round out the defense program.

In addition, we have enacted legislation authorizing the calling of the National Guard and the law providing for national training and conscription in order to make possible an army of 1,200,000. We have now practically completed this program insofar as authorization and needed funds are concerned.

However, the Congress is the body representing the people of America that is charged with the responsibility of keeping this country out of war. I believe that, if for no other reason, the Congress should remain in session continuously as long as the world crisis continues and keep guard at our gates against war. Much may happen within a day or a week or a month that may change the whole program having to do with our national defense. If Congress adjourns we cannot reconvene. Only the President can call us back. The greatest security we can have against possible involvement in the foreign war is keeping the Congress on the job. Aside, however, from these reasons, important as they are, the domestic problems confronting the Nation cannot be ignored. We must admit that the first line of defense is a sound economic and financial economy. This we do not have. Our credit is being strained to the breaking point. Our tax structure is wholly inadequate to take care of our ordinary continuing expenses, let alone the huge increased preparedness expense we have now authorized. We still have over 9,000,000 unemployed, and our industrial enterprises are hard pressed. In a word, our whole economic and financial structure needs overhauling. Congress must find solutions to these questions if America is to survive.

Mr. Speaker, there is an additional problem that we should now begin to consider, and that is our economic recovery after the war and threat of war ends. Some day the great catastrophe in Europe will be over. Some day we will be no longer confronted with the specter of war in the offing. Some day we will return to a peace status. When demobilization takes place, the transition from a war basis to peacetime activities will strain our economic and financial structure almost to the breaking point. Millions of men will be thrown out of our fighting forces and our wartime industries, and no positions will be open for them. When that day arrives, as it will arrive, we will be confronted with a "war" within our own borders—another war against unemployment, closed factories, idle men, and idle money. We will be confronted with a public debt which may reach seventy-five billions and a tax burden that will be difficult to carry. We must begin now to work out a solution to this catastrophe that will confront us and may again throw this country into a worse depression than that we have confronted for the last 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, in view of these considerations, I urge the Congress to remain in session and not merely mark time but devote itself to a solution of these momentous questions confronting us.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLAYPOOL for 2 weeks on account of important business.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution which reads as follows:

Whereas if it be necessary for the national defense of the United States for all possible aid to be given to the Government of Great Britain short of war: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that if and when the Chief Executive and Secretary of State contemplate any agreement with the Government of England for the transfer to that government of any military or naval equipment and essential supplies in exchange for other property as a gift or by lease or as an outright gift to said government, the Congress ought to be advised thereof in advance of the consideration of such arrangement in order that the Congress may have opportunity to exercise its constitutional prerogative to authorize and approve or disapprove the same.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very wise provision, one that will meet the approval of the Congress and will be welcomed with relief and joy all over the country. The people of America are greatly alarmed regarding the international situation as it affects us and they want everything done in their own defense. They certainly want nothing done that will weaken it—as proof of that, witness the unanimous demand from persons all over the United States demanding that the Congress stay in continuous session.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2524. An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, September 30, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who didst take upon Thee human childhood, content to be a swaddled baby in Thy mother's arms for the sake of little children; who didst not eschew the poverty and destitution of a manger for Thy birthplace, for the sake of all the poor and destitute; whose unblemished body on the tree was bared and broken not only to atone for sin but also for the sake of the downtrodden and oppressed: Look with Thy tender, loving pity, we beseech Thee, upon all innocent, suffering children, whose angels do continually behold Thy Father's face. Draw them close to the hearts that love them, that they may bring them to the shelter of Thine encircling arms, with hands that bless, where they may find protection both now and for eternity. We ask it for Thine own dear sake, who lovest beyond all human thought Thy little ones. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, September 26, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SENATOR HENRY F. ASHURST

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be read from the desk a letter addressed to my colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and a resolution adopted by the State Senate of Arizona.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., September 25, 1940.

Hon. HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR HENRY: At no time during my long service as secretary of the Arizona State Senate have I witnessed such manifest sincerity as was expressed by the senate members in adoption of the enclosed resolution. I certainly wish you could have heard the tribute paid you by many senators in expressing the wish that, as a mark of respect, the adoption of the resolution be by roll-call vote in lieu of the usual viva voce vote.

I wish to express my sentiment with an additional humble "aye" vote.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) BILLY GRAHAM,
(W. J. Graham),
Secretary of the Senate.

A resolution on the retirement of HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST from the Senate of the United States of America

Whereas the Honorable HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, United States Senator from Arizona, will retire from the Senate of the United States of America at the end of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress; and

Whereas Senator ASHURST has represented this State in the United States Senate continuously since statehood, a period of 28 years; and

Whereas during all those years Senator ASHURST distinguished himself as a faithful public servant, steadfastly refusing to place selfish interests above the welfare of his country; and

Whereas Senator ASHURST will long be remembered by the people of the entire Nation for his statesmanship, his devotion to duty, his outstanding ability, his unimpeachable integrity, his silver-tongued oratory, his never-failing wit and good humor, and for his many other virtues: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Arizona,

1. This body expresses its sincere appreciation, and that of the people of Arizona, to the Honorable HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST for his unselfish devotion and his many accomplishments in representing the State of Arizona for the past 28 years in the Senate of the United States of America.

2. The members of this body hereby join with the people of the Nation in extending to Senator ASHURST their best wishes for his continued health, happiness, and prosperity.

Unanimously adopted September 25, 1940.

PAUL C. KEEFE,
President of the Senate.
W. J. GRAHAM,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter and resolution presented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] will lie on the table.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 296)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Post Office Department (Domestic Air Mail Service), fiscal year 1940, amounting to $585,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 295)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture (Forest Service and enforcement of the Commodity Exchange Act), fiscal year 1941, totaling $215,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE (S. DOC. NO. 294)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce (Civil Aeronautics Administration: Washington National Airport), fiscal year 1941, amounting to $152,200, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITION

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens, being retail dealers in furniture and house furnishings, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of pending legislation relative to the continuance of freight forwarder services, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4152. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make analyses of fiber properties, spinning tests, and other tests of the quality of cotton samples submitted to him (Rept. No. 2184); and

S. 4374. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (Rept. No. 2185).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4356) making provision for payment of Reserve officers employed by the Government when on active duty, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2186) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4366) to provide for an extension of the conditions under which a money allowance for quarters may be paid to certain noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2187) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4384. A bill granting an increase in pension to Oscar F. Pridgen; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4385. A bill to exempt daily newspapers of less than 3,000 circulation under the wage and hour law; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 4386. A bill providing for the advancement on the retired list of certain officers of the line of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

(Mr. WILEY introduced Senate bill 4387, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. RUSSELL:

S. 4388. A bill for the relief of Richard Gammon; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. DAVIS introduced Senate bill 4389, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and appears under a separate heading.)

INCLUSION OF DEFENSE FEATURES IN PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at this time I wish to introduce a bill which provides for the submission of plans for public buildings to the War Department for its recommendations with respect to the inclusion of defense features in such buildings. The news which came over the radio this morning, and which is reflected now in the headlines of the press, indicates a serious situation. For a moment I wish to state my ideas about the bill I am introducing and what I think the need for such a law is.

I am wholeheartedly for defense which will make us immune from attack. Even in our present hurried program, however, I believe that our defense activities must be intelligently planned so that we will get dollar-for-dollar value.

One charge which may be made against our defense activities is that no attempt is made at being economical, and that little attempt is made to coordinate them with other Government activities. I believe that a good illustration of this is found in the construction of public buildings entirely or partly financed by Federal funds.

There is no reason on earth why these buildings cannot fit into the defense program. We make some attempt to correlate our river and harbor program, our bridge construction, and our highway system with the activities of our War and Navy Departments.

Why is it not possible for us to coordinate our tremendous Federal building program with defense activities? Why, in the plans for Federal buildings all over the country, is there not some long-range provision for the storing of armaments, for the possible housing of men, or for other defensive purposes? It should not be necessary for us to later construct such buildings at great cost.

The necessity for these plans may not be so far removed. I call attention again to the newspaper challenge this morning. Certainly, it is more economical and more sensible to anticipate these needs and to build them into the current construction programs at no extra cost than it is to duplicate effort later on.

As to each and every public building constructed with Federal funds, some provision should be made in the plans for cooperating with our defense program. By so doing we can save money, and we can insure that two Government programs will not be necessary to accomplish what one could.

What we need in Government today is economy and intelligent, cooperative planning of this type. We must eliminate unnecessary spendthrift duplication, and we must integrate the work of all departments in as economical a way as possible, so that the American people get as much defense for their money as they possibly can.

I propose to introduce legislation at this session of Congress providing that the plans of federally constructed buildings shall be submitted to the War Department for recommendations. It would not be necessary for the War Department to make recommendations in all instances. In those instances where they believed it desirable, however, they could recommend certain changes in the plans for proposed public buildings. The department involved would not necessarily have to follow these recommendations unless they found them thoroughly feasible.

The British people are seeing today that when the public buildings in London were erected those responsible for planning them did not foresee future events. They could have provided placements for guns, they could have provided for future emergencies; and that is what I have in mind in introducing the measure. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill and that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4387) to provide for the submission of plans for public buildings to the War Department for its recommendations with respect to the inclusion of defense features in such buildings, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PROTECTION OF MORTGAGORS RENDERING MILITARY OR NAVAL SERVICE

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have printed in the RECORD a bill to amend the National Housing Act, as amended, so as to give protection to certain mortgagors who are required to render military or naval service during any national emergency. I desire to have this bill referred to the Banking and Currency Committee as a substitute for one I previously introduced—S. 4198—in view of the departmental policy of the Federal Housing Administration. This policy is set forth in a letter addressed to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], which I also ask consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 4389) to amend the National Housing Act, as amended, so as to give protection to certain mortgagors who are required to render military or naval service during any national emergency, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 204 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and the following:

"And provided further, That with respect to mortgages heretofore or hereafter insured under section 203 on property owned as a home for himself or his family by a mortgagor who volunteers or is drafted pursuant to law for training or service in the military or naval forces of the United States during a national emergency and subjeect to such regulations and conditions as the Administrator may prescribe, there shall be included in the debentures an amount which the Administrator finds to be sufficient to compensate the mortgagee for any loss which it may have sustained on account of interest on debentures and the payment of insurance premiums by reason of its having postponed the institution of foreclosure proceedings or the acquisition of the property by other means during the period of such training or service and 6 months after the termination thereof by discharge or otherwise."

The letter presented by Mr. DAVIS in connection with the bill is as follows:

JULY 24, 1940.

In re S. 4198.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: Your letter of July 12 to Mr. McDonald, requesting his opinion as to the merits of the above-numbered bill, has been referred to me for reply.

It is clear that the purpose of the proposed legislation is to protect deserving mortgagors whose income may have been substantially reduced by reason of their enlistment with the military or naval forces of the United States from losing their homes through foreclosure.

The Administrator is heartily in sympathy with this purpose, but believes that the method adopted in the above bill is unsatisfactory for the following reasons:

The bill provides that the Administrator shall make the monthly payments to the mortgagees as provided in the insured mortgage for and on behalf of the mortgagor, provided both mortgagor and mortgagee enter into contracts with the Administrator protecting the interests of the United States with respect to such payments. I know of no way in which the interests of the United States could be adequately protected in the absence of authority in the Administrator to purchase the mortgages. Any lien which the Administrator could obtain by way of subrogation or otherwise to secure such advances would, of course, be junior to the rights of the mortgagee and might be cut off under various circumstances, which would be most difficult to guard against.

The bill makes no distinction between property which is owned by the mortgagor as a home for himself or family and that from which he receives rent; nor does it take into consideration the amount of pay which the mortgagor may receive from the Army or Navy; but the principal objection thereto lies in the provision requiring the Administrator to keep up the payments provided in the mortgage. This provision results in payment by the Administrator to the mortgagee of interest at 4½ or 5 percent, whereas it would seem that interest at 2¾ or 3 percent, similar to that provided in F. H. A. debentures, should be sufficient. Furthermore, it results in the payment by the Administrator of an amount representing amortization of principal against which the mortgagee is already fully protected by the terms of the mortgage-insurance contract, and a further sum equal to the mortgage-insurance premium which the mortgagee merely holds in escrow and returns to the Administrator annually on the due date.

The administrative expense involved in verifying the amount of the proper monthly payment, including principal, interest, estimated taxes, assessments, hazard-insurance premium, etc., and in making such payments to the proper mortgagees, would be considerable, and there is grave danger that such payments might be so applied by the mortgagee as to destroy any rights which the Administrator might have in connection therewith as against innocent purchasers of the property or of the mortgage.

If it is believed that legislation should be enacted for the particular benefit of mortgagors under insured mortgages, the Administrator feels that the purpose of the above bill could best be accomplished by an act drawn along the lines of the enclosed draft.

It is felt that our approved mortgagees will not institute foreclosure proceedings in any case where an insured mortgage is in default by reason of the mortgagor having been called to military service, provided the terms of the insurance contract are such that the mortgagee will lose nothing by reason of its having postponed foreclosure during the period of such service, including a sufficient period thereafter.

Under the act now in force, all amounts paid by the mortgagee for taxes, hazard-insurance premium, etc., may be included in debentures, but defaulted interest, due prior to the institution of foreclosure proceedings, may not be included therein. It will be noted that the enclosed draft provides for the inclusion of interest at the debenture rate from the date of default or the date the mortgagor entered the service, whichever was later. This would have the effect of protecting the mortgagee from any loss it might sustain by reason of its having postponed foreclosure, thereby protecting the mortgagor and at the same time protecting the Administrator against the excessive cost and risk involved in the plan contained in the bill submitted. The regulations of the Administrator would, of course, be amended to provide the necessary assurances and limitations to carry out the purpose of the amendment.

Very truly yours,

ABNER H. FERGUSON,
First Assistant Administrator and General Counsel.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF NATIONALITY LAWS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF HON. CLARENCE C. DILL AND HON. MATTHEW M. NEELY

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by J. G. Luhrsen, executive secretary-treasurer of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, addressed "To all chief executives," dated September 25, 1940, which relates to the official records of Hon. Clarence C. Dill, of Washington, and Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY, of West Virginia.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., September 25, 1940.

To All Chief Executives, Railway Labor Executives' Association.

SIRS AND BROTHERS: I call to your attention reference made on page 16 of the minutes of the September 18 association meeting concerning former Senator C. C. Dill and former chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, and Senator MATTHEW M. NEELY, both having been nominated for Governor in the States of Washington and West Virginia, respectively.

Both former Senator Dill and the present Senator NEELY by their actions have always supported and given freely of their services in behalf of labor, particularly with respect to railroad legislation benefiting the railroad employees.

It was thought that there was a real justification in giving our blessing to these two men, and no doubt each chief executive will willingly apprise their constituency in such letter as is in conformity with their laws, urging the support for the election of these two outstanding candidates for Governor of their respective States.

It was ordered, by motion, that this matter be referred to the individual organizations for such action as they see fit to take, but I am nevertheless calling this to your specific attention in order that the subject matter as indicated above will not be overlooked.

Yours fraternally,

J. G. LUHRSEN,
Executive Secretary.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR ASHURST BY ALEXANDRIA (VA.) GAZETTE

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Alexandria Gazette, of Alexandria, Va., of the issue of September 19, 1940, paying tribute to Senator ASHURST, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE AIRPLANE PROGRAM—EDITORIAL FROM THE HARTFORD TIMES

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Hartford Times of the issue of September 19, 1940, under the heading "The airplane program," which appears in the Appendix.]

EDITORIAL FROM SATURDAY EVENING POST ON INVOLVEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE WAR

[Mr. TOBEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post of September 7, 1940, entitled "While Yet There Is Time To Think," which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the special order of the Senate, which is the call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when I asked and obtained unanimous consent yesterday to begin the call of the calendar upon the assembling of the Senate, I overlooked the fact that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] had indicated his desire to address the Senate immediately upon its reassembling today. Therefore, I ask to modify the agreement we entered into yesterday to the extent that the Senator from Nebraska may be recognized to deliver the address which he desires to deliver, and that following that we shall proceed to consider unobjected-to bills on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 2095, which is where we stopped at the last call of the calendar; and if, after we finish the new bills on the calendar, we have time, we may go back to the beginning of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, under the circumstances I think the request regarding the able Senator from Nebraska is a fair one; but on the question of the calendar I understand that the Senator wants to commence at No. 2095.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. 2095, which is where we stopped on the occasion of the last call. The bills prior to that have been called over and over again. I thought we might take up the new bills, and then, if we have time to go back and call the calendar for those that have been called heretofore, that may be done.

Mr. McNARY. There are a number of important bills prior to No. 2095. I should want to have the assurance that we would immediately return to them Inasmuch as we have not had a call of the calendar for 4 or 5 or 6 or 7 or 8 weeks, I think the fair way to do would be to start at No. 1 and go through the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that, except that many of them have been called over and over again.

Mr. McNARY. I know; but there are many times when a bill does not get through today and may get through tomorrow. I think we had better commence at No. 1.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then I will withdraw the part of the request affecting the beginning of the call; but I ask to modify the agreement to the extent of allowing the Senator from Nebraska to proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the modified request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PERSONAL STATEMENT—ARTICLE IN WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska, by unanimous consent of the Senate, has the floor. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield to me in order to call attention to an article published on the front page of the Washington Times-Herald of this morning. Everybody who was here yesterday, whether on the floor of the Senate or in the Press Gallery or in the other galleries, knows precisely what happened in the discussion of the investigation of the situation in New Jersey.

In the morning newspaper, to which I have referred, the following headline appears: "'Probe of Hague Blocked'—TOBEY; BARKLEY Accused of 'Soft-pedal' Act."

This article was written by a Mr. Milton Magruder, whom I do not know. I do not know whether he sits in the Press Gallery from day to day, or whether he writes what he writes from some office downtown; but I desire to read this article to show that either maliciously or by mistake or through a lack of intelligent reporting the article is wholly untrue, without the slightest justification; and no man who occupies the responsible position of a reporter to report the proceedings of the Senate should publish such an article as that which is in the newspaper this morning. I wish to read it in order that the Senate may know exactly what was published, and compare it with what happened yesterday.

Mr. Magruder's article is as follows:

(By Milton Magruder)

A Republican charge that unidentified "higher-ups" have brought pressure upon the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee to block inquiries into political conditions in Jersey City, N. J., domain of Mayor Frank Hague, and other cities, plunged the Senate into angry debate yesterday.

The accusation was made by Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY (Republican), of New Hampshire, in a speech from the Senate floor. It was corroborated by Senator CLYDE M. REED (Republican), of Kansas, who threatened to "name names in high places" unless reported efforts to interfere with the committee cease. Both are members of the committee.

TOBEY asked Majority Leader ALBEN BARKLEY whether he had not approached Senator GUY M. GILLETTE (Democrat), of Iowa, committee chairman, and left the impression that it would be advisable not to hold an investigation in New Jersey.

He called upon GILLETTE to verify his statement and the Iowan did.

TOBEY started the fireworks by declaring that the subcommittee assigned to the New Jersey probe, of which he is a member, was just about to fire a volley of questions into Hague's bailiwick when someone numbed his trigger finger. He said GILLETTE halted the barrage and added that the committee met yesterday and decided to proceed with the inquiry "despite pressure that is almost unbelievable."

Anybody who was here yesterday, or who will take the pains to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning, knows that that article is not true insofar as it intimates that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] asked the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] whether I had approached him with a suggestion that the investigation be not had, and that the Senator from Iowa said I had. The Senator from New Hampshire knows, and every other Senator knows who was here or who has read the RECORD, that the Senator from New Hampshire asked me what he called a very personal question, and that is, whether I had approached the Senator from Iowa in company with another Senator to suggest that the investigation in New Jersey be suspended or stopped or interfered with in some way, and that I, with some vehemence, denied that either in company with any other Senator, or by myself, had I approached the Senator from Iowa with any suggestion as to New Jersey or any other State or any other locality in the United States, and that I looked around the Chamber to see whether the Senator from Iowa was present, and, he being temporarily absent, I reiterated my denial. Soon after that the Senator from Iowa came out of the cloakroom, where he had gone to answer a telephone call, and I put the question to him, repeating what the Senator from New Hampshire had asked me and my denial, and asked the Senator from Iowa whether my denial was true that I had not approached him under any circumstances, with anybody or alone, on any such mission. The Senator from Iowa stated that my statement was absolutely the truth. In spite of that, Mr. President, this reporter named Magruder, on the front page of the Times-Herald this morning, seeks to leave the impression that instead of my asking the Senator from Iowa whether I had approached him on any such subject, the intimation in the question put to me by the Senator from New Hampshire was confirmed by a statement from the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. This is all news to me. I have not seen the newspaper referred to, and the first I had heard of it was the reading of the article aloud here. I can understand the Senator's indignation at the article, for it is not a true picture at all. I never heard of Mr. Magruder, never saw him, and know nothing at all about the matter. What the Senator from Kentucky has now said is a true picture and representation of what happened on the floor of the Senate. Of course, I share with him keen regret that any man—the Senator from Kentucky or anybody else—should be misrepresented in a news article in a matter in which I was concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. I knew, of course, that his version of the incident would coincide with mine; and what I said here is in no regard to be thought of as intimating that the Senator from New Hampshire was remotely responsible for this article. I do not know Mr. Magruder. It may be that I have met him. It is difficult for me to believe that any responsible newspaper reporter would be intentionally guilty of a thing of that sort. I am calling the article to the attention of the Senate and to the attention of Mr. Magruder and to the attention of the Times-Herald in order that if they are willing to make the correction which everybody here knows ought to be made, they may have an opportunity to make it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I merely desire to concur with the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire as to what actually transpired, which the Senator from Kentucky has correctly stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I think we should go a little further, and I suggest that any member of the press gallery who abuses his privilege in such a manner should not be permitted to occupy a seat therein. There is no excuse for Mr. Magruder's gross misrepresentations, and if a member of the press gallery, he should be dismissed at once. In any event, I think the matter ought to be investigated. I may state in passing that this is not the first time a thing of this kind has happened. The constitutional right of freedom of the press is too often abused.

Mr. BARKLEY. A reporter who would be intentionally guilty of misrepresenting what was so obvious in a debate on the floor of the Senate certainly is not entitled to the privileges of the Senate press gallery. I do not state that Mr. Magruder did this intentionally, and I will not do so until I know further about it. I should like to hear, however, from Mr. Magruder with respect to the article, and the reason why he misrepresented what occurred.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I came into the Chamber just as this explanation was being made by the Senator. I, too, read this article on the front page of the Times-Herald this morning; and it asserted, as I gather has already been stated here, just the converse of the situation which the Senator from New Hampshire has already stated. I am curious to know how it occurred, if the Senator has made inquiry about it and knows why it was that the story was written as it appears here. I had a definite recollection of exactly the contrary, and I went so far as to look up the RECORD this morning and have my recollection of it confirmed. The incident occurred just as I understood the Senator from Kentucky to state that it occurred; that is, that he made the denial and asked the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the chairman of the committee, to confirm or deny his statement. There was a little delay, as I recall, in the Senator from Iowa coming into the Chamber—he happened to be in the cloakroom at the time—and upon returning, the Senator from Iowa stated that the Senator from Kentucky had made no such statement to him. This story states that the Senator from Iowa accused the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement leaves the impression on anyone who reads it that the Senator from New Hampshire accused me of attempting to approach the Senator from Iowa on the subject of suspending, or nullifying, or stopping the investigation in New Jersey, and that the Senator from Iowa confirmed the charge.

Mr. STEWART. A misquotation of this character is extremely grave, and I was so shocked when I read it, as I have said, that I went to the RECORD to see whether or not my recollection was correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not see the article until I came into the Senate Chamber today. I did not have time this morning to read the paper before I left home. But I do feel this is a matter of such gravity that the Senate's attention should be called to it, and that the paper responsible for this misquotation and misrepresentation should be given an opportunity to correct it, if it desires to do so.

WHO IS WILLKIE?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, about 3 months ago the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia nominated Wendell L. Willkie as its candidate for President. Prior to that convention, the most prominent candidates had been making campaigns in the various States, and submitting their candidacies to the voters in Presidential primary elections. Not so with Mr. Willkie. His candidacy had never been submitted to the voters anywhere. It is true, he had said a short time before the convention that he was a candidate, and that he would be glad to accept the nomination if it were tendered him. But in no place in the United States had his candidacy ever been submitted to the electors. His candidacy was not taken seriously. Very few of our people thought it was anything more than a gesture. Many of the delegates to that national convention in Philadelphia had never even heard of him. There were no delegates in the convention pledged to him. No attempt had been made to pledge anybody for him, at least so far as the public knew. Those who knew him, knew of him only as a public-utility magnate, and knew he had been intimately associated and connected with the great private-utility monopoly of the United States.

Soon after the convention assembled, it was discovered that there was great enthusiasm in the galleries for Willkie. It was openly charged, and never denied, that the galleries were packed. At every mention of his name before the convention, there came outbursts of uproarious applause from the galleries. Most of the delegates wondered why there was such apparent enthusiasm for an unknown man, a corporation man, a private-utility man. Telegrams began to come in from all parts of the United States to the delegates, asking them to vote for Willkie. Letters came from the constituents of the delegates. They came by the thousands. The long-distance telephone was called into use as it never had been before. Through it all, the galleries cried out continually, day after day, in apparent enthusiasm, the name of that unknown man, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!"

Time wore on. It was apparent that no one of the leading candidates for President had a majority of the convention. Willkie began to accumulate votes, which increased on every roll call. Day after day, and way into the night, night after night, the delegates heard that cry coming from the gallery, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!" As the balloting proceeded, he continued to gain, and the apparent enthusiasm in the galleries continued to increase.

The pressure from home was doubled. Men were called on the long-distance phone and told that the boys at home, the influential men at home, the people, were wild for Willkie.

They were told there was a spontaneous uprising from the rank and file of the Republican Party, and that it was demanding the nomination of Willkie, this unknown man, this corporation man, this private-utility magnate. The days wore into nights, and weary delegates, tired, worn out from loss of sleep and from the continual pounding from home and in the convention for Willkie, gradually surrendered to the demand. The corporations and many of the great banks of the country united in the demand, while the galleries continued to cry out, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!"

When it became apparent to the country that Willkie might possibly be nominated, many men prominent in the Republican Party, including United States Senators who at first thought there was no possibility of Willkie's nomination, became alarmed. They tried to stop the stampede. But the onrushing forces of corporate and monopolistic influences overpowered them, crushed them, and in some cases probably made them believe there was a great uprising in the country, while the galleries continued to cry out, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!"

I have never made any claim to being a prophet, but as for myself, I never underestimated the power behind Willkie. A few days before the convention, when it appeared that no one was going to have a leading plurality, and that there would be quite a number of ballots, I told many of my friends, some of them my colleagues in the Senate, that the chances were that Willkie would be nominated. I was laughed at. I was told there was no such possibility. Among the men in this body to whom I expressed such an opinion was my honored and beloved colleague the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], whose seat is just in front of mine.

I thought I knew from my own experience something about the power of the great combination of private utility companies. I knew their activities in prior campaigns. I knew they had participated in elections, from road overseers, from school districts, up to the office of the President of the United States. But even I had doubted whether this great machine, spreading into all parts of the United States, would have the effrontery to put forward one of its own magnates as a candidate.

I knew the power of this great machine. I knew how it had influenced the election or the defeat in every neighborhood in the United States of all public officials who had anything to do either directly or indirectly with private utilities. I never doubted its wisdom or its shrewdness. Yet it was difficult for me to realize that this great combination, this great monopoly, would come out into the open for once and make a national attempt not only to control a political party but to dominate the Government of the United States.

The convention wore on. In answer to that great outcry which came to those weary, sleepy delegates in Philadelphia, the heads that fell into the utility basket continued to increase with every ballot, and during the weary hours of the night honest delegates, worn out, hungry, sleepy, continued to hear the cry—a bogus cry, it was—but in their weakened condition they did not discern the difference. They did not realize that, after all, what was claimed to be a spontaneous outburst coming from the people was in reality a carefully prepared, carefully thought-out plan.

Some of the delegates pleaded with their brethren that the nomination of a private-utility magnate would mean certain defeat to the Republican Party and the condemnation of its nominee by the people of the United States. But their pleas were in vain. The tired, worn-out delegates, who had been hearing the cry, "Willkie!" "Willkie!" "Willkie!" since the beginning of the convention, and who had been unable even to wade through the telegrams and letters from the bankers and utility men at home, all became weary of the struggle, and, one by one, while they could still faintly hear that cry ringing in their ears, joined in the stampede and tumbled into the Willkie band wagon.

One by one they surrendered; but they did so weary, worn out, scarcely knowing what was going on, obedient only to that weird sound that came to them in their sleep, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!" That sleep was at first a nightmare, then a dream, then a terrible reality.

> Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
> As to be hated needs but to be seen;
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

After the members of that convention had nominated Willkie, had gone to bed, and had a good night's sleep, "the morning after," recognizing the terrible thing they had done in their semiconscious condition, they attempted to counteract this evil influence by placing on the ticket for the second place our honored and respected colleague from Oregon. In this way they undertook to give respectability to the ticket.

A few days after the adjournment of the convention in Philadelphia a delegate from Nebraska saw me in Washington. With him was his wife. He had been a delegate seven consecutive times to Republican national conventions. He is a highly respected, retired businessman, who lives in Omaha, Nebr. He has never run for public office. He has never aspired to or had any ambition in that direction, but he has always been an ardent conservative supporter of the Republican Party. He described this convention to me. He said that in all his lifetime he had never seen anything similar to it. He was pledged by a vote in the Nebraska primary to another candidate. He knew something about Willkie and his corporate connections, and he thought the nomination of Willkie would be resented by the American people.

He was flooded with telegrams and letters from all parts of the United States, asking him to vote for Willkie. He was called on the long-distance telephone by friends, some of whom were his neighbors, who had never before suggested such an idea as the nomination of Mr. Willkie, asking him to vote for Mr. Willkie. Among the prominent men who called him from his home was Mr. Henry Doorly, who controls the greatest newspaper in the Missouri Valley, a newspaper that was founded and brought into prominence through the efforts of a man who for many years served in this chamber, a man whom many of my hearers knew personally and admired greatly, Hon. Gilbert M. Hitchcock. Mr. Doorly controls what is probably the most powerful newspaper west of the Mississippi River and east of the Rocky Mountains. The control is so great that this newspaper has become a monopoly. It has been able to buy out all of its competitors and now stands forth as the only daily newspaper in that great city.

My friend, when called by Mr. Doorly, was told by him that the people of Omaha expected him to do his duty and that his duty was to assist in the nomination of Mr. Willkie.

This delegate was accompanied by his wife. In the course of our conversation she said it seemed to her that every relative or friend she had ever had anywhere in the United States had wired and asked her to use her influence with her husband to secure the nomination of Mr. Willkie. To his credit, be it said, he stood out against all of these entreaties and refused to follow this Nation-wide, well-planned propaganda.

A few days after the convention an old friend of mine from Ohio called on me. He was accompanied by his granddaughter. I had known him well as a Representative from Ohio in the Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Congresses, but I had now forgotten him. He had passed out of my memory, but at the sight of him, although he had grown old and wrinkled, I knew it was my old friend. When I knew him he was a young man and I was a young man. Our acquaintance ripened into a deep friendship, but after a comparatively short service in the House of Representatives he retired voluntarily to private life, and in the busy life I have had to lead since the Sixtieth Congress he had passed out of my memory. But all those old days returned to me when I saw him and the recollections of a bright and pleasant acquaintance dawned at once upon me.

After some time I asked my friend what had happened at Philadelphia, he having been a delegate from Ohio in that convention. He was not for Mr. Willkie. He was pledged to Ohio's honored son. But when I asked him how it happened, how it was possible that a convention should cast aside its tried and true leaders and place the honor of a nomination upon an unknown, a corporation utility man, he said:

> I am not fully awake yet. I do not yet realize what occurred. I see it in a sort of maze. Dimly I can see the members of that convention, weary, sleepy, and almost unconscious, fall to the ever-increasing, insistent influence that was voiced from the packed galleries by the shouts of men and women that automatically came forth at every sound of Willkie's name. I can see other strong delegates who believed the nomination of Willkie would be a mistake, pleading with their brethren not to yield to this false propaganda. They sometimes became excited and used language that on ordinary occasions would have brought quick resentment, but no remarks of criticism brought forth any reply.

The weary delegates had finally submitted. In an almost semiconscious state they surrendered to the manufactured sentiment that came from the galleries, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!" My friend's description of what happened is the same as that which we have all heard over and over again from many of the observers of this convention.

What is this monopolistic machine controlled by private utility magnates?

It is nothing new. Many years ago this machine began to work. Its influence on elections everywhere—municipal, county, State, and national—was being felt to such a degree that the Senate passed a resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate this octopus. There was a great struggle in this body before that resolution was passed. Senators who were here then will remember what a strenuous fight was put up against that investigation.

Mr. Willkie was then a young man. He was a lawyer in Akron, Ohio; but his practice as a lawyer was limited to a great extent to his activities in behalf of private utilities. He was then just emerging into national activities; and, although he had been fighting the battles of the private utilities up to that time, this was probably his advent into the national struggle. In the contest over the passage of the resolution of investigation Mr. Willkie then was one of a group of attorneys who joined in filing a brief against the passage of the resolution.

In that brief Mr. Willkie and his associate attorneys used the following language:

> If the special committee is to weigh Senator Walsh's charges in the light of the facts gathered by the State and Federal authorities and the determinations of the courts and commissions concerning them, the charges made before the Senate are unfounded beyond peradventure. * * * If the facts are as this record shows them to be, there is no excessive or inflated capitalization, no unwarranted exactions in the rates, no dangers menacing the investors, the customers, or the general public interest.

The resolution was passed, notwithstanding the objection of Willkie and his colleagues. The results of the investigation shocked the conscience of the American people. Assertions made by Mr. Willkie and other attorneys in their brief were shown to be absolutely untrue. They said, "there is no excessive or inflated capitalization," and yet the investigation showed that nearly one and one-half billion dollars of water had been pumped into the capitalization of the companies investigated. Willkie and the other attorneys in their brief said, "No unwarranted exactions in the rates, no dangers menacing the investors, the customers, or the general public interest"; and yet the evidence disclosed that all these charges were more than true. These disclosures, as I have just said, shocked the conscience of the American people.

The evidence, taken for the most part from the books and the lips of the utility magnates themselves, showed that there was a great national Power Trust. One of its principal mouthpieces was the National Electric Light Association. When the investigation revealed the disgraceful way in which that association had carried on its propaganda and its work throughout all parts of the United States, the National Electric Light Association was compelled, because of an aroused public opinion, to dissolve itself. It gave up its name, the National Electric Light Association, and formed the Edison Electric Institute, which has been ever since—and still is—the mouthpiece of the Power Trust in America.

The investigation showed that no work was too low or too disreputable for the representatives of the Power Trust to put into active operation. They mixed into politics from the top of the ticket to the bottom, wherever any candidate would have anything to do, if elected, with electric power. They bribed preachers in the pulpit. They hired professors in universities. They employed representatives of farm organizations and of other societies to bore from within. They wrote textbooks for the public schools. They had their emissaries in practically every municipality in the United States.

These men were selected not so much for any knowledge they might have of the electric industry as for their ability to worm their way into various kinds of societies to do their work. Their representatives prepared speeches for candidates for Congress. They went into the courts wherever possible and secured injunctions, many of which they knew would have to fail in the end, but delay was one of the objects they had in view. The American people were apprised of these disclosures. They were shocked. They had thought some of the things that were shown to be true were absolutely impossible. The Power Trust had men and women on its secret pay rolls all over the United States. In other words, the private utility industry had worked up a combination and put together a monopoly, a machine, greater and more effective than had ever been organized by human minds or put together by human hands.

The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission showed the evils of holding companies. It showed how, by the combined building of one corporation on top of another, one holding company might dominate millions of consumers and the prices they were compelled to pay for electricity. The evils of the holding company were shown to be so great that there was an outcry on the part of the patriotic people of the United States against their perpetuation.

But the Power Trust, so well organized, as shown by the investigation—although it had to change its name because of the disclosures—still lives. The Edison Electric Institute, successor to the National Electric Light Association, still carries on the work. It has been dominating this industry ever since it was formed. The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission showed that individual generating plants scattered all over the country were organized into groups; that one corporation would buy a group of generating plants; that the stock of this one corporation was, in turn, held by another group; and that the stock of the other corporation was owned by still a third corporation. As I recall, when the Holding Company Act was passed, it was shown that there were instances in which the corporation which generated the electricity was 13 degrees removed in the way of ownership from the top holding company which held all the other companies in bondage.

After the holding companies held practically the entire United States within their grasp, they formed a "trade" association. That was what the National Electric Light Association was, and that is what the Edison Electric Institute now is.

Mr. Willkie, at the time he was nominated for the Presidency in the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia, was one of the trustees of the Edison Electric Institute.

In the meantime, Mr. Willkie had done so well as an attorney for the private utility monopoly in Akron, Ohio, that he was promoted. He was taken to New York. He became one of the attorneys for the Commonwealth & Southern, and about 2 years after, upon the death of Mr. Cobb, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, he was again promoted. He became president of Commonwealth & Southern, a holding company operating and owning subsidiaries in various portions of the United States—in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and North Carolina, as well as in Ohio and Michigan. As president of this great holding company and as one of the trustees of the Edison Electric Institute, his power in the utility world was greatly increased. He became one of the dominent influences in the electrical field.

The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission has shown conclusively that the Power Trust was deep in politics all over the United States. This is practically admitted in an editorial in Electrical World of October 14, 1933. Electrical World is generally considered to be the mouthpiece of the Power Trust in America.

This editorial starts out with the statement:

It is very evident that the utility business is in politics.

The editorial then goes on to say the Power Trust must remain in politics, and in arguing that this should be done the editorial says the Power Trust—must make politics their major concern. * * * It means a complete and thoughtfully prepared political program that is applied honestly and continuously in each community served, as well as in the State and national political forums. It means a strong organization based upon political competency; it means definite political action in the political arena.

Further on, the editorial says:

These utility men must come to know intimately the present municipal officials and State and national legislators, also those who will attain these political positions in the future.

Quoting further from the editorial:

This program will succeed or fail depending upon the personnel that applies it. Executives must like to do this work and know how to do it. This calls for a type of man quite different from those who built and expanded the physical plant of the utilities and instituted their operating organizations. It calls for a different kind of knowledge and competency than that necessary to success in finance, engineering, or management. Both education and replacement of personnel must be used to create these new leaders necessary to attain the industry objectives. For no one but chief officers can do this work, can personalize the utilities in each community, can take the lead in the political activities. These are new and quite different specifications for executive competency, but they must be met if present conditions are to be changed for the better.

But a political program does not stop with the selection of a staff of executives or their action in the political arena. There must be other workers. Each employee of the utilities, each member of the manufacturing, wholesaling, contracting, and retailing branches of the electrical industry must be enrolled and put to work. * * * Fortunately it is not necessary to undertake the work by establishing a national headquarters or a national organization. If the actions outlined are undertaken on each property for every local community the national situation will take care of itself; it is the district organizations that win elections. What needs to be done is to staff each local property with political executives and permit them to build their political fences. * * * Utilities should translate public service into political service also by taking local action adequate to meet present needs. Local tickets should be slated and local platforms written at once for each community.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire editorial be printed as an exhibit at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this great industry, under the leadership of Mr. Willkie and his associates, has carried out the program outlined in this editorial. It has gone into politics in the most minute detail. Its organization covers the entire United States. It consists of intelligent and wise men in every locality, equipped—as this editorial advises—for instant action in any case.

When Mr. Willkie became a candidate for President, without making any attempt in any State or Territory to get delegates, as the other candidates did, he had only to rely upon this great organization. He not only had the backing of his own great holding company and all its subsidiaries but he had the backing of every utility magnate and every utility trust and subsidiary in the United States. Combined with them were the financial interests of Wall Street. When the proper time came, Wall Street touched a button and put this machine to work overnight. From Maine to California came the letters and telegrams, saying, in effect, that the sentiment of the country was that Willkie should be nominated as the Republican candidate by the Republican Party.

It required no great expenditure in building up a machine. The machine already existed. The machine had already been established. It was Nation-wide in its scope, and in all its ramifications it obeyed "its master's voice" that came from Wall Street. It was paid for by the consumers of electricity all over the United States. The very men who were being deceived and betrayed were paying for the upkeep of this great machine. Contributions unwillingly subscribed by every consumer of electricity kept this machine alive. The washerwoman who used electric power to do her work contributed her mite; the student, the school children studying their lessons by the light of an electric lamp, made their contributions by the millions toward the upkeep of this great machine. When Wall Street's representatives took snuff, every utility servant and slave all over our broad land commenced to sneeze.

The members of the Republican convention at Philadelphia weary and worn out, tired and sleepy, half unconscious, listened and listened and listened to the Power Trust cry that came from the galleries of that convention, "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!" At first these delegates shuddered when they heard this name. They heard it so continuously it became a part of their very political lives. They heard it in the morning when they got up. They heard it all day in the convention. They listened to it at night. And when for a few short hours they lay down upon their couches to sleep, the last thing they heard as they went into dreamland was "Willkie! Willkie! Willkie!"

Not only did this great trust build up fictitious corporations and holding companies but it manipulated its financial operations in a most disgraceful manner. All kinds of water and air were pumped into capitalization. All of this had to be paid for in one or both of two ways. This octopus had no way of getting money, except in one or both of these ways.

One way was through the price of electric current, which the ultimate consumer had to pay. The other was through the manipulation of securities and the padding of capitalization. So that, in order to obtain the millions that were made by the manipulators of this system, they either had to rob the consumer or cheat the investor. The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission showed that for the companies investigated—and this did not include all of them—there were nearly a billion and a half dollars of water in their capitalization.

There is practically no difference in the operation of the various holding companies that are all combined together under the trade association—the Edison Electric Institute—and while often there is no legal connection between two or more of these holding companies there is, as a matter of fact, a close association, a close connection, and a close understanding, a unanimity of operation, between all of them; so that when you strike at one you receive the condemnation of all. If you undertake to investigate one, to show its dishonest manipulation of securities and the exorbitant prices charged for electricity, you bring down upon your head the opposition of every one of them.

Let me illustrate this. I could give hundreds of illustrations, but out of the many I select this one:

Omaha, Nebr., and some few municipalities surrounding it, are supplied with electricity by the Nebraska Power Co. The Nebraska Power Co. is owned by the American Power & Light Co. The American Power & Light is owned by the Electric Bond & Share, a New York corporation. It has no physical or technical legal connection with the Commonwealth & Southern or any of the properties directly controlled by Mr. Willkie; but there is always a bond of sympathy just as strong as though they were owned by one man. The Nebraska Power Co. is incorporated in the State of Maine. As a matter of fact—and I think it will not be disputed—the Nebraska Power Co. controls, to a very great extent and has great influence with, if it does not entirely dominate, the Omaha Chamber of Commerce.

Several years ago, to provide entertainment for its members and to educate the general public, the Omaha Chamber of Commerce was getting prominent men to speak before it. Although he was unknown outside the field of the private power companies, in some way or another the Omaha Chamber of Commerce—very likely through a suggestion of the Nebraska Power Co.—wrote a letter to Mr. Willkie asking him to fix a date upon which he could speak before the chamber of commerce.

It is interesting to know how Mr. Willkie's mind runs on such matters. He apparently knew all about the Nebraska Power Co., the company which in the past, to a great extent, has dominated the politics of the State of Nebraska as well as the city of Omaha. The history of that company in such domination and control of finances is a disgraceful page in its history. But in this case Mr. Willkie was asked to speak before the chamber of commerce. It was impossible for him to go to Omaha, but he made a suggestion. What was that suggestion? He suggested a speaker to take his place. It is rather peculiar that the man he selected, the man he suggested, was the one man who dominated the Nebraska Power Co.

I read from the Omaha World-Herald of July 26, 1940:

Checking its lists for names of dignitaries to invite to Omaha as public-affairs speakers this year, the chamber of commerce yesterday came across correspondence it had last year with Wendell Willkie about coming here to make a speech if he were in this territory.

Willkie, replying in informal style, said:

"I don't know just when I will be out Omaha way, but if I ever am I shall be delighted to drop in at a meeting and listen to a talk by Mr. J. E. Davidson (president, Nebraska Power Co.). I don't know why you fellows want to get any outside fellows with a person like Jim Davidson around. However, if I ever find myself in that direction, I will let you or Mr. Davidson know."

The chamber is considering reinviting Willkie for this year.

This shows where Willkie's mind runs. It also shows how intimately connected these various power companies and holding companies are, even though they have no physical or legal connection.

During the long and weary fight against the Power Trust in the Congress of the United States, Mr. Willkie was always opposed to any of the remedial legislation pending in Congress. As I have shown, he, with others, filed a brief before the Senate committee opposing the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. When that investigation was completed, and Congress undertook to remedy the disgraceful situation that was brought to light, he was found opposing every attempt of any kind to bring about reform. He opposed the holding-company bill—a bill which undertook to strike at one of the greatest evils that had grown up under the monopolistic control of the private utilities. He appeared before committees of Congress in opposition to the bill. He was part and parcel of the great Power Trust that was fighting the legislation.

The people of this country will not forget the propaganda put forth by the Power Trust to defeat the holding-company bill. They cannot forget the disclosures made by a committee of the Senate headed by Senator Black, now Justice Black, in which it was shown that all of the disgraceful things that had been performed by the Power Trust during the life of the National Electric Light Association were perpetrated and continued under the Edison Electric Institute, of which Mr. Willkie was one of the trustees. This committee disclosed evidence that over a million dollars was spent by the Power Trust to defeat that legislation. The methods employed in the Senate and the House to defeat it were much the same as the methods used to control the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia. The only difference is that in the efforts of the Power Trust to control the Republican Convention they profited by some of the mistakes they made in trying to control Congress.

It is unnecessary to rehearse the evidence disclosed by the Black committee. It has never been denied that the conditions which Senator Black brought to light showed conclusively that the Power Trust had not changed its spots, and it is a remarkable fact that in the holding-company fight the Power Trust came very near succeeding.

It is probably because of some of the mistakes made in that contest, and because, notwithstanding these mistakes, the Power Trust was so nearly successful, that it undertook to try again the same plan upon the Republican National Convention. Profiting by the mistakes it had made, it succeeded in taking the Republican convention into captivity. To a great extent it brazenly came out into the open instead of acting secretly under cover to put forward one of its own leaders. Through the power of that wonderful organization there was organized a propaganda that has never been surpassed, and it was organized all unbeknown to the public—all unbeknown to the men whom they were going to and did deceive. It was organized so well that before the weary, tired members of that convention knew it they had sold the birthright of the Republican Party for a mess of private utility pottage.

Through all of his mature life Mr. Willkie has been engaged in this fight. He has now become the outstanding and unchallenged leader. In this battle he expects not only to capture a party but to capture the Government itself.

During the course of the years after Mr. Willkie became president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, the methods he has used have been no exception to those practiced from the very beginning of Power Trust domination. He opposed the passage of the T. V. A. bill, and after the bill was passed and became a law he fought it for years in the courts. He, more than any other one man, is responsible for the tedious years of delay and the millions of dollars of expense which the T. V. A. has had to meet. These suits consisted of petitions for injunctions against the T. V. A. in one or more of its activities. The T. V. A. never lost any of these suits in the appellate courts. The injunctions were sometimes issued in the lower court by a judge friendly to Mr. Willkie and his associates, but in every instance the injunction was ultimately set aside, either in the circuit court of appeals or in the Supreme Court of the United States, or both.

The joint committee of Congress appointed to investigate the activities of the T. V. A. reported—on page 62 of the report—that more than $500,000 was actually spent in cash by the T. V. A. in defending itself against these suits. The committee also found that delays in the consummation of contracts for the sale of power caused by these injunction suits had caused serious loss to the T. V. A.

Of course, these losses must be partially estimated, because it is impossible to know, since the injunctions were issued, just what the profits would have been. But, knowing the amount of power that was going to waste which the T. V. A. had for sale, and knowing the number of customers who were anxious to buy it, these estimates can be taken as almost a certainty, and it is estimated that the Authority lost in this way more than $5,300,000.

It is also known that the municipalities which wanted to buy this power, but which were prevented from doing so by the injunction suits, lost an immense amount of money because of the high rates they were compelled to pay to Mr. Willkie's companies during the pendency of the injunction suits. While this damage, as a legal proposition, is remote, yet calculations can be made almost to a certainty as to how much money the consumers of electricity in these localities lost because of the high rates they had to pay. A careful estimate indicates a loss of nearly $8,000,000. All of these losses, running into many millions, have been caused either by Mr. Willkie's companies, or by others acting in conjunction with his companies, and he has been the dominating figure in all of this litigation.

Not only did Mr. Willkie and his corporations fight the T. V. A. in this way, but they went into localities and participated in elections where municipalities were voting on bonds for the purpose of building distribution systems, or buying existing systems, in order that they might get the benefit of the low T. V. A. rates.

As illustrating that point, the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., should be considered. The city of Chattanooga desired to buy electricity of the T. V. A. An election was called in that municipality on the proposition of issuing $8,000,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of putting in a distribution system, or of buying one owned by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., one of Mr. Willkie's subsidiary companies. This election was held on March 12, 1935. The bonds were authorized in this election by a vote of more than two to one, notwithstanding the fact that the private power company in opposing this bond issue spent—as found by the grand jury—$23,907.19 in that one election, while those advocating the bonds spent only $1,540.

The evidence disclosed that for the purpose of defeating the bonds an association was formed, known as the Citizens and Taxpayers Association. This association collected the money and made the expenditures in this fight. Mr. Willkie's holding company, the Commonwealth & Southern, of which he was then president, paid $20,000 of the money raised to fight this bond issue.

The evidence disclosed that all the methods known for deceiving the people in an election were used in this election. The power company bought 2 lots just prior to the election, and had 120 nonresident employees of the power company register from them. This little trick was discovered and disclosed by the press a few days before the election, and the plan fell through.

The power company subsidized a newspaper known as the Free Press, which it had practically established and set up as a daily paper in competition with the Chattanooga News, a paper friendly to the T. V. A. It withdrew all of its advertising from the Chattanooga News after the bond election and paid unreasonable prices for advertising in the Free Press. The Free Press received from the power company a higher rate for advertising than it received from anybody else. In reality the power company built the Free Press up from nothing and was the one great instrumentality in killing the Chattanooga News, one of the oldest newspapers in the South.

Various other schemes, likewise of a disreputable nature, were used by the power company to defeat the issuance of these bonds by Chattanooga.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator will recall that the little paper, the Free Press, was only a semiweekly trade paper, which was issued by 40 grocery stores which were in a chain. This chain of 40 little grocery stores owned this little semiweekly trade paper called the Free Press. As the Senator has said, Mr. Willkie's company took this little semiweekly trade paper and built it up into a great daily newspaper with which to destroy the Chattanooga News. As the Senator knows, the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Tennessee investigated the whole matter and made a very interesting and voluminous report, showing how Mr. Willkie's power company permitted this little trade paper, the Free Press, to go on for month after month without paying anything for the electricity it was getting from Mr. Willkie's company; how Mr. Willkie's company permitted the 40 grocery stores and a creamery and a bakery, operated by the grocery stores, which owned the Free Press, to go on month after month without paying for any electricity from Mr. Willkie's power company; and how finally, when the bills had to be paid, because the Senator's resolution to provide for an investigation to see what Mr. Willkie's company had done to thwart the operation of T. V. A. had passed the Senate and was about to pass the House, the Free Press and the grocery stores, with their creamery and bakery, paid the bill for the electricity used by them with money provided by Mr. Willkie's power company through a lawyer named Silas Williams.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to make just one observation, that the Tennessee Utilities Commission, before which this matter was prosecuted, found the Willkie company guilty, my recollection is, on about 800 different counts.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Chattanooga case is given only as an illustration. Many details of that case have not yet been given, and I shall give more, but I will not go into all of them. They are too numerous. It is only an illustration of what they do everywhere. It is just a practice which has been indulged in by this monopoly from away before the Walsh resolution was passed, and they were then operating all over the United States.

When the election in Chattanooga was over, the power company had been defeated by a vote of about 2½ to 1, and it was found that there was a large deficit. An official of the Citizens and Taxpayers Association, in whose name the fight against the issuance of these bonds had been made, wrote to Mr. Willkie himself and asked him to subscribe enough money to make up the deficit. His letter to Mr. Willkie is as follows:

APRIL 1, 1935.

Mr. WENDELL L. WILLKIE,
President, Commonwealth & Southern Corporation,
20 Pine Street, New York, N. Y.—

He did not direct this letter to Indiana, to a Hoosier barefoot boy, as Willkie is being described now, but he directed it to 20 Pine Street, New York. It reads as follows:

DEAR MR. WILLKIE: As treasurer of the Citizens and Taxpayers Association, which led the fight against public power in the recent $8,000,000 bond issue in Chattanooga, I am asking your company, as a large stockholder of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.—

In fact, they owned it—for some further financial assistance, in view of the fact that this fight was made in the interest of the stockholders as well as the citizens and taxpayers of Chattanooga. The campaign which our association made was more expensive than we anticipated to begin with. Also the preferred stockholders and citizens and taxpayers of Chattanooga did not donate to our cause as we had expected—

That was true; they did not "shell out," and when it came to the election they did not vote as they were expected to vote. The letter proceeds—

Our total expenses in the campaign amounted to $24,118.36, and we have received in donations to date $13,261.47, leaving a deficit of $10,856.89. This deficit is covered by:

Note in one of the Chattanooga banks for	$3,000.00
Overdrafts for	7,248.88
Unpaid bills of	609.01

The letter proceeds—

In view of the circumstances, we hope that your company will, as a substantial stockholder in the Tennessee Electric Power Co., appreciate our position and help us to clear up our deficit, which, as stated above, amounts to $10,856.89. The larger portion of our expenses in this campaign were occasioned by advertising in local newspapers in Chattanooga, over the radio, handbills, circulars, posters, etc., this being necessary on account of the Power League favoring the bond issue using like means of advertising to influence the voters.

We are all very sorry that our campaign was unsuccessful, but we had many obstacles in this election which normally would not have existed. However, we feel that the fight has just begun, and I personally will continue to do everything I can to support the position of the stockholders of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

With very best regards, I remain,
Very truly yours,

CITIZENS' AND TAXPAYERS' ASSOCIATION,
By PAUL S. MATHES, Treasurer.

In response to this letter directed to Mr. Willkie, a check of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation for $10,000 was sent. This contribution by the Willkie holding company was made after the election and was evidently brought forth by the letter I have just read from Mr. Mathes, treasurer of the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association.

The memorandum enclosed with this check, and constituting exhibit No. 253 in the files of the Joint Committee on the Investigation of the T. V. A., is as follows:

Witness: Mathes. Memo attached to check. Retain this memorandum for your files. Endorsement of accompanying check is considered a receipt in full settlement of following items:

4/5/35. Contribution to the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association, Chattanooga, Tenn., $10,000.

NOTE.—If this does not agree with your records, please return with check, explaining apparent error.

THE COMMONWEALTH & SOUTHERN CORPORATION.

We thus see that practically the entire expense in this one municipal election was paid by the Commonwealth & Southern, Mr. Willkie's holding company. The total contributions of the Commonwealth & Southern to this election amounted to $20,000, one-half of which was paid to make up the deficit after the election had taken place. Mr. Willkie cannot escape these facts, because the letter of Mr. Mathes, treasurer of the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association, on April 1, 1935, which I have just read, was directed to Mr. Wendell L. Willkie, and in answer to that plea there came forth the check of the Commonwealth & Southern, without any letter, for $10,000.

It seems proper, therefore, to charge to the Commonwealth & Southern and to Mr. Willkie himself all the unfair and unlawful methods used to control this municipal election in the city of Chattanooga.

The election there went against Mr. Willkie and his associates by a majority of over 2 to 1, but the Commonwealth & Southern had succeeded in setting up a new afternoon newspaper in Chattanooga, no part of the cost of which was included in the contributions made by the Commonwealth & Southern directly to those fighting the issuance of the bonds. They had accomplished, also, the crucifixion of one of the oldest and most respected daily newspapers in the South, and had brought about the sale of this newspaper to the fraudulent newspaper they themselves had established to take its place.

How this can be condoned by anyone who believes in a free press is more than any reasonable man can understand. How such things can occur in a free country is difficult to explain. But, in addition to that, the attempt to elect as President of the United States the man who more than any other one man was responsible for this condition is beyond the comprehension of the ordinary person.

After negotiations extending over several years, Mr. Willkie sold the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to the T. V. A. and the various municipalities acting with the T. V. A. The T. V. A. had always gone on the theory that it would not build generating systems or transmission lines to compete with those owned by existing private-power companies, without first making an attempt to negotiate with such private-power companies to purchase the existing facilities for a fair and honest price, if such a thing were possible. When the Tennessee Electric Power Co. was finally sold for a price agreed upon by Mr. Willkie, the T. V. A., and the representatives of the various municipalities, it was recognized by all that the price paid was really more than the property was worth. The comment of the newspapers of the country when that sale took place was invariably that the T. V. A. had paid a liberal price for the property. The sale of this property at that price was generally approved even by the conservative press of the country.

Personally I believe the price was too high. The T. V. A. realized it was paying more than the property was actually worth, but it wanted to lean backward so that no private investment would be injured. It wanted to end the eternal and perpetual war in the courts and before Congress, the fight Mr. Willkie and his holding company with its subsidiaries was constantly putting up.

The T. V. A. believed, and I have always advocated, that when property of a privately owned electric utility is purchased by a publicly owned system, an amount of money in lieu of taxes equal to the taxes theretofore paid by the private company should be paid annually by the public corporation. The T. V. A. has tried to carry out this principle in good faith. But in the purchase of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. by the T. V. A., there were several properties located in counties in Tennessee, North Carolina, and Georgia where, on account of local conditions, the taxes paid by the private-utility company prior to this sale were the main source of revenue for such counties. In three or four instances, in small counties in thinly populated, mountainous regions, where the private-power company had one or more generating systems, it paid the bulk of the taxes in those counties.

In order to permit the T. V. A. to save these counties harmless and to pay money in lieu of taxes upon all electric properties formerly owned by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., it was necessary that the law be changed. A bill was introduced in the Senate and the House to permit the T. V. A., out of revenues it received from the sale of power, to compensate these counties and to pay an amount of money in lieu of taxes that would be equal to the taxes if the properties were privately owned, as they had been before the contract of sale was made.

Everyone agreed, so far as I know, as to the justice of this proposal. Hearings were had by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate. The bill was referred to the Agriculture Committee in the Senate, and by the Agriculture Committee referred to a subcommittee. Hearings were had. Although everyone who had anything to say one way or the other was invited to appear, no person ever appeared before either committee to object to the bill. On the other hand, all those who did appear favored the enactment of this just law.

I was a member of the subcommittee to which the bill was referred. My honored colleague the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] was also a member of that subcommittee. We made a unanimous, favorable report to the full committee, and the full committee unanimously reported the bill to the Senate recommending its passage. The motion in that committee to make a favorable report was made by my good friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. That bill passed the Senate. Even though there appeared to be no opposition to it, an unfriendly House committee refused to report the bill, with the result that the Senate attached that bill as an amendment to another bill, and in that way this bill became a law.

Last year, Mr. Willkie appeared before the House Committee on Military Affairs and testified in connection with the bill permitting the purchase by the T. V. A. of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. Although the original bill permitting this sale was necessary for him to get his pay for the sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties, he criticized the proposal made during the hearings that the T. V. A. be permitted to pay money in lieu of these taxes lost by three or four of the counties in Tennessee, North Carolina, and Georgia. It is interesting to know that although the sale of these properties to T. V. A. left it powerless to pay these taxes unless Congress enacted a law permitting it, Mr. Willkie, in his testimony, referring to these counties which would be deprived of tax money on properties he owned, in event of their sale to the T. V. A., said:

> I would let them stew in their own juice down there. A few bankrupt counties would be very enlightening. (See hearings before subcommittee of Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives on S. 1796, p. 298, June 5, 1939.)

He had sold the properties to the T. V. A. He had no further interest. His company had been paying taxes for many years, it is true, but he got his money out of it, and he said, "I would let them stew in their own juice down there. A few bankrupt counties would be very enlightening."

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. One of the main arguments Mr. Willkie had always used against the T. V. A. and all public power projects was that they would not pay any taxes, and by not paying taxes they would be subsidized, which was unfair to private power companies. Yet, as the Senator says, when the T. V. A. wanted to pay taxes, and the Congress was seeking to pass a bill to permit the payment of taxes by the T. V. A., we found Mr. Willkie saying, "I would let them stew in their own juice."

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for his contribution. It is very apt. It is all true. Not only Mr. Willkie, but those of his kind, used as their first argument, "They do not pay taxes." When Mr. Willkie was confronted with a bill permitting the payment by the T. V. A. of a sum in lieu of taxes, he said, "I would let them stew in their own juice down there. A few bankrupt counties would be very enlightening."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that the President of the United States would be in a very unfortunate position if he should hold such enmity against any counties or any States in the Union?

Mr. NORRIS. I think a man having that disposition would be unfit for almost any office.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think so, too; but I certainly think he would be wholly unfit to be President of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Everybody who knows him and who knows what he has been and what he has done, knows that he is not prepared for the duties of that high office.

I think these outbursts from Mr. Willkie when he was on the witness stand show, after all, his real conception of what he would like to have done in the utility field. He would like to force the Government of the United States to adopt his belief. While, perhaps, it would be necessary for the Government, in order to eliminate losses on multiple purpose dams, to develop power, yet he would like to have that electricity, when thus developed, turned over to him and his associates, private utility magnates, to permit them to sell it to the public. He would have a natural resource of the country in effect turned over to private corporations for profit. He would permit the Government to go to great expense and continue in the development of our natural resources until the time came when there might be some profit, when there might be some return, and then he would have the Power Trust come into the picture to be the beneficiary. If he could not have his way; if the laws of our country provided for any other method, he would not remedy any injustice that had been brought about but he would let the people "stew in their own juice."

It is inconceivable that the people of the United States will listen to the dictates of Wall Street in the selection of a President. Never before in our history has such a brazen attempt been made by great corporations to put one of their leading representatives in the White House.

In this campaign the mantle of deception has to some extent at least been thrown aside and the challenge has been made directly to our people.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not want to interrupt the Senator too much. I realize that he does not want to detain the Senate too long; but is it not a fact that the same methods and the same practices which were used to defeat the consumers in our cities and towns and to prevent them from receiving the benefits of cheap power were also used in an effort to defeat rural electrification and to deny the blessings of electricity to our farmers?

Mr. NORRIS. I am coming to that.

Mr. HILL. I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Are we to be obedient to the commands and demands of greedy monopoly, and for the first time in our history elect as President the outstanding representative of an unjust and unconscionable monopoly, the representative of one of the greatest trusts ever put together by human hands, a trust which has reached into every home and every fireside to exact its unholy and disgraceful tribute from our citizens? Backed by the great Power Trust, assisted by the great money power of Wall Street, helped to a great extent by a friendly press which has grown rich in advertising contributed to it by this same trust, aided and abetted by every evil influence that monopoly, money, and greed can conceive, it is intended to place in the highest office of our land the one man who, more than any other in the land, represents the policies and ideals of these unholy monopolies.

I am wondering, too, whether or not the farmers of the Nation will remember that the Power Trust has fought every effort to extend the blessings of electricity into their farm homes. I am wondering if the farmers will forget that every step which has been taken to bring electricity into their homes and to their firesides has been fought, bitterly and often dishonorably, by the great Power Trust, the monopoly which is seeking to control the Government of the United States.

I am wondering if the farm women of America, enjoying the blessings of electricity which have been brought into their kitchens from the natural resources of our country to relieve them of drudgery and provide them with comfort and happiness, will now vote to put their oppressors in power. Will they forget that every step which has ever been taken to bring them this wonderful blessing has been fought from beginning to end by the same greedy trust which, for the sake of its own gain, has tried always to prevent the extension of rural electrification to American farm homes?

Mr. Willkie, in his speech of acceptance and again last night in Omaha, said he was in favor of rural electrification. But unfortunately for Mr. Willkie, his record and the record of all his associates and the record of the Power Trust from the very beginning have been antagonistic to rural electrification. For many years prior to the passage of the Rural Electrification Act the farmers of America on bended knees, had been begging the trust to give the farmers of America electricity, but their supplications had been denied with impunity, except upon such terms that the farmer could not afford to bear the financial burden.

Not until the passage of the Rural Electrification Act did the Power Trust show any sympathy for the farmers of America. They fought the passage of the bill. They consistently fought its administration. The Power Trust always opposed rural electrification. But when the Government undertook to answer the cries of the farmers and to bring into the farm homes of America the blessings of electricity, Mr. Willkie's associates saw a new light.

Mr. Willkie never saw the light. He never raised his voice in favor of rural electrification until he became a nominee for the Presidency of the United States. He is in favor of electricity for the farmers, if the Power Trust can supply the electricity. The subsidiaries of his own Commonwealth & Southern have opposed rural electrification. They have indulged in all kinds of practices to prevent the carrying out of the law. One of their favorite plans—as it has been of all subsidiaries of the trust—is to build "spite" lines.

In laying out a project under the R. E. A., in order to reach as many farmers as possible, it has been and is the policy of the R. E. A. to unite sparsely settled farm country with thickly settled farm country so as to make the project a financial success.

Where the R. E. A. has surveyed a project the trust starts building a "spite" line into some portion of this territory, usually taking the "cream," and not leaving a sufficient number of farm homes to make up a rural project. Mr. Willkie's own subsidiaries have been as guilty as any other trust subsidiary in this activity. There are many illustrations of this, one of which was the practice followed by the Consumers Power Co. of Michigan.

The Consumers Power Co. of Michigan is a subsidiary of the Commonwealth & Southern, of which Mr. Willkie was president. That company utilized its power to extend its lines for the purpose of blocking and making difficult the building of R. E. A. extensions. It built "spite" lines, splitting up territory which logically was required to make a Rural Electrification project a success. This subsidiary company in Michigan fought in the legislature against the passage of legislation which would have assisted the R. E. A. Through members of the legislature who were friendly to this subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern necessary legislation was defeated. It later developed that a member of the Michigan legislature on the committee which had such legislation in charge was in the employ of the Consumers Power Co. at the time he was a member of the legislature, and that he had been one of the most outspoken opponents of legislation that would be beneficial to R. E. A.

On one occasion, at least, when the Consumers Power Co. was seeking special favors at the hands of the Michigan commission, Mr. Willkie himself appeared before that commission with other representatives, on behalf of favorable action upon applications of the Consumers Power Co. The Consumers Power Co., however, was no different from any other subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern, and its action is only an example of what was done by all representatives, by all subsidiaries, of the Power Trust, all over the country.

If Mr. Willkie is now in favor of rural electrification, he ought to tell the American people just when he was converted. It is but natural the farmers of America should listen with suspicion to this voice of the candidate, and compare it with his activities during practically all of his mature life.

The voice may be the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I was very much interested in the reference of the Senator concerning Mr. Willkie's record on rural electrification. I see the Senator has concluded his remarks along that line. I wonder if the Senator heard Mr. Willkie last night as he spoke in Omaha?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I heard his speech.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator remember what Mr. Willkie in that speech said about rural electrification?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I have the speech on my desk.

Mr. MINTON. He said he had not only been advocating rural electrification since 1933, but he thinks that it ought to be developed and extended.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody ever heard of his being for rural electrification prior to the time he became a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. He never heard the voice of the farmers who went to his own company praying for the extension of the electric lines into their communities so that they might get the benefit of electricity. I have now, I will say to the Senator from Indiana, some official figures—and if anyone questions the statement I will be glad to use them—of the various cases which have arisen in connection with rural electrification. Let anyone go down to the Rural Electrification Administration and ask them whether they ever had any trouble, whether they have had any "spite" lines built at places where they were trying to put in projects for rural electrification, and they will say—they will have to say, for they have the figures to prove it—that Mr. Willkie, as is true of every other magnate of his kind, has always fought rural electrification wherever he could.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Is it not a fact, however, that Mr. Willkie did construct some of what were called electric lines which were not within miles of connection with any electricity, and ran those lines across proposed rights-of-way the farmers were trying to acquire?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that has happened.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Probably that is what he means when he says that he has encouraged rural electrification.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably that may be so.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. As the Senator from Nebraska knows, Mr. Willkie's company, the Alabama Power Co., preempts the entire State of Alabama, except for those counties of northern Alabama that are in the T. V. A. area. Mr. Willkie attempted to build so many "spite" lines in Alabama to defeat the R. E. A. projects that the slogan in Alabama today is, "Spite lines with Willkie; life lines with Roosevelt."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The same thing occurred in Tennessee—the building of "spite" lines.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it occurred all over the country.

Mr. President, on the 21st day of January 1935, Mr. Willkie made a speech before the Economic Club of New York and the Harvard Business School Club. In that speech, made at a time when even he probably was not thinking of being a candidate for President of the United States, he referred to the infamous Samuel Insull as a "forceful, dynamic, and attractive figure."

Mr. Willkie was referring to Samuel Insull with admiration and approval. The same Insull, who has probably been the means of robbing more small investors than any other human being on earth, stands out in the estimation of Mr. Willkie as a "forceful, dynamic, and attractive figure." The American people think of Insull as the man who was financially able, from contributions he had received from the American consumers of electricity and the robberies he had perpetrated upon the American investors, to control a foreign nation, to charter a foreign vessel, and to sail the seven seas, in an effort to escape the officials of the Federal Government who had warrants for his arrest. He dominated a great electric empire. His methods were the same as the methods of the Power Trust everywhere.

In the same address Mr. Willkie, who was at that time president of the Commonwealth & Southern and trustee of the Edison Electric Institute—as he was on the very day the Republican Party nominated him for President—in language forceful and eloquent, refers to his "obligations" to "public utilities privately owned." He puts his loyalty to them above everything else in the world.

In this speech Mr. Willkie said:

> I do not like to make personal references, but I want to say to you that no duty has ever come to me in my life, even that in the service of my country—> which has so appealed to my sense of social obligation, patriotism, and love of mankind as this, my obligation to say and do what I can for the preservation of public utilities privately owned. All that I have observed, all that I know, and all that I read teaches me that I could do nothing nobler for the future financial stability and political good of my country or the social and economic well-being of my fellow citizens than to stand firm and unafraid against this foolish fad and fancy of the moment.

There you have from the very heart of Mr. Willkie his philosophy. He puts his loyalty to the Power Trust above loyalty to anything else in life, even to his country in time of war.

These words ought to burn into the heart of every American citizen. They ought to make him realize that Mr. Willkie's election would mean the domination of the Power Trust in our Nation. It is inconceivable to me that a man running for the Presidency of the United States can expect to receive the votes of his fellow citizens when his loyalty to "public utilities privately owned" exceeds his loyalty to his Government, even in time of war.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print as a second exhibit to my remarks the special section of the New Republic of September 2, 1940, on the subject This Man Willkie.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. NORRIS. And also, as a third exhibit to my remarks, I ask to have printed at the conclusion thereof an article from the New Republic of September 16, 1940, entitled "Mr. Willkie Pleads Guilty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[From the Electrical World for the week ending October 14, 1933]

LIGHT UP WITH POLITICS

It is very evident that the utility business is in politics. And present political influences are destructive to private ownership and operation and favorable to public ownership and operation. These conditions result from the political exploitation of a hostile public sentiment and can be changed only by bringing into play the same kinds of social and political forces that have placed the business in its present hazardous position. This means that the utilities must take political action. Upon a platform of public interest, utility men as taxpayers, as citizens, as representatives of employees and investors, and as public-service suppliers must make politics their major concern. This does not mean potshotting at agitators, at radical politicians, placing definite facts in pamphlets for public distribution, an advertising campaign, or a lobbying contact with legislative bodies—these are incomplete, incorrect, and amateurish. It means a complete and thoughtfully prepared political program that is applied honestly and continuously in each community served, as well as in the State and National political forums. It means a strong organization based upon political competency; it means definite political action in the political arena.

Public sentiment creates the structures upon which politicians rise to eminence, and the utilities must act upon this concept. They must gain public favor to earn fair political treatment. This is the essence of their political program. Every executive or manager in each community served must devote his individual efforts to making the citizens and the politicians friends instead of enemies; to making them understand his personality, his business, his problems, and his intimate and necessary association with every activity that makes for community progress. These utility men must come to know intimately the present municipal officials and State and National legislators, also those who will attain these political positions in the future, and they must be able to convince these men of their political impartiality and at the same time gain recognition that they are honest, that they favor all programs for community development, and that a prosperous and fairly treated utility under their competent management is a community asset and in the public interest. Utility executives must think and act externally with respect to their properties and honestly, frankly, and sincerely endeavor to become leading citizens instead of selfish property managers only.

This program will succeed or fail, depending upon the personnel that applies it. Executives must like to do this work and know how to do it. This calls for a type of man quite different from those who built and expanded the physical plant of the utilities and instituted their operating organizations. It calls for a different kind of knowledge and competency than that necessary to success in finance, engineering, or management. Both education and replacement of personnel must be used to create these new leaders necessary to attain the industry objectives. For no one but chief officers can do this work, can personalize the utilities in each community, can take the lead in the political activities. These are new and quite different specifications for executive competency, but they must be met if present conditions are to be changed for the better.

But a political program does not stop with the selection of a staff of executives or their action in the political arena. There must be other workers. Each employee of the utilities, each member of the manufacturing, wholesaling, contracting, and retailing branches of the electrical industry must be enrolled and put to work. Their efforts must be exerted effectively and honestly and in accord with a plan that is sufficiently flexible to fit local and national conditions. At the start these people must be convinced that the cause is just, that the work is necessary, and that the plans will get results. They must be told how to be effective but nonpartisan political workers on matters pertaining to the utility business or those involving community well-being. They also must like to do this work, be sincere in it, and be enthusiastic subordinates in the coordinated program. Add to these elements publicity, advertising, fact finding, and other essentials of a good political organization and one gains a conception of the magnitude and complexity of the task confronting the utilities and the industry.

Fortunately, it is not necessary to undertake the work by establishing a national headquarters or a national organization. If the actions outlined are undertaken on each property for every local community, the national situation will take care of itself; it is the district organizations that win elections. What needs to be done is to staff each local property with "political" executives and permit them to build their political fences. This does not involve spending money, artificial or underhand tricks, or any other action than work by them and the local electrical-industry employees to measure up to the meaning of good citizenship and to gain the friendly confidence and understanding of utility customers and local politicians by showing that they are doing an honest and constructive job that is in the public interest. Success in politics depends upon human relations, and these have their greatest center in the homes of the citizens of each locality.

Utilities should translate public service into political service also by taking local action adequate to meet present needs. Local tickets should be slated and local platforms written at once for each community.

UTILIZING OPPORTUNITIES FOR BROADER ENGINEERING ANALYSIS

Relaxed pressure upon engineers to complete electrical construction as rapidly as possible over wide areas of service has released time for more extended analytical studies of system development. Specific examples of work being done to insure a better balanced development of plant are of interest in this connection. New business is receiving more attention from the standpoint of ultimate demand as well as initial requirements, and the relation of load-supplying facilities in districts as a whole to neighborhood necessities is being considered more carefully. The limitations of distribution facilities in particular areas are being studied with reference to system development programs and such inquiries are often set in motion by sales-department activities in a very limited locality. Problems of standardizing transformer sizes for secondary networks and local substation service, voltage regulation, selection of cable types and unification of distribution equipment and applications are much to the fore.

Other matters receiving more leisurely but none the less penetrating attention include the coordination and simplification of field construction procedure to cut labor and material costs; the investigation of equipment obsolescence and study of replacement schedules, and the examination of plant records to reduce maintenance costs by combining overlapping and infrequently used records, as well as eliminating obsolete records and practices in construction and operating accounting. Cooperative conferences are being held with manufacturers, dealers, jobbers and contractors with the object of reducing installation costs without sacrificing service quality, and the importance of adequate wiring with a view to the future installation of air-conditioning equipment in public and semi-public buildings is being considered in progressive circles. Such tasks are doubly useful in occupying engineering forces before the present rapid upswing of new service demands quickens the pace of electrification in industry and commerce and in laying firmer foundations for economical development under the present favorable cost and time conditions. Rehabilitation starts with engineering analysis.

EXHIBIT B

[From the New Republic, special section, of September 2, 1940]

THIS MAN WILLKIE

For the first time in its history the New Republic devotes a special supplement to one man. Wendell L. Willkie has become Republican Presidential nominee at the most crucial moment in the life of this Nation. The next 4 years may decide whether we can survive as an independent, free people. Mr. Willkie has accepted a fearful responsibility, as President Roosevelt has, in asking to be allowed to guide the destinies of America through such a time.

In this special section the editors describe Mr. Willkie's career and personality. They tell the story of how Commonwealth & Southern common stockholders took a loss, on paper, of $750,000,000; of how his Southern companies fought the T. V. A. with injunctions, spite lines, paid propaganda, and whisky at elections; of how his Michigan company tried to suppress a labor union and tangled with the Labor Board. They report and analyze his statements on public questions—in short, give a picture of the man and what he means.

THIS MAN WILLKIE—WHAT'S HE LIKE?

What is the personality of Wendell Willkie, who has in such sudden and spectacular fashion flashed across the American sky? The statement below is based on personal contact with Mr. Willkie, and on the printed records.

This is no horror story. Wendell Willkie isn't anybody's personal devil, and we don't propose to pretend that he is. He is a shrewd and likable business adventurer, and if the times were such that we could afford to entrust the destinies of our Nation to a person of that sort, he would probably acquit himself fairly well in the White House. It is quite possible he may be elected, and in that case he may grow up to his job; Presidents sometimes do. If this happens, however, he will have quite a lot of growing to do.

Willkie in action is something beautiful to see: like Eleanor Holm in the water, or Toscanini conducting. His ancestry is German, but it should have been Irish, or better yet, Welsh. Rarely does he make such a complete failure as he seems to have done in his speech before the National Press Club in Washington, D. C., when some of his hearers found his advocacy of a business government almost indistinguishable from Fascist doctrine. As a rule he is acutely conscious of the personality of the individual with whom he is talking. When someone else comes in, he is conscious of two personalities and so on up to eight or ten. Then he becomes conscious of the majority crowd psychology with its attendant one or two minorities, if any. It isn't that he just wants to go along with his visitor or the group, as the Welsh and Irish sometimes do; he is willing to stand out against them, but he will do it with the utmost tact, with the most delicate shade of regret. Like the skilled executioner in the fable, he will decapitate you so gently that you never notice it until you sneeze.

It is astonishing in how many ways he resembles President Roosevelt. Like that man, he is an actor born to the stage. He hates to contradict you to your face unless it is a matter of business, when he can be extremely hard-boiled. He is self-conscious every second; it is doubtful whether he relaxes in abandonment even when he is sound asleep. The character he presents to the world is a synthetic one carefully created, though on a natural foundation. He knows very well that tousled hair is a good accompaniment to a breezy, dynamic entrepreneur. He once remarked that "it's an asset in my business to look like an Indiana farmer" and he chuckles as he admits that his family and secretary have to work hard on him to get him to buy a new suit. When Commonwealth & Southern sold out to the T. V. A. and he got a big check from David Lilienthal he said just the right thing in the presence of the newsreel cameras: "Dave, this is a lot of money for a couple of Indiana farm boys to be throwing around." This is not to say that if he felt he could afford it he would go around constantly in a morning coat and striped trousers, but only that he is smart enough to capitalize on his normal tendencies.

He is a wisecracker, an expert practitioner of that art which is so completely American that other nations cannot even understand it, to say nothing of imitation. In the motion-picture film he made for Information Please, at one point Clifton Fadiman remarked, "Mr. Willkie, you have quite a career behind you." Willkie flashed back, "I don't like that word, 'behind.' " At the Philadelphia Convention, just after the nomination, when asked whether he would accept an invitation to the White House, he said: "Certainly, one should always be kind to his predecessor." On another occasion the query was made whether he would talk to the President, and he retorted, "Every time I have called on the President heretofore he has done all the talking." These are not very good wisecracks, but they were made impromptu while the cameras were turning, a situation under which most public men are so stampeded they can hardly even read from a manuscript.

Willkie's career as a whole is a startling series of last-minute shifts. When you add him up he looks as though he kept wanting to be and do something else, but then decided at the eleventh hour to be "sensible." In college he was the leader of the antifraternity group but changed his mind eventually and joined one of the best fraternities at Indiana University. During his 10 years in Akron he was on the unpopular side of some issues but at the end of that time he left for New York to enter the service of a great public-utility corporation. He was a Democrat, and a hard-working organization Democrat, too, until about the last possible moment at which he could have shifted and still have any chance of becoming the Republican Presidential nominee in 1940. The psychologists could certainly make something of the life of a man who repeatedly shifts just before the clock strikes, and in a direction which he himself, on some occasions at least, must have considered the less desirable.

The facts of Mr. Willkie's life have now been told often enough in public to need only a brief recapitulation here. He was born February 18, 1892, in Elwood, Ind., a typical small middle western city. His grandparents had come from Germany, bringing his father with them, and Mr. Willkie himself says they did so to breathe the free air of America. There is no record, however, that the son, Wendell's father, held any political views that one would associate with such an emigré, after settling down in Indiana. He was a lawyer and at one time superintendent of schools, where he earned the nickname of "Hell Fire Willkie." Wendell's mother had been a school teacher, and there is no doubt that the home was one of lively intellectual interests. Wendell was one of six children, with three brothers and two sisters. When he was a small boy the Willkies believed they were on the road to riches—natural gas had been discovered at Elwood (no jokes, please!) and the town was enjoying a boom. Willkie, Sr., speculated in real estate and made handsome paper profits until the natural-gas supply began to dwindle, the boom collapsed, and the paper profits were followed by heavy debts.

Wendell was a high-spirited, normally mischievous boy. Elwood still tells stories of his Hallowe'en pranks, one of which, it is said, consisted of tipping over an outhouse with the violently protesting owner inside. There is a story in circulation that he was expelled from high school not once but twice, but Mr. C. C. Hillis, the Elwood principal, tells us this is not true. "There is no record here," he writes, "that Mr. Willkie was expelled from the high school. He probably was suspended a few days for the infraction of some school rule."

After being graduated from the Elwood high school he went to the University of Indiana at Bloomington where for 3 years he was a leader of the antifraternity crowd. This is a matter of some significance; in nearly every middle western university there is constant guerilla warfare between fraternity and nonfraternity men. The former look down upon the "barbs"—barbarians—as uncouth roughnecks who don't know social usage and come from inferior homes. The barbs reciprocate by considering the fraternity men as namby-pamby rich men's sons. When Willkie in his fourth year suddenly went over to the enemy by joining one of the leading fraternities on the campus, the shock to his barb friends must have been severe.

During his vacations, like many other college students, Wendell Willkie worked at odd jobs in various parts of the country. He was a puddler in a steel mill, a harvast hand in Dakota, a short-order cook. In Mr. Willkie's own mind these college-vacation experiences seem to be a little confused, and he now talks as though he thought he had been a poor boy who worked his way up by these various occupations to the position he now holds. Thus in the movie short for Information Please he recited the history of Puddler Jim Davis, of Pennsylvania and added that he had done the same work himself. Although he did not misstate a single fact, undoubtedly most of the people who saw the film got the impression that they were seeing a chapter in a typical American story, From Breaker Boy to White House. "I understand you people and your problems," he told an Iowa crowd. "Like you, I have come up the hard way." But in fact, his way was about as hard as that of Franklin D. Roosevelt. It consisted in being a member of a family which sent all six of its children through college and helped to launch them in life.

Without any definite idea as to what he wanted, young Wendell was attracted toward teaching. After being graduated from Indiana University in 1913, he got a job in the high school at Coffeyville, Kans., where he taught history, debating, track, and basketball. He has a real love of history, and probably knows more about it than any other public-utility official in the United States. Teaching did not prove as attractive as he had expected, and the following year saw him in Puerto Rico as laboratory assistant in the Fajardo Sugar Co. By the end of the year he had decided that his father's profession, the law, looked pretty good. He went back to Indiana for an LL. D. degree and joined his father's law firm in Elwood.

On the day the war broke out he enlisted in the Infantry and he sailed to France in the middle of January 1918. Just before sailing he had married Miss Edith Wilk, an Indiana small-town librarian. In France he seems to have acquitted himself creditably; he is best remembered as having volunteered his services to defend a number of soldiers who had got into trouble through being A. W. O. L., or for other fairly minor infractions of Army discipline. He came back a captain in 1919 and took the first job he could get, as a member of the law staff of the Firestone Tire Co. in Akron. After a few months of this, he had a chance to become a member of a law firm in the same city, exchanging an assured salary for a complete gamble. His wife's advice to him is often quoted: "Go ahead, take it; never mind the money; get your name on the letterhead."

For the next 8 years Wendell had his name on a letterhead. He became famous in Akron for two violent departures from the middle-western norm. He didn't own an automobile, and he didn't play golf. His only diversion was to sit in a rocking chair on the country-club porch and make fun of his fellow members of the middle class as they staggered in, purple and perspiring, from the eighteenth green. At this time Willkie was a practicing Democrat and it is said that he was active in civil-liberties cases and spoke up for the underdog enough to get the nickname of the Akron Bill Borah. (This may have been influenced also by his shaggy locks, resembling those of the late Idaho statesman.) He was simultaneously, however, building up a nice practice as a public-utilities lawyer, a logical transfer from his work for the Firestone Co. The head of the law firm by whom he was employed, Mather & Nesbitt, was a State senator and attorney for Ohio Edison. Thus nearly at the beginning of his career, the most important part of Mr. Willkie's work came to be tasks like arranging for renewals of utility franchises. He soon attracted the attention of important utility executives such as Mr. B. C. Cobb, of Penn-Ohio and Commonwealth Power. As early as 1926 Mr. Cobb is supposed to have written the famous letter: "Don't let that young man get away from us."

After his apprenticeship as a utility lobbyist before local regulatory bodies, Mr. Willkie moved to the national scene about 1927–28. At that time, the famous Walsh resolution—sponsored by Senator Walsh, of Montana—was before Congress. Leading eventually to the Federal Trade Commission's investigation of the utility industry, it was bitterly opposed by utility spokesmen. One of the two leaders of the lobby established in Washington was Mr. Weadock, Mr. Willkie's superior back in Ohio and later chief counsel to the Commonwealth & Southern. Mr. Willkie was frequently observed in Mr. Weadock's company at congressional hearings and in Washington hotels. When a utility brief condemning the Walsh resolution was presented to the Senate, one of the signatory firms was Mather, Nesbitt & Willkie.

In 1929, the year of the crash, Mr. Willkie was invited to go to New York and set up the law firm of Weadock and Willkie, general counsel for the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation. If the firm had any other clients, nobody ever heard of them. From that day on, Willkie was a C. and S. man; when a president was needed in January 1933, he was a logical choice. The story of what he did for C. & S. during the 11 years from 1929 to 1940 is discussed elsewhere in this supplement.

The point to make about Willkie himself is that he is not a businessman as that phrase is commonly understood. He is not a capitalist; his family traditions are all of professional activity for modest fees and he has accumulated no fortune of his own, though he has earned large salaries. He is not an industrialist; whatever he knows about plant operation has been picked up in his spare time in the past few years. His only formal and extensive contact with the business world has centered in the public-utilities section, which has one of the worst records for shady practice in American history. Not a production man or a salesman, Willkie's essential relationship, to the segment of business he knows best, has been that of a fixer and front man. These are admittedly smear words, but it is hard to think of more respectable synonyms.

In the utility and railroad industries most conspicuously, the operating men who actually make the wheels go 'round in the various revenue-producing divisions of the business rarely get to be boss. The boss is expected to be a public-relations man, especially in regard to the various State and Federal regulatory bodies in these political industries.

This distinction cuts still deeper into the phenomenon Willkie and helps explain his current attitude toward his utility background. For Mr. Willkie has been in Wall Street but not of it (which is perhaps why a number of his more conventional associates have regarded him with suspicion as an intellectual, a reader of books, a writer, a bohemian, even an advanced liberal). Partly because of the liberal background in which he grew up, his crashing of the gate has apparently put him on the defensive. Certainly it helps explain his constant cries of persecution; his glorying in having "come up the hard way"; his anxious search for support from liberals and radicals; his apparent preference, before he became a candidate, for literary society over bankers' club society; all of which conflict with his pride in his recent election to the board of J. P. Morgan's bank for bankers—the First National of New York—which is so exclusive that it is not even a club for run-of-the-mine millionaires. Willkie's story is not that of an Edison or a Ford; he never had to meet a pay roll. He was a condottiere, a mouthpiece, who had a reputation as a public speaker and a liberal and who was hired by the local utility in Akron to talk for it. Since he was the front man for the entire Commonwealth & Southern system, it is fair to hold him responsible for the misdeeds of his subordinates throughout that system. Accepting just such responsibility is what he was paid for.

MR. WILLKIE IN BUSINESS

Mr. Willkie is running for President as a businessman. It therefore becomes important to examine his business career both in its facts and its philosophy, especially to see whether he had any share in financial practices which he later condemned.

Speaker BANKHEAD charged that the Republican Party had permitted conditions to exist which led to the market crash of 1929. Mr. Willkie answered (according to James C. Hagerty's story in the New York Times of July 16):

"I am very proud that I had absolutely nothing to do with that phase of American economic life. * * * I found myself in complete accord with Speaker BANKHEAD in his condemnation of the speculative orgies of the 1920's. I agreed with him in his strictures about the unloading on the public during the same period of common stocks beyond their true value. I have always thought that such speculation was to be condemned whether it was in the securities of utility companies, vending-machine companies, or took the form of gambling in foreign exchanges, such as German marks."

The last two items are intended to toss the ball back to Roosevelt, making out the country squire in the White House to be a veritable wolf of Wall Street, a latter-day Jim Fisk. Of course, the answer suggests itself: in both these ventures, Mr. Roosevelt lost his own money. This is more than can be said for the promoters of the venture which cost the public so dear after Mr. Willkie was hired to represent it.

But the whole of Mr. Willkie's statement is worth careful study. Is it true that he had "absolutely nothing to do with that phase of American life"? The facts do not support him. Indeed, his statement is so thoroughly in conflict with the record that no cold-blooded liar is likely to have made it. Only a man constantly intoxicating and reintoxicating himself with his own words could have been so imprudent.

Here is the record. Early in 1929, when even the elevator boys were getting nervous about the bull market, the Morgans rushed into it. In January they announced that they were entering the utility field, and that they would form the United Corporation as a super holding company for the purpose of buying up control of utility holding companies throughout the East. From January until May the market bubbled and boiled while the Morgans quietly shopped for properties. Finally, on May 9, the contents of United's portfolio were disclosed. The asset value of its common stock was $37⅜. Two days later, as the public rushed to get in on this good thing, the orgy carried United common up to an all-time market high of $73⅛. During the next 2 months the utility market continued to boom. Meanwhile, the asset value of United common increased from $37⅜ to over $61½ as it continued to acquire properties. But, in the face of the continued utility boom and its own growth, United common began to slip—not much, but a little. Why? Because at this peak J. P. Morgan & Co. unloaded over 171,000 shares of United common on the public. A study in the Columbia Law Review estimates that by June 1933, when United was kicking around in the market for $12 a share, the combined Morgan and Drexel profit, excluding the private profits of individual partners, was more than $19,000,000.[1] United today is an empty shell, admittedly unable to dispose of its holding-company stocks.

These, then, were the methods by which Morgan & Co. took the public for a ride in the month of May 1929. During that same month United got together with one of its friends—the American Superpower Co.—which had been formed for a similar purpose by the utility banking house of Bonbright, always closely associated with Morgan. One of the first products of this marriage was the fantastic creation known as Commonwealth & Southern.

On May 23, Commonwealth & Southern was merged out of three holding companies—the Commonwealth Power Co. and Penn-Ohio Edison Co. in the North and Southeastern Power & Light Co. in the South. American Superpower and Bonbright put up $15,000,000 in cash. United put up $10,000,000, which it borrowed from Morgan's. United Gas Improvement, another member of the United family, put up $3,000,000. Altogether, $45,000,000 was raised by the insiders on the basis of $19 a share for Commonwealth & Southern common. Once in the driver's seat of the corporation to be, the promoters appointed a committee which proceeded to negotiate privately with shareholders of the three underlying holding companies for the purpose of inducing them to exchange their stock for Commonwealth & Southern common. The valuation set by the promoters upon Commonwealth & Southern in these exchanges ranged from $24 a share (in exchange for Commonwealth Power) to $24.41 (in exchange for Southeastern), netting the promoters a handsome inventory profit straightaway.

On June 5, 1929, Commonwealth & Southern common was listed on the New York Curb. From the first day trading in it was very heavy. By June 14 trading reached its peak—on that day no less than 1,032,400 shares were moved. This remarkable activity induced many recalcitrant investors in the 3 underlying holding companies to turn in their securities for stock in the new one. It also permitted the promoters and their friends to let the public in on this very good thing. Meanwhile United went right on, spawning Niagara Hudson and Columbia Gas & Electric. But by October it was all over. In that fatal month Commonwealth & Southern hit both its all-time high and its predepression low. The high was $24¾—barely above the price for which the three member companies had turned in their securities. The low was $10. This, Mr. Willkie can hardly deny, was speculation with a vengeance, and it was certainly "unloading of common stocks on the public beyond their true value."

At how much above their true value? Here is the record for its three original constituents, plus a fourth, Allied Power & Light—as taken by the Federal Trade Commission from the records of Commonwealth & Southern:

Ledger value of securities owned as shown by—

	Books of the merged holding companies	C. & S. books	Appreciation
Allied Power & Light	$3, 573, 997. 65	$21, 583, 038. 35	$18, 009, 040. 70
Penn-Ohio Edison	47, 301, 400. 22	107, 341, 619. 23	60, 040, 219. 01
Commonwealth Power Co	89, 742, 899. 05	372, 234, 258. 32	282, 291, 259. 27
Southeastern Power & Light	200, 277, 963. 35	370, 942, 916. 29	170, 664, 952. 92

These write-ups from the none too conservative self-valuation of these properties—in which the Federal Trade Commission later found prior write-ups—were entirely arbitrary. The promoters, made wise by hindsight, may plead that they expected earnings to replace all this water with values; to which the answer might just as well be that they could have written these companies up by a round billion instead of just half a billion if they had had more confidence.

There are two frauds against the public involved in utility write-ups. The first is the obvious one of overvaluing securities for sale to a gullible public. The second is that the valuation of a utility is the base on which its rates are set (so that it may earn a "fair" return on its "investment"). Clearly, if its value is written up, its rates will be inflated. Mr. Willkie's championing of the consumer, of which more under T. V. A., doesn't do so well alongside his refusal to admit that his companies in T. V. A. country were overhauled during the dispute.

The apocryphal story of Mr. Willkie, as told by Russell Davenport in Fortune, has it that Mr. Willkie had no responsibility for this fraud, that he did not come into the picture until he was made president in 1933, whereupon he "kicked the bankers off the board."

By any realistic standard of power exercised in the corporate world, it must be conceded that a corporation head generally regards his lawyer as his second in command, if not as his actual peer. That was shown this summer when Commonwealth & Southern had to pick a new president after Mr. Willkie's resignation. The job went to Justin R. Whiting, of Mr. Willkie's former law firm, which has continued to represent Commonwealth & Southern in legal matters. There can be no denying the responsibility which corporate counsel exercises in the board room. No prudent management will ever move without advice of counsel. When Hopson was indicted, the senior partners of Travis, Brownback & Paxon—Associated's general counsel—were bagged in the same net without the bar association or even any reputable lawyers protesting. Thus, by legal precedent, realistic admission and the way Commonwealth & Southern picked up a successor this summer, we are justified in regarding a corporation general counsel as a responsible, if not ranking, part of its management.

So, in the spring and summer of 1929, Mr. Willkie, giving the lie to the noble defiance of evil speculation expressed by Candidate Willkie in 1940, saw nothing wrong with what the bankers were doing with Commonwealth & Southern. When the chance came to become an insider himself, he acted as though Commonwealth & Southern were the best fraternity on the campus.

What kind of a capital structure did Willkie ride into? Commonwealth & Southern valued its assets at $1,133,700,000 (including the write-ups). The capital structure consisted of a mass of bonds, subsidiary companies' bonds, subsidiary companies' preferred stocks, its own preferred stock, common stock (at $24) and options on more stock at $30 (which it never reached). Of the common stock at $24, there were no less than 33,000,000 shares. The optimists who held this through October may have hoped that it would ride past $50—just a modest doubling in value. At $24, these 33,000,000 shares had a total market value of nearly $800,000,000. To have gone to $50, the boom would have had to last long enough for the market to estimate that Commonwealth & Southern would be able to earn, past all its fixed charges, enough profits to warrant a valuation of $1,500,000,000. This sounds preposterous—today. But the original structure contained over 17,000,000 options held by people who hoped to exercise them to get still more stock at $30.

Not much has to be known about finance to realize that 33,000,000 shares, onto which are tacked 17,000,000 options, are a fabulous burden for any sound corporation to hope to carry. No responsible securities analyst can be found to endorse such a structure—even when it does not come after a flock of senior securities. Mr. Willkie, as general counsel and president, has followed this stock down from 24½ to 1 and a fraction (it was down to 2 when he became president of Commonwealth & Southern in 1933, before the New Deal came in) without ever conceding the point. It is the Government, he maintains, which has destroyed confidence in the market for utility holding-company common stocks (which Willkie usually identifies with the common stocks of utility operating companies, like Commonwealth Edison of Illinois, which enjoy very favorable markets).

In fact, this record shows that Mr. Willkie's subsequent talk about the New Deal's having made new utility investment impossible is so much eyewash. By 1933 his corporation had no funds free after its fixed charges to invest in new expansion; and no one could be found to buy more holding-company securities. The continued expansion of the industry, to a point at which electrical consumption is something like 40 percent above 1929, has occurred in spite of the obstacle to new financing provided by such relics of 1929 as Commonwealth & Southern.

Nor is this all. There is the matter of $150,000,000 of preferred stock issued shortly after the corporation was formed. This stock is supposed to pay a $6 dividend, which accumulates when unpaid. Soon after Commonwealth & Southern stopped paying common dividends, it stopped paying preferred dividends too (it has since resumed payment at the rate of $3 a year). As of July 1940 the corporation owed its preferred stockholders back dividends of $16.50 a share, equal to $24,800,000. But its 33,000,000 shares of common (the options are now so much wallpaper) have a market value of only some $40,000,000 and this is entitled to its share of the cake only after the preferred's back dividends have been paid. The fact is that this preferred stockholders' claim overshadows the claim to earnings of the common, which loses more and more of its value with each quarter's accumulation of unpaid preferred dividends. Thus we have the spectacle of Mr. Willkie offering to balance our Federal finances after he has run his own company these many years by deficit financing on his preferred stockholders' money; and offering to bail out the 130,000,000 owners of the Federal Government after he has failed to keep half of his 33,000,000 shares of controlling common stock above water.

How did Mr. Willkie get to be president of Commonwealth & Southern in 1932? The official theory is that he just rose by sheer merit, the way a cork bobs to the surface when released. Did he?

During the Coolidge and Hoover administrations, the Alabama Power Co., which afterward became incorporated into the Commonwealth & Southern, was making an enormous profit by buying power from Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals and reselling it. Just how large that profit was it is rather hard to say. The Alabama Power Co. had the only transmission lines near Wilson Dam and could drive a hard bargain with some of its own customers. It bought power from the Government at 2 mills—not 2 cents, but 2 mills—per kilowatt-hour. Ninety percent of its power was sold at wholesale to big customers, half of it to its sister companies—companies in the group which was soon to become the Commonwealth & Southern system. This power was sold at an average of 6½ mills. To be sure, the cost of transmission was added, but since this was wholesale delivery, it could not have been very much. It is safe to assume that the profit on Government power sold in the wholesale end of the business was at least $500,000 a year.

Alabama Power also sold a small fraction of its power to residential consumers and small businesses. Some of this power came from other sources than Wilson Dam, but it is unlikely that it cost very much more. Alabama sold its power to residential consumers at an average price of 6.8 cents—not mills, cents. Of course, the cost of distribution entered in here, and on residential consumption it is far more important than production cost. The New York State Power Authority has made careful studies based on field conditions, and from those studies it would appear that for an average consumption of 465 kilowatt-hours per consumer per year—which was about correct for that area at that time—3¼ cents would be entirely reasonable for distribution. Add 2 mills for the cost of Government power and you get an overcharge of 3.3 cents per kilowatt-hour per consumer. On the amount of residential energy sold, this extra gravy was about $1,000,000 a year. Add in the profit on the power sold wholesale and you get $1,500,000 a year. No wonder Mr. Willkie doesn't like the T. V. A. It broke up one of the sweetest rackets you ever heard of. In the 4 years, 1926–29, inclusive, the average dividend on the Alabama Power Co. common and preferred stock combined per year was $3,700,000.

The president of Commonwealth & Southern at this time was a rock-ribbed Republican and an excellent contact man with a Republican administration. But in 1932 the Democrats came into power. Commonwealth & Southern wanted to continue its profitable arrangement and took what seemed a sensible course. It picked out from its law firm the one man who was known to be a Democrat and associated in active work with Tammany in New York City. If he couldn't keep a profitable arrangement in force, who could?

There remains the brief story of the reforms instituted or approved by Mr. Willkie after he became president of Commonwealth & Southern. Two of its policies give him ground for legitimate pride. One is that his utility system is relatively free of intermediate holding companies, usually devices to mislead the unwary investor. The other is that the Commonwealth & Southern's service and construction companies—in other systems the source of secret profits to a few insiders—have been "mutualized." That is, whatever book profit they may show is annually returned to the system's operating units in proportion to their respective earnings. These two policies were initiated while Mr. Willkie was still counsel to the system; as president, he has continued and developed them.

One of his first acts as president was to readjust the capitalization of Commonwealth & Southern to the realities of the depression by writing off $500,000,000 of water. But there was nothing noble about this; the Federal Trade Commission was probing, and, back in 1931, the Electric Bond and Share management, which has never pretended to be saving the country, had taken a $441,000,000 write-off. Then there is the story of how he made a virtue of necessity by cutting his rates and making it pay. But that belongs in the chapter on Mr. Willkie's relations with T. V. A.

The general record shows that the Morgan-Bonbright clique—which led the defense of the utilities against the investigations started under Hoover; which brought Mr. Willkie to New York in 1929 as a key figure in the original Commonwealth & Southern management, and which in 1933 made him president of the corporation—had by that time effectively ruined the market for utility holding-company securities, new and old. The record shows that this same clique did a great deal by its greedy policies to bring about the drive for public regulation and the public development of water power. And finally the record shows that Mr. Willkie, far from having had absolutely nothing to do with "that phase of American life" was one of those responsible for the speculative orgy. It was that orgy which transformed him from a cracker-barrel Indiana liberal into a Wall Street insider as slick as they come.

WILLKIE AND THE T. V. A.

Up to now, Wendell Willkie is best known for his long and bitter fight with the T. V. A. on behalf of Commonwealth & Southern. What revelations about his character are to be drawn from this story? What are the facts about the battle itself?

Four days after Mr. Roosevelt had sent the T. V. A. bill to Congress, and while congressional hearings were in progress, Mr. Willkie as president of the Commonwealth & Southern informed his stockholders that "if this bill passes, this $400,000,000 worth of securities (Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries) will eventually be destroyed." This was the signal for a propaganda campaign not differing greatly from other utility-company exploits that congressional investigating committees have made famous. Widow-and-orphan letters poured in on the White House and Congress. Newspapers in the Tennessee Valley blossomed with full-page advertisements. Ostensibly these advertisements were paid for by local utility-operating companies, but the editor of one Mississippi weekly neglected to trim the mat that had been sent him, and the advertisement carried the note: "Insert name of our local power company here."

After the T. V. A. was established its directors—far from declaring war on the private companies—took an extremely conciliatory attitude. They had jurisdiction over Muscle Shoals, the current from which was essential to Alabama Power, and they also had a mandate to develop Muscle Shoals to its full potential capacity. They offered to continue to provide current for Alabama Power if the company would sell them certain of its transmission lines to make possible an experimental "yardstick" area. This would have amounted to a division of territories, a mutual hands-off policy, which is precisely what Mr. Willkie afterward clamored for. With seeming sincerity, the T. V. A.'s offer was accepted.

Before the arrangement could be put into effect, however, the so-called Ashwander case was brought. This case is one of two episodes—the other was the later 19-company suit—that fixed the attitude of two of the three T. V. A. directors and the new dealers generally toward Mr. Willkie, convincing them it was not safe, or even possible, to have ordinary business dealings with him. The case bears directly on his fitness for the Presidency.

Ostensibly, the Ashwander case was brought by preferred-stock holders of Alabama Power to prevent their own company from carrying out its arrangement with T. V. A. Alabama Power was the defendant. As head of the parent company, Commonwealth & Southern, Mr. Willkie had approved the T. V. A.-Alabama Power agreement; presumably, therefore, he wished to carry it out in good faith and was prepared to oppose the preferred-stock holders' lawsuit. Mr. Willkie declared publicly: "The Alabama Power Co. has no connection, direct or indirect, with pending litigation against the T. V. A." Counsel for the stockholders said that the suit was being paid for by 25-cent contributions.

The secret ins-and-outs of the Ashwander case have never become public. As far as is known, no holograph letters showing Mr. Willkie's exact role are in existence. But, in the course of the litigation, it was revealed that the law firm conducting the case, instead of being paid by the two-bit pieces of humble stockholders, had received a $50,000 fee from the Edison Electric Institute, trade association of the utility industry. Mr. Willkie was a director of the Edison Electric Institute. You are compelled to assume either that it acted in a matter vitally concerning him without his knowledge, or else that he was playing a game with T. V. A.

Sometime in 1935–36, the Roosevelt administration made a second attempt to deal with Mr. Willkie. Mr. Roosevelt and his advisers were eager to arrange for a pooling agreement, or power grid, among the utilities serving the Southeast. Such an agreement held enormous possibilities both for national defense and for peacetime economic betterment. Mr. Willkie was frequently invited to the White House and made it his business to drop in still more often. A report spread that he had become the President's adviser on power questions; it was even suggested that he would act as negotiator between the New Deal and the whole utility industry, then beginning its vast constitutional attack on the holding-company law.

In the midst of this relatively amicable relationship between new dealers and Mr. Willkie, the so-called nineteen-company suit was abruptly brought against the T. V. A. The Ashwander case had attacked the T. V. A. only indirectly; the intent of the nineteen-company suit was to drive it from existence. The 19 companies bringing the suit were the utilities in the T. V. A. area, and chief among them were the subsidiaries of Mr. Willkie's Commonwealth & Southern. This ended, permanently, the effort of the administration and the T. V. A. to have a relationship with Mr. Willkie.

When the T. V. A.'s new dams were complete, it began negotiations with Tennessee Valley cities and power districts for the sale of current. The Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries, especially the Tennessee Electric Power—Tepco—fought these negotiations with courthouse-gang wiles. In the valley's chief cities Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries took an active, scarcely disguised part in local elections where municipal ownership was at issue. The utilities won in Birmingham but lost in Chattanooga and Knoxville.

What happened in Chattanooga is one of the ugliest parts of the Willkie-T. V. A. record. In that city George Fort Milton, editor of the Chattanooga News, had long been an advocate of publicly owned power. A year after the T. V. A. was started, he opened a campaign for cheap municipal electricity. He was fought furiously by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., a Willkie-Commonwealth & Southern subsidiary. The company contributed $20,000 to a Citizens' and Taxpayers' League, which suddenly appeared to oppose Milton. In order to permit employees to vote in the local election, the Willkie company arranged to have two pieces of real estate transferred to more than a hundred of them. On election day, whisky, admittedly bought by the power interests, flowed freely near the polls. But Milton's campaign was effective; the people voted for municipal power by 3 to 1.

Thereupon the Willkie company decided to get Milton by whatever means it could. A new paper appeared in Chattanooga to compete with the News. It was the Chattanooga Free Press, previously a free semiweekly "throw-away sheet," distributed to advertise a chain of groceries. The Willkie company took its advertising out of the News and poured it into the Free Press and the pro-utility Chattanooga Times, owned by the New York Times. In 3 years the two friendly papers got more than $90,000 in advertising; the Milton paper got only $240. In the Free Press an abnormally high rate was paid, two and a half times as high as that charged other comparable advertisers. The Tennessee Railroad and Public Utilities Commission described this as "a method whereby the newspaper was enabled to receive money from the power company." The Free Press was also allowed to become delinquent on its light bill to the tune of thousands of dollars. The bill was never paid until Senator NORRIS suggested in the United States Senate that an investigation might be made of utility propaganda against public power. With frantic haste, the Free Press then paid its bill. It got a 5-percent discount from the Willkie company for prompt payment—more than a year late. Try to get that discount on your household bill under the same circumstances, and see what happens to you.

Partly because of this deliberate discrimination by the Willkie company, and partly for other reasons, the Chattanooga News was forced to suspend publication. But the utilities were not to have everything their own way in Chattanooga. Mr. Milton promptly started a new paper, the Evening Tribune, to carry on the fight, and it is fighting still, against odds but with no little success.

Another stiff battle occurred between T. V. A. and Commonwealth & Southern over rural power lines. Before the advent of T. V. A. farmers had not only had high rates, but had been charged almost prohibitive installation costs. The T. V. A. had been especially commissioned to bring electricity to farm homes and encourage the formation of rural power cooperatives. Out of nowhere, salesmen from the Commonwealth & Southern companies appeared on the country back roads, followed by construction crews. What amounted to spite power lines criss-crossed territory where farmers had shown a disposition to buy from T. V. A. In many cases, even after cities and rural districts had voted to accept T. V. A. contracts, the contest did not end. The utilities, or their sympathizers, took to the local courts, and injunctions, or the threat of them, delayed action for months and years.

A good illustration of what was done is the action of the Willkie-Georgia Power Co. At the beginning of 1935, the farmers in northeast Georgia had been trying vainly for years to get electric power. The company either refused service or demanded impossible terms. Thereupon the farmers planned to set up their own cooperative rural distributing lines.

The Georgia Power Co. deliberately sabotaged this effort. According to a sworn statement in the court case of the T. V. A. v. The Tennessee Electric Power Co., agents of the Willkie concern swarmed through the region making false and misleading statements about the nature of the cooperative undertaking and tried to frighten the farmers from joining. When work was begun on the lines of the cooperatives, the Georgia Power Co. sent big crews of workmen into the area and began to build "spite lines" on an immense and systematic scale. Extremely high poles were set at road intersections immediately in front of lines that were being constructed for the cooperative. Wires were strung between the utility company's poles in an effort to block construction. At the same time, injunction proceedings were sought in the courts. When these failed, according to the testimony of T. R. Hunnicutt, a divisional manager of the T. V. A.:

"* * * the Georgia Power Co. proceeded to construct short, disjointed lines in many portions of the area which the cooperatives proposed to serve, in many cases setting poles and even stringing service wires to residences, without the consent and against the orders of the owners of the property. * * * These tactics were obviously designed to take advantage of the policy of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Rural Electrification Administration to avoid financing lines which duplicate existing lines of the private power companies."

What some of the residents of the locality thought of these proceedings is shown by a news item in the Chattanooga News:

"With a loaded .22 caliber rifle in her hand Mrs. A. M. Tate faced a group of Georgia Power Co. linemen in her front yard one day last week.

" 'Come down out of that tree,' she called. 'No one gave you permission to cut those limbs off.'

"She waved her gun and a lineman scurried down the trunk. Another who had been standing at the foot of the big hickory hopped over the fence out of the yard."

That was in Catoosa, Ga. In the same place, farmers burned 2 miles of spite lines put up by the power company. When the company advertised a reward for the arrest of the culprits a spokesman for the farmers said: "We are not out to do anything violent. We'll let the line stay if it doesn't interfere with our T. V. A. lines. But if it is against the law to parallel our lines with that one, if it's put in there just to defeat us, we'll take it down. It's on our property, and it has no right to be there.

"We know we are right, and we are not afraid of going to the chain gang, to the penitentiary, or anywhere else."

At times the Willkie companies, when they learned that a cooperative line was about to be built, rushed in crews to work day and night constructing parallel lines. In Wilson County, Tenn., in 1936, "* * * the power company's workmen built a line right along and beside [the cooperative's], some of the poles touching, and the next day strung wires on their poles. After this wire was strung the workmen came * * * and energized the line, although they did not at that time and have not until this day a single customer.

In August of 1936 the Tennessee Electric Power Co. brought a crew of men into the town of Gladeville and set four or five poles in each direction—north, south, east, and west; at this time the Tepco did not have a source of power within a distance of 12 miles from Gladeville."

At other times representatives of the Tepco used guile instead of force. Here is a final affidavit sworn to by John Buckner, of Franklin County:

"About 2 weeks ago, on or about November 5, 1935, two men who represented themselves as being employees of the Tennessee Power Co. and who are known to be such by my wife, came to my house and asked me and my wife to sign to take electricity from the Tennessee Power Co. I told them that I had already signed an agreement with the T. V. A. to take their power, but these two men told me that the Tennessee Power Co. had bought out the T. V. A. and that the T. V. A. was not now going to run their lines through Franklin County. They also told me that they would wire my house free of charge if I would sign their contract. Upon this representation of the men who represented the Tennessee Power Co. I signed their contract for current."

Throughout all this period, Mr. Willkie carried on a propaganda war against the T. V. A. His most substantial claim in his own defense was that he, a private-utility operator, had reduced rates—although not as far as the T. V. A.—and increased power consumption. There is this much truth in the claim that, at the time it was bought out by T. V. A. Tepco's rates were lower, and its per capita sales higher, than any other private utility in the country. Tennessee Valley Authority advocates, of course, insist that Tepco's policies were less the consequence of Mr. Willkie's industrial statesmanship than of T. V. A.'s yardstick competition.

Before T. V. A. was created the Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries had shown an exceedingly moderate interest in reducing their charges. However, as has been said, Mr. Willkie did not become the Commonwealth & Southern president until 1933. He can perhaps claim that, if he had been, he would have pursued other policies. But after the Commonwealth & Southern companies made their initial cuts to ward off T. V. A.'s then potential competition Mr. Willkie was ready to call quits. In the Chattanooga News, May 22, 1936, he declared: "Years prior to the existence of the T. V. A. the Southern companies began a progressive reduction of their rates. But further rate reductions will be difficult to achieve because the threat of T. V. A. compels the companies to pay high interest rates on their capital requirements." Yet it is a fact of record that since then, under T. V. A. pressure, the three chief utilities of the area have reduced rates by a further 30 percent and increased sales by nearly 40 percent.

One solid fact to remember is that Mr. Willkie reduced the rates of the Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries that are in direct competition with T. V. A. sooner and farther than the others. A second fact is that his companies in the South are making money at the new low rates, which suggests that there must have been something funny about the earlier ones.

In 1933, the average rate throughout the United States per kilowatt-hour was 5.49 cents. Four years later it had gone down only 1.1 cents to 4.39 cents. The rate of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., where T. V. A. is a strong factor, went down from 5.77 to 2.86. The Georgia Power Co. went down from 5.16 to 3.04 and the Alabama Power Co. from 4.62 to 2.97. The T. V. A. rate did not exist in 1933, but in 1937 it was 2 cents.

The increase in consumption of electricity over that same period is interesting. In those 4 years the United States average went up from 595 kilowatt-hours per year to 793. The Tennessee Electric Power Co. more than doubled, from 612 to 1,353. The Georgia Power Co. went from 803 to 1,313 and the Alabama Power Co. from 793 to 1,289. The T. V. A., which was not selling in 1933, by 1937 had the highest average consumption of all, 1,465.

Mr. Willkie's wisecrack, that he and Mr. Roosevelt both took office about the same time, that the Government got deeper and deeper into the red while he had put C. & S. on its feet, could hardly be a more complete misstatement of the facts. The record shows that it was T. V. A. competition which forced down the rates of the private companies in the same area and that forcing down the rates produced a tremendous expansion of current consumed. It was Mr. Roosevelt who forced Mr. Willkie into sound business policies against Mr. Willkie's own judgment, and at first only in the territory of direct T. V. A. competition.

Meanwhile, Mr. Willkie's operating company in Michigan, Consumers' Power, was fighting the rural cooperatives that were formed to obtain the benefits of the Rural Electrification Administration. Joseph M. Donnelly, of the Michigan Public Utilities Commission, told part of the story over the radio in January 1938. He said:

"The aim of the Rural Electrification Administration is for the cooperatives to buy from the private utilities or municipal plants, the electric energy needed for retailing to their members. Michigan is one of the nine States in the Union where most of the private utilities have not as yet cooperated in rural development to the extent of offering electricity to the cooperatives at satisfactory rates. And the consequence has been that some of the funds allotted to these cooperatives that would have been available for line construction are being used for building generating plants."

The role of Consumers Power was even more specifically revealed in the special investigation of Republican State Senator Earl W. Munshaw. Senator Munshaw, as the Detroit Times of July 16, 1938, reported, was found to be receiving "legal fees" from Consumers Power at the very time that "the public utilities committee, of which he was a member, was busy pigeonholing and killing several utility-reform measures which had aroused the opposition of the Consumers Power Co." The Times reported further that one of the measures killed was "a bill affecting Consumers Power which would have aided the expansion of publicly owned rural electric cooperatives."

In April 1939 Mr. Willkie's war against the T. V. A. reached a temporary truce when, soon after the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of T. V. A., he agreed to sell the Tennessee Electric Power's properties. The truce cannot be considered a permanent peace, since recent political happenings show that neither of the two other Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries in the area, the Georgia and Alabama companies, is reconciled to the T. V. A. or the New Deal. The Tennessee company sale, perhaps more than anything else, established Mr. Willkie's present national reputation. While Mr. Willkie has stayed modestly silent, his friends have boasted that he out-traded Mr. Lilienthal, that he bested the Government, that the T. V. A.'s willingness to pay what it did proved the rightness of Mr. Willkie's position.

According to the record, however, the purchase negotiations were not at all a swift, smooth, Willkie triumph. Mr. Willkie repeatedly interrupted them; on several occasions he is supposed to have stamped from the room in undisguised anger. His asking price was more than $100,000,000. Mr. Lilienthal's first offer was $55,000,000, of which nearly $34,000,000 represented funds that municipalities and cooperatives had agreed to supply for the purchase of their local facilities. The price finally settled on between Mr. Willkie and Mr. Lilienthal was $79,600,000, which represented, if anything, a defeat for Mr. Willkie and a victory for the T. V. A.

MR. WILLKIE AND LABOR

The least-known part of Mr. Willkie's record is the relationship of his companies with organized labor. Some of the record of that relationship is set forth below.

What are Wendell L. Willkie's views on labor and its right to organize freely and bargain collectively? While Willkie the candidate has yet to be heard on this issue, except for a few words in his acceptance speech, Willkie the utility president has already answered it—over a period of 7 years, and in terms that seem fairly conclusive. That answer is the labor record of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, the billion-dollar utility chain which Mr. Willkie headed until he became the Republican nominee. It is a record that must be giving his publicity men a terrific headache, for it is unmistakably antilabor.

Significantly, a considerable part of the record is to be found in the files of the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee and the National Labor Relations Board, where Commonwealth & Southern, through its various subsidiaries, appears quite often. Their testimony reveals that the utility has been extremely versatile in the range of its antilabor activities: it has hired labor spies, bought tear gas, promoted company unions, coerced and intimidated union employees (one was apparently even poisoned) and, in other ways, manifested hostility to the self-organization of its employees. It is a record marked by bitter strife, including several strikes, and revealing flagrant and repeated violations of employees' rights.

Such items unquestionably represent a serious liability for candidate Willkie, no matter how many nice things he may have to say about labor between now and November. This was made clear by President R. J. Thomas at the recent United Auto Workers' convention in St. Louis, when he described Mr. Willkie as "a streamlined version of Herbert Hoover—slicker, more clever, and more charming, but underneath his synthetic build-up there is still the mind and outlook of a public-utilities manipulator and an enemy of labor." The auto workers in Michigan have helped the employees of Willkie's Consumers Power Co. fight a Willkie company union and win three strikes during the past 3 years. So Mr. Thomas is in a position to know whereof he speaks. President William Green, of the A. F. of L., finds Mr. Willkie's labor record satisfactory, but this is sharply disputed by the A. F. of L. in Alabama, where the N. L. R. B. ordered the Alabama Power Co. last December to disband a company union. President A. H. Liston, of the Montgomery Central Labor Union, reports that "Alabama Power has always fought unions," and adds, "I don't think labor has any use for Mr. Willkie."

The Willkie publicity build-up has stressed his liberalism and his devotion to civil liberties, but there is some rather disturbing evidence to the contrary. There is, of course, the extraordinary off-the-record speech that Mr. Willkie made in Washington, prior to his nomination, in which he spoke so glowingly of rule by the financial and industrial elite and so disparagingly of labor that many reporters present thought they were listening to a virtual endorsement of fascism. More specifically, however, there is the evidence of the La Follette investigation, in which 7 of the 10 Commonwealth subsidiaries turn up as clients of the notorious labor-spy agencies that specialize in the destruction of labor's rights and liberties.

In the period covered by the La Follette report, 1934–36, one finds that Willkie's Georgia Power Co. spent more than $31,000 on labor spies from Pinkerton's, which also serviced Alabama Power. Central Illinois Light was a customer of the Lake Erie Chemical Co., specialists in industrial warfare, purchasing nearly $500 worth of tear-gas guns and shells. The Corporation Auxiliary Co.—the largest espionage agency devoted solely to industrial work and a kind of holding company itself—numbered among its clients three Willkie companies: Consumers Power of Michigan, Ohio Edison, and Pennsylvania Power. Southern Indiana Gas & Electric did business with the Railway Audit and Inspection Bureau, which also had Pennsylvania Power as a client. The La Follette committee was unable to learn the amount of money spent in a number of instances and, of course, the picture may be incomplete in other respects, since many firms and agencies destroyed their records to conceal their activities. The least that can be said is that the record of Mr. Willkie's companies as revealed by testimony before the committee, is in striking disagreement with a statement he made at Town Hall in the course of a debate with Attorney General Jackson:

"Being a member of big business who never hired a labor spy in my life, I don't know the motive that actuates either a big or a little business [that hires one] and I would repudiate the act by both big business and little business."

In 1936, Willkie's Ohio Edison (with Mr. Willkie himself chairman of the board) joined in the antiunion fight of the Mahoning Valley Industrial Council, an organization of reactionary industrialists then engaged in trying to prevent organization among the steel workers of Youngstown. The utility secretly helped the Council underwrite a series of "spontaneous" newspaper advertisements that supposedly gave expression to the public's desire for industrial "harmony" and, in effect, warned the steel workers to "stop, look, and listen" before doing anything so rash as joining the C. I. O. and fighting for better working conditions. It was not until the La Follette investigation that Youngstown newspaper readers learned that this campaign had been paid for by industry. That fact had been very carefully concealed by having the advertisements "sponsored" by an innocent-looking "Civic Affairs Committee," specially set up for the purpose. This committee, composed of various civic leaders who lent their names but did not contribute a cent, was designed to make the message in the advertising seem not only spontaneous but, even more important, genuinely disinterested. Ohio Edison contributed $500 to this gross deception of the Youngstown public.

On the question of unfair labor practices, the National Labor Relations Board has brought two Willkie subsidiaries—Consumers Power and Alabama Power—to trial and found them both guilty of interfering with the rights of their employees. The story of Consumers Power, where Mr. Willkie was himself chairman of the board, is worth reviewing in some detail.

Paradoxically enough, in 1937 Wendell Willkie negotiated and signed a contract with John L. Lewis for the employees of Consumers Power, which gave him the distinction of being the first big utility man to sign with the C. I. O. Willkie boosters like to emphasize this, at least in canvassing C. I. O. votes, but what they usually fail to stress is the fact that it required a strike—which stopped electric service for several hours in a number of Michigan cities—to get Wendell Willkie's signature on the contract. For Consumers Power had flatly refused to recognize or bargain with the C. I. O. until the employees walked out. The event therefore conferred another distinction on Mr. Willkie; he was the first big utility man to have a C. I. O. strike.

The contract had scarcely been signed, however, before Consumers Power launched a determined anti-C. I. O. offensive. This continued unrelentingly right up to the day the Republicans picked Mr. Willkie, when, by coincidence, the management suddenly began acting with a sweet reasonableness such as Michigan and the C. I. O. have not seen in years.

The offensive against the C. I. O. was twofold. C. I. O. members were spied upon, coerced, intimidated, and demoted—while the management proceeded secretly to promote a company union. Employees received form letters denouncing the C. I. O. and A. F. of L. as "outside" organizations whose interests were "mainly of a pecuniary nature." The employees were warned against such influences and urged, instead, to "band themselves together in a solid, loyal, and truly representative employees' organization free of any outside influence." Obviously, as the Labor Board later found, this heralded the birth of one of Wendell Willkie's company unions.

Meanwhile, those employees who failed to join or continued to go to C. I. O. meetings began to have strange things happen to them. Nyles M. Sowle, for example, had his lunch box filled with grease while he was at work. A day later his sandwiches were poisoned—something he did not discover, of course, until he had partially eaten one, when he became so ill he had to be under a doctor's care for several weeks. The company apologized for this and assured the C. I. O. that the foreman responsible—one Myles Beattie—had been duly punished by being laid off for a week. However, the N. L. R. B.'s subsequent examination of the company's pay-roll records revealed that Foreman Beattie had actually been rewarded with a week's vacation with pay. Others, highly skilled electricians and linemen, suddenly found themselves demoted or exiled to the company's "poleyard," where they were put to such disagreeable tasks as creosoting poles or cleaning insects from street-light globes.

The N. L. R. B., in a decision upheld last month by the United States circuit court of appeals, finally called a halt to such coercion and intimidation, which it declared to be part of a deliberate campaign by Consumers Power against the C. I. O. and in favor of its company union. The Board, and now the court, ordered Consumers Power to cease its promotion of an illegal labor organization and to show a decent respect for the rights of its employees.

In its maneuvers to frustrate collective bargaining, Consumers Power stubbornly refused to renew its agreement with the C. I. O. in 1938. A second strike resulted. This was settled by a new agreement, and then Consumers Power repeated the same performance last year. The C. I. O. had won a plurality in a Labor Board election, but the usual run-off election was blocked by an injunction brought against the Board by the A. F. of L.'s Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which had been eliminated on the first ballot. Pending the lengthy court determination of the Board's powers, the C. I. O. proposed that the company meet and settle grievances with each group separately for its own members. Both the company and the A. F. of L. rejected the proposal. Finally, after months in which there was no agreement and no grievance machinery to protect its members from the increasing discrimination of the company, the Utility Workers went on strike a third time. It was during this strike, which lasted several weeks, that Chairman Arthur E. Rabb, of the Michigan State Labor Board, denounced Consumers Power as being entirely to blame for the failure to reach an agreement.

A satisfactory settlement was finally agreed upon but Consumers Power quickly found a way to evade it. Shortly after the end of the strike a number of employees were indicted for alleged sabotage committed during the strike. By a remarkable coincidence, those indicted included the chairman and members of the U. W. O. C.'s State-wide grievance committee. The company immediately suspended them, and then used their suspension as a pretext for refusing to meet with them further on any union or employee matters. Since the grievance committee provisions represented the most vital part of the strike settlement, the Consumers Power by this maneuver made the agreement virtually meaningless.

Since Mr. Willkie's nomination meetings between the C. I. O. and Consumers Power on grievance matters have been resumed. But whether this came about through the Labor Board, Mr. Willkie's nomination, or the fact that the employees were talking of going on strike a fourth time would be difficult to say.

In other subsidiaries of Willkie's Commonwealth, there is also clear-cut evidence of management opposition to collective bargaining. In two—Southern Indiana Gas and Alabama Power—company unions have been outlawed. The management of Ohio Edison, while it has not resorted to the flagrant unfair labor practices of Consumers' Power, has none the less rejected genuine collective bargaining. The C. I. O. has been organized there since 1937, but it has never obtained a contract. The company has met with the union and issued "statements of policy" but has refused to sign a contract, which the N. L. R. B. holds to be an essential part of genuine collective bargaining.

As against this extensive record of denial of labor rights, by overt acts and otherwise, the A. F. of L. reports two contracts with Commonwealth subsidiaries. There is evidence, however, that at least one of these—with Georgia Power—may be the result of something more than just a pure desire by the management to practice real collective bargaining. A special correspondent of the New York newspaper PM reports that President Preston K. Arkwright, of Georgia Power, "developed an unusually warm and thorough tie-up with the A. F. of L. to have assistance in fighting the T. V. A."

Between now and November, candidate Willkie will no doubt state his views on labor more precisely than he has thus far done. But organized labor is likely to scrutinize the record more closely than the speeches. For in labor relations, actions count more than words. How an employer has actually behaved in dealing with his employees and their union is a far safer guide to his real attitude on labor's rights than anything he may say in self-serving declarations that he may be called upon to make.

MR. WILLKIE IN HIS OWN WORDS

For the past few months, Mr. Willkie has been talking in public as a possible Presidential candidate. What were his views before he began to run for office?

Was it the new face, the large head, the tousled hair, the carefully nurtured impression of opposition by politicians, that engendered the sudden enthusiasm for the Republican Presidential candidate? Or was it knowledge and approval of his views about government? Ask the next man you meet what Willkie's program is. The chances are he doesn't know, or can express it only in the vaguest of generalities. It is important to review Mr. Willkie's public statements, especially those made before he began to seek elective office. He is intelligent and highly vocal, and what he has said and written ought to give us a hint of the sort of President he would make.

In doing so it is scarcely necessary to go back of his entrance into the field of national politics when, on January 25, 1933, he was elected president of the Commonwealth & Southern, a large utility holding company. He had been its general counsel since 1929, as a member of the firm of Weadock & Willkie in New York. These were, in the most literal sense, political jobs. Mr. Willkie was not, of course, an engineer or a man of any technical training whatever in the production and distribution of goods or the management of industry. He was not even a businessman. He was a lawyer of the type ordinarily chosen to represent huge interests in dealing with courts, commissions, legislators, and the public. Skill in juggling verbal formulas and in handling persons are the requirements for such a job. This office was as much an exercise of politics as it is to be Representative of a district or a State in Congress. It involved the whole field of public relations, and very little else.

He began cleverly. The T. V. A. was inevitable; he could not prevent its operations, and to carry on a frontal assault would have been suicidal. In May 1933 he offered to buy power from its generating stations, at the same time promising to charge consumers "rates which will give full recognition to any savings made by the Government in the cost of generation." He had previously testified before the Military Affairs Committee of the House that his corporation and its subsidiaries, "representing the largest investment in the Tennessee Valley, are in favor of the administration's program for the development of that valley." It looked as if here at last were a reasonable utility man. But at the same time he revealed his strategy by saying that his companies wanted no transmission lines or distribution systems built by the Government and hoped they would not be. This was the heart of the matter, but a difficult technical point for the general public. There is little profit in mere generation of electricity; its cost is low in any event, and public ownership cannot make great savings in it. It is in transmission, and particularly in distribution to the consumer, that the big spread comes, and it is here that rates are most affected. Without control over distribution, public ownership cannot exert its major influence. Mr. Willkie was not taking much of a chance in offering to pass on any savings made in generation.

Mr. Willkie carried on in a statement published November 20, 1934, when he declared that if private utility systems received the same governmental assistance that was given to the T. V. A., they could charge lower rates than the T. V. A. And he took the occasion to oppose public ownership of distribution systems when he said the President was "obviously misinformed" in a speech praising the municipal system at Tupelo, Miss. The low rates there existing, he implied, were due to the fact that the system paid no taxes. This argument has for years been iterated and reiterated by utility spokesmen in spite of the well-established fact that taxes are a minor element in cost and can have little effect on rates.

As it became clear that the experiment in public power was to include transmission and distribution as well as generation, Mr. Willkie warmed to his major theme. Government competition, he never tired of insisting, was driving the private companies out of business, and it was unfair competition because it was subsidized.

In a speech to the Investment Bankers Association in October 1934 attacking the T. V. A. he warned, "If the Government continues to build or finance duplicate electric systems, the fate of 90 percent of the securities of the electric-utility operating companies cannot be foretold."

In spite of the complaints of competition from public ownership, however, the same speech scoffed at the strength of the competitors. Of 3,900 municipal plants which had been established in this country, he said, only 1,800 remained in operation. Where they operated, he alleged, their average rate had been 15 percent higher than the rate of private companies. One would think he would not be much afraid of such a rival. But these figures lack specific meaning. Had the citizens of 2,100 cities with publicly owned power, disgusted with municipal operation, decided to scrap their plants? Or perhaps had the public competition brought the private companies to terms, so that a fair offer was made and accepted? Or—perish the thought—may some of the public plants have been disposed of by means of political or legal chicanery?

And in the rate comparison is Mr. Willkie comparing public rates in small or rural communities with private rates in heavily settled communities? Or, if he is comparing public rates with private rates in the same communities, what about the effect of competition? A fair test would be of public rates with private rates in other, but comparable, communities where public power does not exist. Such comparisons have many times indicated the relative cheapness of public power. Another vagueness in the statement is that "average" rate. It includes not only the rate to you and me, but the rate to great industrial concerns. One of the many complaints about the rate structures of the private utilities is that they discriminate in favor of industrial users, while you and I have to pay the freight.

In addition to his relentless and reiterated attacks on the T. V. A. for competing unfairly with private business and squandering the taxpayers' money, Mr. Willkie spared no effort to defeat the Wheeler-Rayburn bill and obstruct its operation after it was passed. This bill was designed to prevent further holding-company abuses and fleecing of stockholders and consumers. Among other things it set up standards for holding-company structures and compelled the reorganization of those higher in the pyramid which had no geographical consistency or genuine function. The line of the president of the Commonwealth & Southern on this bill was clever but a bit devious. He admitted that there had been abuses, but asserted that the Commonwealth & Southern had not been guilty of them, yet authorized the sending of letters to all stockholders of his companies urging them to attack both this bill and the T. V. A. He participated in the Liberty League campaign against the administration on this ground. The burden of his argument was exactly the same as that of all the other utility holding companies, including the bad ones. Before a congressional committee he said that the value of utility securities had dropped $3,500,000,000 since January 1938 due to the Government's anti-holding-company campaign. This reversal of truth has often been exposed; it held that the attempt to remedy the speculative excesses, rather than the excesses themselves, had caused the loss.

But he was shrewd enough to offer a substitute bill, from which the teeth had been extracted. A major extraction was to take the duty of regulating interstate wholesale power rates from Federal authorities and confer it upon "interstate power boards, composed principally of the State commissioners concerned." The utilities had long ago brought many of the State commissioners into line.

After the Wheeler-Rayburn bill was passed, with moderating amendments resulting from the hearings, the Commonwealth & Southern refused to obey it by registering with the Securities and Exchange Commission. In a statement to the stockholders he explained this action by saying he was protecting their rights against "an unconstitutional process of control and destruction." (The Supreme Court later upheld the constitutionality of the law.) Subsequently he argued that this legislation was preventing the utilities from investing new billions of dollars and so increasing employment.

The history of his dealings with T. V. A. is told in another article, but it is interesting to note how much more adept he was in making a good case than in candid interpretation of the facts. In a letter to stockholders of the Commonwealth & Southern in February 1934 he spoke of "the continued political propaganda which has created a constant ferment for the lowering of rates when no operating companies of the Commonwealth & Southern system are earning a fair rate of return on the fair value of their property devoted to public use." The rates of these companies were nevertheless reduced continually and substantially as a result of the governmental competition which Mr. Willkie attacked as unfair and confiscatory. Yet in January 1938 Mr. Lilienthal pointed out that every one of them was doing more business and making more net earnings than in 1933. The Tennessee Electric Power Co., at the heart of the T. V. A. territory, had increased its net earnings 34 percent since 1933. In an interview in the New York Times magazine a month later Mr. Willkie made a generous admission. "By nature and upbringing I am a liberal. I am strongly in favor of Government supervision of all utilities for I am willing to confess that low rates and many other reforms have been brought about by Government action." Later he superbly twisted the results to his own purposes. In a speech in Somerville, N. J., in May 1940 he boasted, "The record will show that during my term of office I have reduced the rate and increased consumption, while the President, entering office with 10,000,000 unemployed, has spent $60,000,000,000 and still has 10,000,000 unemployed."

It may be irrelevant to the present purpose to inquire whether Mr. Willkie had succeeded in the man-size job which he had accepted to defend the big utilities. In one sense he had, for his companies made more money than ever, and one of them was finally bought by the T. V. A. for a fair, even a generous price. Yet Mr. Willkie had fought at every turn the governmental policies of reducing rates and increasing use which had brought about these results. On the other hand, both the T. V. A. and the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, which he had opposed, had been upheld by the Supreme Court, and the principles embodied in them had begun to be effectuated in practice. The chance for big gambling in utility speculation was, for the time being at any rate, definitely over. It could not be restored without a change in administration. Mr. Willkie transferred his duel against Mr. Roosevelt to a larger field, and decided to run for President.

The broader political views expressed by him in this role have a strong family resemblance to those he had held as utility spokesman, though some of them are disguised by dark glasses and false beards.

There are three main themes, simple and insistently developed, all intended to rehabilitate the reputation of big business and preserve its power against governmental competition or regulation. One is that the drive for social control in the interest of consumers, labor, and farmers is not really desired by the people, but is motivated by hatred and greed for power on the part of politicians. What we must fear is not big business, but big Government. The second is that the great depression and the sufferings that it caused were not so much the result of business or financial practices as of governmental interference with business. The third is that the essence of liberty is free enterprise and that the foundation of civilization is the profit motive. In all this he is careful to slur over any distinction between great and centrally controlled monopolies and the enterprise of small concerns or individuals. A few quotations under each head will illustrate his approach.

1. In December 1928 he had declared before a Round Table Forum at the Town Hall Club, as reported by the New York Times, that "he himself was possessed of no greed for money, but that those in office were possessed of greed for power. He offered the suggestion that it was no worse for a utility-holding company to own two operating companies in different States than it was for the President to have landed estates in New York and Georgia." In a speech in April 1936 over the C. B. S. network, he said, "The so-called death sentence to utility-holding companies had been presented by politicians in answer to a plan of utilities to spend $3,500,000,000 for capital reconstruction * * * the price which the American people have paid in order that the politicians could thus enjoy and exercise their hatreds has been incalculable. One essential part of that price is the existing unemployment."

Success of the drive for public control of power would, he said in the New York Times Sunday Magazine, October 31, 1937, "eventually enable a governmental bureaucracy to climb to the driving seat of all industry." In the same article, referring to Senator NORRIS' bill for six more regional conservation authorities, he wrote, "If the farmer's youngsters wanted to build a springboard or a float at the old swimming hole, that would be out, unless permission were given by a bureaucrat on the public pay roll. * * * Having roped the businessmen in one direction, they tossed their loop in another direction to catch the farmers." In his Town Hall debate with Robert H. Jackson he declared, "The fact of the matter is that small business and big business prosper under exactly the same conditions. * * * After all, a large corporation is simply, as a rule, a corporation in which the interest is divided among a great number of stockholders." He protested against the use of such "catchwords as economic royalists, Bourbons, moneyed aristocrats, banker control, and holding companies."

In a speech at the Daily Princetonian Alumni Association dinner in January 1939, he said that as a young man he had fought big business to protect the liberty of the citizens against its domination, but now "I am fighting to protect the people by defending business against government. * * * Liberalism today means protecting the liberties of the people against the domination of big government." "For a while," he said, in Toledo in March 1940, "I hoped that the New Deal would replace it (the condition of the 1920's) with a truly liberal faith. * * * But the leaders seem to be motivated not by love, but by hate. They preferred to punish rather than to reform." In an article published in the Saturday Evening Post of December 30, 1939 (and previously rejected by the New Republic) he accused the New Deal of being motivated by hatred, not love, of fellow men, and contrasted it in that respect with the magnanimity of Washington, Lee, and Lincoln. The reason the New Deal reforms, though good in purpose, went wrong, was that they were inspired by hate. Here as elsewhere he pictured himself as an innocent victim of unfair Government competition.

2. Mr. Willkie's second theme is that Government, not business, is to blame for the depression. Here again one can quote from his speeches and public articles.

In his radio speech in 1936 he asserted that though politicians had sought to lay the entire blame for the depression on businessmen, if the former had been content with "safe regulation" the country "would have surmounted most of its economic difficulties." "The real cure for depression," he insisted in his Town Hall debate, "consists in convincing millions of small investors throughout America that the Government does not intend to continue its attack on American industry, big or little." In November 1939, in a speech defending civil liberties, he rang in his favorite theme by declaring that the 10,000,000 unemployed could be put to work if restrictions were withdrawn from the free flow of capital. In April 1940 he told the Boston Chamber of Commerce, "By its sinister rumors the Government has created a Government-made depression. * * * The politicians brewed a kind of witches' broth out of a pot of horror and smeared it all over American enterprise." And all this leads to his third point, about free enterprise and the profit motive.

3. In his Times article in October 1937 he declared, "the profit-motive constitutes the incentive to human endeavor which makes industrial efficiency possible. Kept within reasonable bounds, spread among many stockholders, profit is the factor that has almost always made private business more efficient than Government enterprise." Like the old anti-Socialist debaters, he attacked the Post Office as inefficient because it didn't make a profit, though in a later interview in the Times he somewhat changed his tune by saying that if a corporation were to take over the Post Office, "this service would be as efficient as it is now and there would be no deficit." When it was revealed that his corporation had spent $20,000 to defeat municipal ownership in Chattanooga in 1935, he was reported by the Times (Aug. 25, 1938) as regretting that it had not spent more. In June 1939, speaking at the World's Fair, he attributed the greatness of this country to private enterprise, saying, "Those of us who now enjoy the benefits of this free enterprise should value it above anything else, even above security, above any of the new concepts that have been offered us to take its place."

Several times he has sought to prove his liberalism by support of civil liberties—yet the moral of such utterances is always that the liberties of private business should be respected. Attacking the Dies committee, by inference, to the Columbia alumni in November 1938, he said that as vital to the democracy as the democratic process and civil liberties is free private enterprise. In his New Republic article denouncing governmental infringements of civil liberty he complained of the action of Congress in subpenaing the telegrams of utility interests—by which investigation the fake telegrams intended to defeat the Wheeler-Rayburn bill had been discovered.

In his Des Moines speech in May 1940, attacking the New Deal, he compared it to the French popular-front government, which he blamed, in true conservative style, for France's weakness. And a few days later, in his Somerville speech he declared that the New Deal could not carry out the defense program and that the first task, before defense, was a fight to the end against the present administration.

Defense by unrestricted private enterprise, responding to the profit motive! That is what Mr. Willkie has seemed to offer us. He appeared even more definite in his acceptance speech, when he spoke of "outdistancing Hitler in any contest he chooses in 1940 or after. And I promise you that, when we beat him, we shall beat him on our own terms and in the American way." "The American way," in Mr. Willkie's phraseology, means through the operations of private business, and his statement is certainly something to think about.

In previous years Mr. Willkie had many times admitted the necessity of social legislation, though he usually attacked the particular law under discussion.

In his acceptance speech he endorsed many of the individual activities of the New Deal, but repudiated its underlying philosophy. He pledged his adherence to the doctrine that business needs a minimum of control and a maximum of opportunity. He agreed with the Roosevelt administration on the desirability of aiding Great Britain to resist Hitler, and recommended selective military service.

The essence of his position, on the face of the words he has spoken, is that of the economic liberalism of a century ago, when there were no great corporations, when finance capitalism was unheard of, when government was supposed to be the chief tyrant, and when it was generally believed that all would be for the best in the best of possible worlds if private enterprise (under competition) and capital accumulation were allowed a free hand. His adept statement of this thesis, his ability to put it across with his winning smile, is what makes the beneficiaries and practitioners of a business culture rise to cheer him in the movie houses. At last they have found someone who can get off the old gags as if they were fresh and vital. Century-old liberalism is a good screen for the dominance of 1940 big business, and that, behind the words, is what Mr. Willkie has really been seeing.

Since Mr. Willkie is a well educated, intelligent, and quick-witted man, and had a keener insight in his younger days, there are those who suspect that he really knows better, and that faced with different responsibilities he will adjust his opinions to the realities. But to adopt such a view is hardly complimentary to his sincerity. For it would indicate that all the time he has been merely a slick supersalesman with his tongue in his check, hiring himself out to the highest bidder.

EDISON INSTITUTE ETHICS

One serious criticism of Mr. Willkie has to do with the code of ethics of the public-utility industry as a whole. During the decade before he became president of Commonwealth & Southern that industry engaged in an extraordinary and highly discreditable campaign to discourage the idea of publicly owned power throughout the United States. Newspaper publishers were bribed with large advertising accounts, for which there was no economic justification, and were then incited to attack public ownership in editorials, many of which the utilities men obligingly wrote for them. School principals were offered free textbooks, well written and reasonable except on this one subject. College professors of economics were bribed with annual retainers of several hundred dollars, supposedly given for "advice" which, however, was never requested. The climax came when a fund of many millions of dollars was earmarked for secret purchase of a controlling interest in 12 or 15 of the biggest daily newspapers in the United States—a plan that was stopped only because of untimely exposure by the Federal Trade Commission.

During this same period the utilities also indulged in an orgy of unsound financing. Holding companies were pyramided one upon the other. Huge sums in securities were printed and sold to the public to enrich the small ring of inside speculators. These securities bore little or no relation to the earning power of the companies and were usually misrepresented as to their voting privileges. The growth and bursting of the Insull balloon was an extreme but not untypical example of what happened all over the country. Commonwealth & Southern issued 33,000,000 shares of common stock, which afterward declined to about one-fifteenth of their 1929 value—a paper loss of three-quarters of a billion dollars.

It is a nice point whether Mr. Willkie has not owed the country some action beyond what has been seen. For 7 years he has been one of the two or three top men in the industry; for 3 or 4 years its leading spokesman. He is a director of the Edison Electric Institute, which is merely the old National Electric Light Association under another name; the N. E. L. A. did much of the dirty work for the industry in the wicked twenties. Many of the leading executives of the subsidiary companies of Commonwealth & Southern are the same men who engaged in the practices described above. So far as we can learn, there is no record that Mr. Willkie has ever tried to get any of these individuals removed from office, or to enforce guarantees that they will not return to their old habits the first time a good opportunity is afforded.

Not only did Mr. Willkie fail to show any public conscience regarding earlier sins of the public-utility industry, but his company participated up to the hilt in propaganda activities after he had become president. The lobbying committee of the Committee of Public Utility Executives, organized in February 1935 to fight the Holding Company Act, had Willkie as one of its members and Commonwealth & Southern as one of the participating companies. The desperate lobbying done by the utility companies, the barrage of telegrams, some of them fakes, the individuals summoned from all over the country to bring pressure to bear on the Members of Congress are still (we hope) fresh in the public mind. This committee admitted spending $350,000 on the effort to influence Congress, but this did not include the additional vast sums spent by individual holding companies separately in bringing people to Washington and for other purposes. Pressed to admit that all this money came from what consumers had paid for light and power, Philip H. Gadsden said truculently that since the money was earned under legal rates established by public-utility commissions, "it is our money after that, and we can do as we please about it."

Two big New York law firms—Sullivan & Cromwell, and Simpson, Thacher, & Bartlett, received $75,000 each from the Edison Electric Institute for 5 months' work. Burnham Carter, of the famous Ivy Lee firm, got $5,000 a month for his particular services. In the general expenses, Commonwealth & Southern was the third largest contributor. It also on its own hook paid Joe Tumulty, Woodrow Wilson's one-time secretary, $12,500 for his special services, whatever they were. Mr. Willkie might well say, "all of this I saw and part of this I was."

Naturally, a candidate for President will not go out of his way to present to the voters his own less attractive phases. He does, however, owe them an obligation not to offer a set of views which are in fact different from those by which he has been guided in the past and would continue to be guided if he were elected.

It is now fairly well known that the picture of Mr. Willkie presented to the public in the first 6 months of 1940 was at least partially a synthetic one. Some of the ablest press agents and advertising men in the United States were attracted to him early and they did a magnificent job, with his highly intelligent assistance, in offering to the people a tousle-headed farm boy from Indiana, a heroic fighter for civil liberties, instead of the hard-boiled magnate from Wall Street.

These experts included Russell Davenport, recently managing editor of Fortune; Robert L. Johnson, publisher of Promenade and a founder of Time; Fred Smith, of Selvage & Smith, the publicity man who put over Bruce Barton for Congress; Bruce Barton himself, a highly able publicist; Harry M. Shackleford, advertising manager of the Johns-Manville Corporation; and Stanley Resor, of the J. Walter Thompson Advertising Agency. Oren Root, Jr., the smart young Wall Street lawyer who put classified advertisements in newspapers all over the country and thereby started Willkie-for-President clubs, might well be added because of aptitude, if not experience.

Whatever Mr. Willkie himself may be, the forces by which he is surrounded are those of American big business. In the White House he would probably be surprised to discover for the first time how fully he was their prisoner. It is a noteworthy fact that for the first time in American history a big-corporation president has dared to offer himself directly as a candidate for the National Presidency; always before business felt it must operate through a political cat's-paw.

In 1932 the business community's confidence in itself was badly shaken—so much so that it only went through the motions of supporting Mr. Hoover's campaign. In 1936 it had recovered a little, but not much; the really big boys decided early that Landon was in for a licking and went back to their storm cellars. This year, however, business is feeling its oats. It is advancing under exactly the banners of 1928; it has learned nothing from the revolutionary forces that have swept the world in the past 12 years. It pretends to believe, and Mr. Willkie says, that we can turn the clock back and arrive again at the innocent and happy America of 30 years ago. But in fact what the businessmen propose is something a good deal different. They want control of America by businessmen—in effect, control by the largest manufacturing, utility, and banking corporations. They don't want to oppress labor, but they want it to know who's boss. The day is long past when the country could afford any such development. In the world of 1940, and under the threat of aggression by the totalitarian states, such control would certainly mean the realities of fascism beneath the forms of democracy.

Mr. Willkie probably does not himself realize how completely this would be true. Remembering mankind's infinite capacity for self-deception, one assumes that he is convinced by some of his own oratory. No doubt he thinks of himself as a kindly, genial man, who would somehow be able to resolve the fundamental class conflicts that no one else has ever yet in any country in the world succeeded in resolving except by ruthlessly destroying the power of one or another of the contestants. But because Mr. Willkie is deceived about himself is no reason why other people should be deceived about him. In an election as important as this year's, the public ought to look beyond a man's words to his lifelong associations and deeds, which are a vital clue to his character, to the forces behind him and to the adequacy of his mental world to deal with the crushing realities by which he will certainly be confronted.

EXHIBIT C

[From the New Republic of September 16, 1940]

MR. WILLKIE PLEADS GUILTY

Two weeks ago the New Republic published an 18,000-word supplement devoted to examining the career of Wendell Willkie. Some of the statements were damaging to him as a candidate for the Presidency, and we expected he would attempt to reply. He waited 6 days and then, through his own voice and those of several associates, he did so. But this reply was so extraordinary in character that it might as well be called a confession.

It is to be noted that with a single unimportant exception, Mr. Willkie and his aides centered their whole fire on only one section of our supplement, that dealing with his labor record. Mr. Willkie himself mentioned only the evidence of the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee showing that 7 of the 10 subsidiaries of his Commonwealth & Southern Corporation were clients of notorious labor-spy agencies.

Mr. Willkie's attempt to deny these facts calls for special comment. In view of his strenuous efforts in recent days to pose as a friend of labor, we consider it important not only to examine carefully his statement but also to present additional information on the hostile labor record of certain Willkie subsidiaries.

Mr. Willkie was quoted by the press as saying that "There is nobody connected with any organization that I have ever been associated with who ever testified before the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee." Of course not, and the New Republic did not say so. We were well aware that the chief evidence of the La Follettee committee came not from the employers but from the records of the labor-spy agencies. Employers in every field made every effort to conceal their use of labor espionage, and in this respect Mr. Willkie and his associates were, and are, presumably no different.

Mr. Willkie, of course, does not and cannot flatly deny that some of his subsidiaries in Commonwealth & Southern did employ private detectives from Pinkerton's and other agencies engaged in industrial espionage. He is forced to admit that practice, but attempts to make it seem legitimate by explaining that these spies were hired solely to detect theft and check on streetcar collections. What is to be said of this excuse? It is not without significance that this is one of the alibis most frequently advanced by employers and detective-agency officials. In fact, the La Follette committee encountered it so often that it made a special study of its validity. In its report on industrial espionage the committee observes that this excuse, as well as other "legitimate" reasons—such as the promotion of efficiency or protection against sabotage—"were of so little merit that after examination by the committee they were repudiated by the same officials who advanced them."

Particularly relevant is the committee's finding that labor spying was almost invariably concealed in the journals of Pinkerton's. In entry after entry in their books they would describe the purpose of a case as "investigation of radical conditions," often coupling this with "investigation of theft, sabotage, and irregularities." The committee's report declares that "on preliminary examination the Pinkerton officials steadfastly maintained that these entries meant what they said—investigation of theft and sabotage, usually linked by them to radicalism. It was not until the committee laid bare the whole story of industrial espionage that the general manager of the Pinkerton agency reluctantly admitted that the entries actually concealed spying on union organizations."

"Senator LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. Rossetter, isn't it true that the description in the Pinkerton journal of sabotage, theft, and irregularities often actually covers up investigation to be made of union activities?

"Mr. ROSSETTER. Well, if you take that as a sample, I will have to say 'Yes' to it."

There can be little question concerning the kind of detective work done for the Willkie subsidiaries. When Willkie's Georgia Power paid out $31,000 for Pinkerton men it was for espionage work and was so classified by the Pinkerton agency itself, which ought to know. This is the case with all the Willkie subsidiaries listed by the La Follette committee as industrial clients of Pinkerton's, Corporations Auxiliary Co., and National Corporation Service, Inc. As the committee's report explains, they "were so designated by those detective agencies themselves" and the "services supplied by the detective agencies to the employers listed were espionage, strikebreaking, guards in connection with labor disputes, or similar service, or a combination of some or all of these services."

Thus Mr. Willkie's excuse is clearly an afterthought and is directly refuted by the testimony of the labor-spy agencies themselves. Indeed, the notation that his agency was checking fare collections on Willkie's streetcars did not even occur to Secretary A. E. Lawson, of National Corporation Service, when he testified before the La Follette committee. Mr. Lawson was of course under oath. To Senator LA FOLLETTE's specific question on the kind of work done for Willkie's Ohio Edison Co., he replied "Espionage." Moreover, the agency's record, as printed by the committee, reveals that one of the spies assigned to Ohio Edison "performed all wiretapping and dictaphone work." Obviously, resort to such underhanded methods is indefensible, irrespective of whether or not the victim is labor. Would Mr. Willkie have us believe, however, that this, too, was perfectly legitimate work performed while riding around on his company's streetcars?

Several officials of Commonwealth & Southern have hastened to the defense of Mr. Willkie and his labor policy, but it is doubtful whether their statements will prove really helpful. President Preston S. Arkwright, of Georgia Power, for example, offers an explanation that makes one begin to doubt the sound business judgment of the utility industry. For while he supports Mr. Willkie on the necessity of hiring spies to prevent dishonesty in fare collections, his further comments on the matter flatly contradict this. Questioned by the Federated Press on how much dishonesty the Pinkerton men had detected, Mr. Arkwright made the surprising reply that "the question of dishonesty is not involved. The employees of this company as a group are unusually honest."

Why, when there is admittedly no need to track down thieves, does Georgia Power continue to hire Pinkerton men to hunt for them? After all, $31,000 makes a lot of nickels. President Michael Quill, of the Transport Workers' Union, offers an explanation that seems to us somewhat more credible than those of Willkie and Arkwright. He asserts that it is not customary for transport companies to hire outside spies—known as beakies and shoo-flies in the industry—unless they want to learn more about their employees than whether they are turning in receipts. "Utilities usually have their own employees for this work," says Mr. Quill, "and when outside spies from Pinkerton's or similar outfits are hired, it's a sure sign of an intensified antiunion attitude."

In Michigan, Vice President D. E. Karn, of Willkie's Consumers Power, has also come to the defense of his former boss. Mr. Karn's statement is a masterpiece of misrepresentation. He asserts that his company "has always been willing to bargain" but that "up to date the difficulty has been in determining which union represents the majority." It will be noted that Mr. Karn does not deny or take issue with a single one of the several specific unfair labor practices cited by the New Republic. He does not and cannot deny that Consumers Power fostered a company union for the purpose of preventing its employees from joining either the A. F. of L. or the C. I. O. and that this company union was a major factor in the difficulty in determining a majority representative. He fails to mention that his company engaged in wholesale discrimination against members of the C. I. O. utility workers' union and that this, too, contributed to the difficulty. Unlike Mr. Willkie, Mr. Karn is careful not to say that there is no testimony about this hostile labor policy. He is aware that there is a lengthy decision by the National Labor Relations Board (9 N. L. R. B. 701) finding Consumers Power guilty and outlawing its company union. This decision was upheld only a few weeks ago by the circuit court of appeals, following a suit initiated by Consumers Power.

The record clearly shows that Consumers Power was never willing to bargain. Since 1937 it has bargained on only three occasions—when its employees, as a last resort, went on strike to protect their union and its members from further discrimination and company harassing. Maurice Sugar, counsel for the C. I. O.'s utility workers in their dealings with Consumers Power, reports that he has "never encountered a company more antilabor in its attitude." Since Mr. Sugar is also general counsel of the United Auto Workers and is, accordingly, reasonably expert in juggling antiunion employers, Consumers Power must have been pretty good to get so high a rating. Perhaps Mr. Sugar's further comment on the company's labor policy explains why: "It has not only placed every obstacle it possibly could in the way of bona fide collective bargaining, but has even violated its contract in refusing to submit to arbitration matters which are clearly arbitrable under the terms of the contract. One is forced to conclude that the persistent provocation of its employees by the company has been intended to force a shut-down of power throughout Michigan in the hope that public reaction would result in the destruction of the union."

Vice President Karn would no doubt like to have the public believe, on reading his statement, that he and his associates at Willkie's Consumers Power have been neutral bystanders pending the determination of a majority union. The New Republic makes public for the first time herewith a document released by R. J. Thomas, of the U. A. W.-C. I. O. The document is an order, signed by Mr. Karn himself, for 500 subscriptions to The Labor Digest, a notorious antilabor paper, which were obviously to be sent to employees of the company. The Detroit Labor News, official organ of the Detroit and Wayne County Federation of Labor, an A. F. of L. central body, has revealed interesting things about both the paper and its editor, one Norman A. Zolezzi. According to The Detroit Labor News, Mr. Zolezzi uses his paper "to promote the interests of labor-hating employers, and, in political campaigns, sells its editorial policy to candidates to mislead the voters on labor support. * * * Because of his shady conduct, Zolezzi was expelled from the American Labor Press Association at the Atlantic City convention of the American Federation of Labor." A few years ago Mr. Zolezzi organized the Frank Fitzgerald for Governor Labor Committee for the Republican Party. Some years before that he served 15 months in the Federal penitentiary for impersonating a Federal officer in a shake-down.

The New Republic has a sworn affidavit from a former salesman of The Labor Digest, which explains Mr. Zolezzi's method of selling subscriptions and which throws considerable light on why Consumers Power would be willing to do business with him. The affidavit gives the general scheme of Zolezzi's sales talk, as follows:

The employer is told that his employees are in the control of the reds, the Communists, the labor agitators, the C. I. O. and other subversive agents, and that these subversive agents fill the employees with propaganda that is dangerous to the employer and causes labor unrest and dissension. The employer is then told that it is about time that his employees are given the right material to read and are educated in the proper course, so that the employer can win the employee back to the employer; that there are two ways of doing this, one is to advertise in the Labor Digest, and the second is to give the Labor Digest the mailing list of the employees and the Labor Digest would then be sent directly to the employees, the rate being $1 per year for each employee who gets the paper. The employer is to pay for the subscriptions.

The order placed by Consumers Power for the Labor Digest is dated August 11, 1938. This was just a few days after the Labor Board had concluded its hearings involving Consumers Power on charges of unfair labor practices and fostering its company union. The case was in the hands of the board at Washington, awaiting decision, when Consumers Power gave its order for the Labor Digest. It would seem that the management, fearing that its company union would be outlawed, was preparing, as the affidavit puts it, "to win the employee back to the employer" by having him read denunciations of the C. I. O. and the Labor Board.

Early this year Consumers Power was involved in a flagrant violation of the civil rights of its employees—that is to say, employees who happened to be active members or officials of the C. I. O. This occurred at the time that the Gadola grand jury—a one-man grand jury, headed by Judge Gadola—was indicting numerous Consumers Power employees on charges of alleged sabotage committed during the strike last year. According to a special report of the Michigan Civil Rights Federation, Consumers Power permitted the officers of the grand jury to question employees in its offices, although the officers had no such authority and were acting wholly illegally. The federation found that the grand jury officers had been guilty of "using their offices to intimidate and oppress members and sympathizers of the Utility Workers' Organizing Committee, C. I. O. This becomes ominous when it is borne in mind that the National Labor Relations Board elections were scheduled to be held in Flint when these acts were committed."

Furthermore, the actions of Consumers Power, coupled with threats of perjury charges by the grand jury officers, "so intimidated the employees that they now fear to employ counsel or take any action to protect their constitutional rights." Employees were arrested without warrants, held incommunicado for as long as 5 days, and not permitted to notify even their families or closest relatives of their whereabouts. They were denied counsel and specifically warned to stay away from union leaders and attorneys.

One result of the indictments was the immediate suspension by Consumers Power of the employees indicted, among whom were included several union officials. The company subsequently refused to meet with these officials, because of their suspensions, and the handling of union grievances was thereby frustrated.

In Chicago, Ross W. Wallace, president of the Willkie Central Illinois Light Co., has issued a statement denying a charge that the New Republic did not make, namely, that there had been a strike there. What we said was that the company had purchased tear-gas guns and ammunition. Mr. Wallace admits this, but says that these were not for use against the company's own employees. He explains that the company purchased "12 baby-grand gas guns and 36 shells for use of its regular employees patrolling its own lines against possible sabotage at a time when there was a strike on another company's property." Actually the company bought considerably more, as the invoice printed in the La Follette records shows. It bought a long-range field gun, 6 long-range tear-gas shells, 6 short-range tear-gas shells, 4 illuminating star shells, and 6 special aluminite clubs capable of firing shells. This scarcely sounds like the kind of equipment appropriate for protection against sabotage. In any case, Mr. Wallace does not explain why the regular law officers could not give the company special protection, if needed, or why he seems to assume that it is perfectly all right to use the weapons listed against another company's employees.

Neither Mr. Willkie nor any of his associates has had anything to say concerning the antilabor record of three other subsidiaries discussed in our supplement. They cannot, of course, deny that the Alabama Power Co. was found guilty of fostering a company union—continuously from 1934 to 1939, although during that period it used three different names as a subterfuge to stay within the law. Similarly, they cannot deny that there was another Willkie company union at the Southern Indiana Gas & Light Co., only recently outlawed. And they cannot dispute the evidence showing that Ohio Edison secretly contributed to an antiunion advertising campaign in Youngstown.

Aside from the attempt to reply to the charges regarding his labor record, Mr. Willkie and his friends have mentioned only a single other point. Mr. B. F. Weadock, his former law partner, denies that Mr. Willkie was managing director of the Edison Electric Institute. He says Mr. Willkie was only a director and that he was not present at the meeting at which the Edison Electric Institute decided to intervene in the Ashwander case, brought to fight the Tennessee Valley Authority. At the next meeting of the Edison Electric Institute, he says, Mr. Willkie was present and voted "no."

Mr. Weadock's statement does not contradict what the New Republic said. We never charged that Mr. Willkie was managing director of the Edison Electric Institute. We said he was "a director" and Mr. Weadock admits he was "a member of its board of trustees." There is no difference in fact between these two terms in common practice. Our exact comment on Mr. Willkie's connection with this affair was, "You are compelled to assume either that it [the Edison Electric Institute] acted in a matter vitally concerning him without his knowledge, or else that he was playing a game with T. V. A."

The whole tenor of Mr. Weadock's statement would be to suggest that Mr. Willkie at that time, and presumably ever since, had been friendly toward the Tennessee Valley Authority. But the facts are to the contrary. Mr. Weadock cannot laugh off Willkie's statement on March 5, 1936, that "the T. V. A. is the most useless and unnecessary of all the alphabetical joyrides." He cannot laugh off Mr. Willkie's repeated other attacks on the T. V. A. over the years. He cannot laugh off the fact that Willkie subsidiaries participated in the 19-company suit brought to declare the T. V. A. unconstitutional.

The reply of Mr. Willkie and his friends to the New Republic supplement is more significant for what is omitted than for what is covered. Mr. Willkie says nothing about the campaign by which his companies helped to destroy the Chattanooga News, outstanding newspaper advocate of publicly owned power. He says nothing about the setting up of spite lines by the Georgia Power Co. to cut off farmers' cooperatives. He says nothing about the "blackmail lines" hastily built by his companies in T. V. A. territory in regions where they had few or no prospective customers, to keep the T. V. A. out. He omits the charges that false representations were made to potential consumers, such as that the Tennessee Power Co. had bought out the T. V. A.

Mr. Willkie is silent on the shockingly bad actions of the power industry during the 1920's, when newspaper editors were debauched, college teachers secretly put on the pay roll, propaganda smuggled into the public schools, all in the effort to fight publicly owned power. If he has ever repudiated that record or tried to clean house, we have not heard of it. He is silent on the charge that he was a member of the committee of public-utility executives organized in February 1935, to fight the Holding Company Act. The tactics used by that lobbying committee, the barrage of telegrams from all over the country, some of them fakes, the expenditure of $350,000 through the committee to influence Congress, and hundreds of thousands more by the constituent companies—all these have passed unnoticed by Mr. Willkie at the date of this writing. Instead, out of our mass of evidence, he and his associates have chosen two or three points for an attempt at refutation. How successful that attempt has been, we leave our readers to judge.

ELECTION CONDITIONS IN NEW JERSEY

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 or 6 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I shall not object to the Senator's request, as I understand he has to leave the city, but I will object to any further speeches which would interfere with the calling of the calendar, which is the order of business according to the agreement entered into yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, in the afternoon session of yesterday, September 26, as a part of the afternoon's debate, the subject matter of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures came up, with particular reference to the State of New Jersey, and the subcommittee which had been duly constituted to go into that State and conduct an investigation, with public hearings, after reports had been submitted by our investigators, as they had been.

I charged in my statement yesterday that pressure had been brought to bear on Senators to postpone indefinitely the hearings scheduled to have begun yesterday morning, September 26, in Newark, N. J.; and I still make that charge.

Any man who has a cause to present desires to have it reinforced from honorable and sound sources. I now read to the Senate from the Newark Evening News of Thursday, September 26. The Newark Evening News is a very reputable newspaper and is represented in the Senate Press Gallery by one of the best of newspapermen. I read in large headlines, supporting what I said yesterday:

HAGUE SUCCEEDS, PROBE DELAYED—SENATE INQUIRY INTO VOTE FRAUD CHARGES PUT OFF TO OCTOBER 15

WASHINGTON.—A high-pressure drive by the Hague machine to delay investigation of fraudulent registration allegations in Hudson County by a special Senate committee on campaign expenditures has succeeded.

Senator GILLETTE, Democrat, of Iowa, committee chairman, announced the investigation by a subcommittee would be started October 15. The move came after Senator TOBEY, Republican, of New Hampshire, protested when a hearing he was about to begin at the Newark Federal Building today was called off.

Senator GILLETTE declared the reason for the delay was that a new member of the inquiry, Senator JOSH LEE, Democrat, of Oklahoma, would be campaigning in the West with Henry A. Wallace, Democratic Vice Presidential candidate.

Effect of the postponement will be that only 3 weeks will remain for the New Jersey inquiry before the November 5 election. This would leave only a few days in which to check registration signatures against those on the poll books now held by Jersey City officials.

NO SURPRISE

GILLETTE's announcement was no surprise to persons close to Mayor Hague's leaders here. For 2 days they have known of the pressure exerted by Representative EDWARD J. HART, of the Fourteenth New Jersey District, and MARY T. NORTON, of the Thirteenth, comprising Hague's territory, to stop or sidetrack the inquiry.

All the influence the Hague machine could invoke was brought to bear and telephone wires between City Hall, Jersey City, and the offices of HART and Mrs. NORTON have been hot.

TOBEY has charged that pressure from here was responsible for the delay and has threatened to say his piece on the floor of the Senate.

In their representations to Senator GILLETTE, HART and other Democrats are said to have made the most of the Jersey City complaint that it was an outrage on a loyal Democratic organization to allow a Republican Senator from New Hampshire to ask hostile questions.

MADE AN ALLY

This sort of business, it was said, made the Senate committee an ally of the Republicans at Trenton who are carrying out the orders of Republican National Chairman JOE MARTIN to destroy the voting effectiveness of the Hague machine.

Democrats of both Houses of the Congress were enlisted by HART and Mrs. NORTON in the drive to stop TOBEY from asking "dirty questions." Some of these Democrats were quick to say that they could not understand why GILLETTE had to go out of his way to help the enemy and that if the pressure to probe Hudson were irresistible, he never should have given a New England Republican carte blanche.

Everybody, including GILLETTE, said these Democrats ought to know that a "sharp, canny old fellow" like TOBEY was too dangerous a man to get such an assignment, that one Democrat at least ought to be on the job with him.

The last paragraph is good, and no one appreciates it more than I, for it is always a good thing to keep a man humble, to "see ourself's as ithers see us." The point I want to make, however, is that here is confirmatory evidence that the game is on; pressure is being brought to bear upon men in the Senate by those who want to set aside this investigation; and only this morning, from two sources, word has come to me that the poll books and registration books which we have been seeking to bring into juxtaposition to compare signatures, to prove the "phony" voting in New Jersey, have been burned and destroyed.

I cannot vouch for the truth of that allegation. It comes from two sources. It may be true and it may not be true; but if it is true, it is to be regretted, because the first thing the Senator speaking was going to do when he "got into gear" in Newark, N. J., was to subpena those books and put a score of men on them to show up the alleged fraud which I believe to exist.

I read this article for one purpose—that the public and the Senate may know that what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] said yesterday is backed up by an able newspaper from an adequate report of conditions in Newark, N. J., showing how the heat has been applied and the pressure applied which produced results, so that the efforts of the Senate committee investigating election conditions in Newark, N. J., with hearings all scheduled, stenographers ready, witnesses summoned, secretaries and all there, and courtroom engaged, all go out of the window until October 15; and in the interim only God knows what may happen.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now consider unobjected-to bills on the calendar. The clerk will state the first business on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I do not want to delay matters. I am very anxious to go forward. A number of Senators are absent, however, who wanted to be notified when we took up the calendar. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Sheppard

Mr. KING and Mr. BARKLEY. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

LOANS ON STORED WHEAT

The bill (H. R. 6480) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I do not know who objected to the consideration of this bill, but I wish the Senator objecting would withhold his objection for just a moment.

The bill proposes an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act to take care of stored wheat upon which the Government has loans. It applies only to wheat States, it is true; but, under the present law, if wheat upon which a farmer secures a loan is stored in a local elevator, it cannot be shipped out while the Government loan is on it without canceling the storage certificate.

The bill merely provides a means by which a local elevator which has not room enough to carry the stored wheat may ship it to a terminal and have it re-stored without canceling the storage certificate. It is an administration measure. Secretary Wallace appeared before the committee advocating the bill, and in the report will be found a letter from him favoring it. It is a simple little measure to help the farmers in the localities where there are not elevators large enough to carry the stored wheat. I hope the bill may be passed because it is a simple measure for the benefit of the farmers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to add my voice to what the Senator from North Dakota has said. I objected to the bill at one time and it went over. My objection was interposed for the purpose only of enabling me to make inquiry of various grain interests in the grain-producing sections, and I found from my inquiry no objection to the bill. So I hope the bill may not be objected to but may be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT

The bill (S. 3368) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] is not present, and he asked me to have this matter taken up. This is a bill recommended by the civil service, by the Veterans' Administration, and it also includes some of the civil-service employees under the Panama Railroad and The Alaskan Government Railroad. I speak for the bill because of my interest in the veterans.

The House passed a similar bill, which is Calendar No. 1963, and if the objection may be withheld, it is my purpose to move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. It provides for taking care of some of the veterans of foreign wars who cannot be taken care of under the present law.

The report shows that the civil-service representatives, the representatives of General Hines, of the Veterans' Administration, and some representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, got together on certain applications by veterans, and there were a few veterans they could not take care of under the present law. After several conferences they agreed to a bill, and the bill I am now discussing was the result. It is true it includes some of those on The Alaska Railroad, whom the civil service recommends, and some of those on the Panama list of civil-service employees, but the Department recommends it.

I hope the objection may be withdrawn so that these veterans may be taken care of. They are the ones in whom I am interested. While the Senate knows that I am opposed to war, I believe that if we send our citizens to war, we should take care of them after they return, especially if they are disabled. This bill would take care of a few men who cannot be taken care of in any other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill and the consideration of the House bill at this time?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8621), to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts.

Mr. FRAZIER. I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "'SEC. 97. Computation of accredited service, subject to the provisions of section 98 of this title. Subject to the provisions of section 8 hereof, the" and to insert "'SEC. 97. Computation of Accredited Service. Subject to the provisions of section 98 of this title, the", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 5 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 472; 5 U. S. C. 707), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Subject to the provisions of section 9 hereof, the aggregate period of service which forms the basis for calculating the amount of any benefit provided in this act shall be computed from the date of original employment, whether as a classified or an unclassified employee in the civil service of the United States, or in the service of the District of Columbia, including periods of service at different times and in one or more departments, branches, or independent offices, or the legislative branch of the Government, and also periods of service performed overseas under authority of the United States, and periods of honorable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States; in the case of an employee, however, who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of military or naval service, the period of service upon which such retired pay is based shall not be included; in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives a pension on account of non-service-connected disability under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration the minimum period of service necessary to entitle him to pension shall not be included; but in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives pension or compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration on account of service-connected disability, all honorable military or naval service shall be included; and nothing in this act shall be construed as to affect in any manner an employee's right to retired pay, pension, or compensation in addition to the annuity herein provided."

SEC. 2. That the first paragraph of section 97 of title 2, Canal Zone Code, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 97. Computation of Accredited Service. Subject to the provisions of section 98 of this title, the service which shall form the basis for calculating the amount of any benefit provided in this article shall be computed from the date of original employment, whether as a classified or an unclassified employee, in the civil service of the United States or under the municipal government of the District of Columbia, including periods of service at different times and in one or more departments, branches, or independent offices of the Government, and service on the Isthmus of Panama with the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Panama Canal, or the Panama Railroad Co.; also periods of service performed overseas and under authority of the United States and periods of honorable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States. In the case of an employee, however, who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of military or naval service, the period of service upon which such retired pay is based shall not be included; in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives a pension on account of non-service-connected disability under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration the minimum period of service necessary to entitle him to pension shall not be included; but in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives pension or compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration on account of service-connected disability, all honorable military or naval service shall be included; and nothing in this article shall be construed as to affect in any manner an employee's right to retired pay, pension, or compensation in addition to the annuity herein provided."

SEC. 3. That the first paragraph of section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees of The Alaska Railroad, Territory of Alaska, who are citizens of the United States," approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2021; 5 U. S. C. 745f), as amended by the act approved August 7, 1939 (Public Law No. 320, 76th Cong.), be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. Subject to the provisions of section 8 hereof, the service which shall form the basis for calculating the amount of any benefit provided in this act shall be computed from the date of original employment, whether as a classified or an unclassified employee in the civil service of the United States or under the municipal government of the District of Columbia, including periods of service at different times and in one or more departments, branches, or independent offices of the Government and service in Alaska with the Alaskan Engineering Commission and The Alaska Railroad, or of either of them, and service on the Isthmus of Panama with the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Panama Canal, or the Panama Railroad Co.; also periods of service performed overseas under authority of the United States and periods of honorable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States. In the case of an employee, however, who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of military or naval service, the period of service upon which such retired pay is based shall not be included; in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives a pension on account of non-service-connected disability under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration the minimum period of service necessary to entitle him to pension shall not be included; but in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives pension or compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration on account of service-connected disability, all honorable military or naval service shall be included; and nothing in this act shall be construed as to affect in any manner an employee's right to retired pay, pension, or compensation in addition to the annuity herein provided."

SEC. 4. That the last clause of paragraph (o) of section 26 of the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor", approved February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1213; 22 U. S. C. 21), as amended by the act of August 5, 1939 (Public Law No. 277, 76th Cong.), be further amended to read as follows: "but in the case of a Foreign Service officer who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of military or naval service, the period of service upon which such retired pay is based shall not be included; in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives a pension on account of non-service-connected disability under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration the minimum period of service necessary to entitle him to pension shall not be included; but in the case of an employee who is eligible for and receives pension or compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration on account of service-connected disability, all honorable military or naval service shall be included; and nothing in this act shall be construed as to affect in any manner an employee's right to retired pay, pension, or compensation in addition to the annuity herein provided."

SEC. 5. This act shall take effect the first day of the month next succeeding the date of enactment. Any person separated from the service prior to such effective date may, upon request, have his claim for retirement adjudicated under the terms of this act; but no increase in annuity shall be allowed prior to such effective date nor shall this act be construed so as to reduce the annuity of any person separated prior to its effective date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3368 will be indefinitely postponed.

RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 231) favoring the deletion from the Sixteenth Census population the schedule of inquiries Nos. 32 and 33, relating to compensation received, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The bill (H. R. 8150) providing for the barring of claims against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, this bill was suggested by the Comptroller General, former Senator Brown, when he occupied that office. It fixes the statute of limitations at 10 years against all claims against the United States coming under the jurisdiction of the General Accounting Office.

The report shows that courts and the different departments have different statutes of limitations, and the General Accounting Office has no statute of limitations. There are claims filed there today against the United States arising even before the Civil War. This fixes a limitation of 10 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over. There is a claim of the State of Vermont that is older than 10 years, a measure providing for the settlement of which has passed the Senate and is now under consideration by the House of Representatives. I hope it may pass the House, and I should certainly not want to have a barrier raised against that claim.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand, this applies only to claims coming before the General Accounting Office, and does not limit any claims provided for by an act of Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. The claim of Vermont came before the General Accounting Office and was considered by it twice; I do not know but that it was considered by it more times than that, and the bill in Congress was based on the finding by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think Congress, in the enactment of a special act covering a claim, is bound by any general statute of limitations. We frequently pass bills settling claims when the statute of limitations has applied in the case of some department. We do not say that we are bound by that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I can hardly pass on this in the limited time we now have, and I therefore ask the sponsor of the bill to let it go over.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I am very anxious, on behalf of the General Accounting Office, to have the proposed legislation enacted. The bill passed the House unanimously. But I should be very glad to confer with the Senator from Vermont, and if possible make certain exceptions which will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3838) to protect trade-mark owners, producers, distributors, and the general public against injuries and uneconomic practices in the distribution of competitive commodities bearing a distinguishing trade-mark, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3243) to provide for a customhouse building at Miami, Fla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 801) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws and to prevent the crime of lynching was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 57) to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DAVIS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill? Without an explanation, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MINAS KIRILLIDIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3442) to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of Minas Kirillidis, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a paragraph, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the proceedings instituted against Minas Kirillidis, any provision of existing law to the contrary notwithstanding. From and after the date of the approval of this act Minas Kirillidis shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which the outstanding proceedings rest.

Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current quota year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISE HSIEN DJEN LEE LUM

The bill (S. 3204) for the relief of Louise Hsien Djen Lee Lum was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of the immigration laws, the Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to (1) permit Louise Hsien Djen Lee Lum, the wife of a citizen of the United States and the mother of two children born in the United States, to remain permanently in the United States, and (2) cancel any warrants of arrest or orders of deportation which may have been issued with respect to the said Louise Hsien Djen Lee Lum.

RUTH MOLIMAU KENISON

The bill (S. 2148) for the admission of Ruth Molimau Kenison to American citizenship was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ruth Molimau Kenison, a native of American Samoa, residing in the Territory of Hawaii, and the widow of a native-born citizen of the United States, who was formerly an employee of the United States Naval Station at Pago Pago, Samoa, be, and she is hereby, unconditionally admitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States of America.

SNAKE OR PIUTE INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1432) authorizing the Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur

Indian Reservation of Oregon to sue in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments. The first amendment of the committee was on page 2, line 4, after "1880", to insert "setting aside certain lands"; on page 3, line 10, after the words "way of", to strike out "set-off: Provided, That the court shall determine the set-offs, if any, under the terms of section 2 of the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935 (49 Stat. 596), to find and fix the net amount due to said Indians" and to insert "set-offs, where such payments or advances have inured to the benefit of said Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 3, line 22, after the words "by the", to strike out "representative or agent of said", in line 23, after the word "under" to strike out "and by virtue of authority given at a council of said Indians duly called by the Indian Department and held on October 1, 1934, and by virtue of a certain contract entered into by said Indians with their representative or agent dated October 6, 1934," and insert "contracts approved by the Secretary of the Interior", and on page 4, line 3, after the word "which" to insert "petition".

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when I presented the bill I asked for a change in the amendment found on pages 3 and 4, now about to be acted upon. I desire at this time that the Senate reject the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will not the Senator make a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. The bill is in the usual form, following the procedure pursued for a hundred years. It merely provides that the Indians mentioned in the bill may bring in the Court of Claims a suit against the Government, based on a treaty. I assure the Senator from Utah that the claim has merit, and I am very anxious that it may be submitted to the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 4, in section 3, line 14, after the word "courts", to strike out "including the services rendered by any person or persons other than attorneys on a quantum meruit basis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party as in other cases, anything in the Judicial Code of the United States and amendments thereto to the contrary notwithstanding, and notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate the claims of, and decree just compensation for, any and all claims of the Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur Reservation of Oregon arising or growing out of the Executive orders of September 12, 1872, May 15, 1875, and July 23, 1880, setting aside certain lands as a reservation for said Indians, which lands were taken from them and restored to the public domain by the Executive orders of January 28, 1876, September 13, 1882, May 21, 1883, and March 2, 1889; and it is hereby declared that the taking and the loss, without just compensation to the said Indians, of their lands, reserved to them by the said Executive orders of 1872, 1875, and 1880, and which were restored to the public domain by the said Executive orders of 1876, 1882, 1883, and 1889, is sufficient ground for the court to render equitable relief, and the court shall determine the acreage of the lands set aside for the said Snake or Piute Indians by the aforesaid three Executive orders, as near as may be, and shall determine the value thereof as fixed and classified under the terms of the public land and mining laws of the United States, provided the minimum value shall be fixed at $1.25 per acre, and render just compensation for the value and loss of use of the same. For the purpose of this act, the Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur Reservation shall be defined to be all Snake or Piute Indians who occupied and used lands set aside under the said three Executive orders creating the Malheur Reservation (1) from September 12, 1872; (2) from the time of establishing their home on such lands if such home was established between September 12, 1872, and January 1, 1878; or (3) from the time of their birth if they were born on such lands after September 12, 1872, and who continued to occupy and use such lands until their removal therefrom by force in 1878, and their descendants. Any payment or advances made to the said Indians by the United States shall not be pleaded as an estoppel but may be pleaded by way of set-off, where such payments or advances have inured to the benefit of said Indians.

SEC. 2. The claim of said Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur Reservation of Oregon shall be presented by petition or petitions to be filed within 5 years from the approval of this act and shall make the said Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. Such petition shall be verified and signed by such attorney or attorneys employed by the representative or agent of said Indians under and by virtue of authority given at a council of said Indians duly called by the Indian Department and held on October 1, 1934, and by virtue of a certain contract entered into by said Indians with their representative or agent dated October 6, 1934, in accordance with existing law, which may be made upon information and belief and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, maps, and other public records, or certified copies thereof, of any department of the Government shall be available to the Government and the claimants, and may be used in evidence, and be furnished without cost.

SEC. 3. Upon final determination of such suit instituted hereunder, the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction and fix and determine a reasonable fee for all services rendered before the departments of the Government, committees of Congress, and the courts not to exceed 10 percent of the amount recovered. In addition thereto all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of such suit hereunder, the said fees and expenses shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any sum or sums found to be due said Indians, when appropriation therefor is made by Congress to pay any judgment rendered, and the balance of any sum or sums shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States as a trust fund to the credit of said Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of said judgment, and shall be subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of the distribution of the proceeds of such judgment, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make a proper roll of said Indians within 2 years from the date of the approval of this act. Each community of the Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur Reservation, of Oregon, shall prepare a roll of its membership, which roll shall be submitted to a council of the majority of their Indian chiefs, who lived on the above said Indian reservation, for its approval or disapproval. The said central council of these chiefs shall prepare a combined roll of all members and descendants of members of the respective communities of said Indians of the former Malheur Reservation of Oregon, and shall submit the same to the Secretary of the Interior for a final approval which shall operate as final proof of such Indians to share in the benefits of this act.

BOLINROSS CHEMICAL CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3590) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, before the word "raid", to strike out the words "alleged unlawful", and on page 2, line 3, before the name "February", to insert "or about", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc., of Newark, N. J., for damages or losses resulting from the raid on its chemical plant at 12–22 Orange Street, Newark, N. J., including the alleged destruction of its machinery, equipment, raw materials, and finished products, and the loss of its business, by prohibition agents of the United States, on or about February 20, 1929.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: Without objection, the Senate will revert to Calendar No. 1566, Senate bill 3590, which was passed. The Chair has been informed that an identical House bill, H. R. 8868, is on the Senate Calendar as No. 1821.

Mr. KING. Is that the bill to which I objected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The bill now under discussion is Calendar No. 1566. Without objection, the vote by which the Senate bill was passed is reconsidered.

Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill and its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8868) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 7, before the word "raid", to strike out "alleged unlawful", and on page 2, line 3, before "February", to insert "or about", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc., of Newark, N. J., for damages or losses resulting from the raid on its chemical plant at 12–22 Orange Street, Newark, N. J., including the alleged destruction of its machinery, equipment, raw materials, and finished products, and the loss of its business, by prohibition agents of the United States, on or about February 20, 1929.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3590 will be indefinitely postponed.

DANIEL STEELE

The bill (S. 2883) for the relief of Daniel Steele was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice that the Chairman of the United States Compensation Commission does not look with favor on the bill. I should like to have an explanation; and if it is not forthcoming, I shall object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ALGY FRED GILES

The bill (S. 3653) for the relief of Algy Fred Giles was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that that bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which has been heretofore agreed to, and the bill has heretofore been passed, as amended. On motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] made on May 28, the vote by which the bill was passed was reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I notice the Secretary of War reports adversely on the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it was for that reason that the special bill was introduced, and if the Senator from Utah will permit me to make a brief statement, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This soldier left the service without leave when the Army authorities refused to give him a discharge to enable him to return home to support his mother and a small brother and sister.

While absent without leave he secured employment and supported his dependents. After providing for his dependents, and after he was able to leave them, he endeavored voluntarily to return to the Army However, he met with an accident and while in the hospital was apprehended by Army authorities. Had he been brought to trial for being absent without leave the chances are probably that he would have been acquitted.

He was justified in going to the assistance of his mother when she needed him. It was a humane and honorable act on his part.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the relief of Algy Fred Giles, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which had previously been agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Algy Fred Giles, serial No. 6232471, who enlisted January 29, 1926, and was discharged July 16, 1928, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on July 16, 1928: Provided, That no pension, back pay, bounty, compensation, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this Act or subsequent thereto.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7981) to grant pensions to certain unremarried dependent widows of Civil War veterans who were married to the veterans subsequent to June 26, 1905, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES ROBERT HARMAN

The bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Robert Harman was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I find the Secretary of War makes an adverse report upon that bill. May we have an explanation? If not, let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MEAD subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked for an explanation of House bill 6782, Calendar No. 1606. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Utah that, although the bill involves a veteran who resides in the State of New York, Representative O'NEAL, of Kentucky, has taken a deep interest in it and has convinced me of its merit. He brought the veteran to my office. The veteran has been disciplined repeatedly for sitting down on the job or lying down on the job. At times his disability had been diagnosed as phlebitis, or rheumatism, but only recently did the doctors discover that the veteran had Buerger's disease, and that eventually he will lose both his legs and perhaps both his arms. An operation has already resulted in some improvement in the veteran's condition, but it is thought that the trouble is due to the fact that the disease was not properly diagnosed. The House committee report thoroughly establishes that he has Buerger's disease. That will be found on the first page of the report. The House committee immediately reported the bill favorably.

As I have said, Representative O'NEAL, of Kentucky, who went out of his way to take an interest in and sponsor this measure, has repeatedly urged me to take an interest in it.

Mr. KING. I should say, Mr. President, that the only information I have concerning the case is that found in the report of the former Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, Major General Adams, and Lieutenant Colonel Herrick, of the Judge Advocate General's Department, all of whom report adversely. I have no other information on the subject.

Mr. MEAD. They took the information contained in their report from the medical reports which are now obsolete, but if the Senator will look on the first page of the House committee report, he will find the opinion of Members of the House, who say:

The subsequent medical history shows that there did exist at the time a condition known as thromboangitis or Buerger's disease. This disease is characterized in part by extreme pain in the leg, which may be relieved in some cases by operation.

It is indicated in the report that the condition will require an operation. So the House committee reported the bill favorably based upon the later information that was not contained in the medical records of the War Department or the earlier medical records of the veterans' hospital.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Robert Harman, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREAT FALLS BRIDGE COMMISSION

The bill (S. 2705) creating the Great Falls Bridge Commission and authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Potomac River near the Great Falls of the Potomac was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BYRD. The bill was introduced by my colleague, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. It provides for the creation of the Great Falls Bridge Commission for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a bridge over the Potomac River. The bill would impose no liability on the part of the Government. It merely grants the commission authority to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, the cost of which is to be paid from toll charges. There is no objection made to it in the report, if the Senator from Wisconsin will refer to it, by the Commissioner of Public Roads, by the Secretary of War, or by Mr. Delano, of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Great Falls Bridge Commission (hereinafter created, and hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"), and its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River between a point in Montgomery County, Md., and a point in Fairfax County, Va., within 2 miles above or below the Great Falls of the Potomac, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act: Provided, That no railway shall be operated on or over such bridge. The location and design of such bridge shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and shall be such as not to interfere with any power development on the Potomac River that may be made under specific authorization of Congress or under the provisions of the Federal Water Power Act and in accordance with the project set forth in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, or any appropriate modification thereof.

SEC. 2. The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to enter upon such lands, and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Virginia and the State of Maryland, including real estate and other property acquired for or devoted to a public use or other purposes by the State of Virginia or the State of Maryland, or any governmental or political subdivisions thereof, and including also such lands appurtenant to the Washington Aqueduct dam and conduit as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be occupied without damage to the proper uses of those structures, as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated. The proceedings for the condemnation of any such property located in the State of Virginia or the State of Maryland shall be the same as in the case of the condemnation of private property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. (a) The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge and its approaches (including any approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the necessary land, easements, and appurtenances thereto, by issuing negotiable bonds of the Commission, which shall bear interest at a rate of not to exceed 6 percent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds, and any premium to be paid for the retirement thereof before maturity, shall be payable solely from the sinking fund provided for by section 4 of this act, and such payments may be further secured by a mortgage on such bridge. All such bonds may be registerable as to principal alone or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 40 years from their respective dates of issue, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the Commission may determine. The Commission and its successors and assigns may repurchase, and may reserve the right to redeem, any of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices as may be be fixed by the Commission prior to the issuance of the bonds; but no such bonds shall be repurchased or redeemed by the Commission or its successors or assigns at a price in excess of 5 percent more than the face value thereof plus accrued interest. The Commission may in its discretion issue refunding bonds in order to repurchase or redeem any of its outstanding bonds before the maturity thereof: Provided, That any such refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 50 years from the date of enactment of this act, as the Commission may determine.

(b) The Commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee which has the power to act as trustee and to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the Commission in respect to the purchase, construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge, the conservation and application of all funds, the security for the payment of the bonds issued by the Commission, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in the case of trust agreements relating to bonds of corporations. Such trust agreements may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustees and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law.

(c) The bonds issued by the Commission shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the Commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of more than 6 percent interest on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values, and the face amount of such bonds shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, the cost of such bridge and its approaches and the land, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith when added to any other funds made available to the Commission for the said purposes. The cost of such bridge and its approaches and approach highways shall be deemed to include interest during construction of such bridge, and for 12 months thereafter, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic-surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge and the acquisition of the necessary property, incident to the financing thereof, including the cost of acquiring existing franchises, riparian rights, plans, and works of and relating to the bridge which are owned by any person, firm, or corporation, and the cost of acquiring from any such corporation all or any part of its shares of stock, either by conveyance or otherwise, if, in the judgment of the Commission, such acquisition of shares should be found expedient.

(d) If the proceeds of the bonds issued by the Commission shall exceed such costs as finally determined, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund provided for by section 4. Prior to the preparation of such bonds the Commission may issue temporary bonds of interim certificates, with or without coupons, and of such denominations as the Commission may determine, which shall be exchangeable for the permanent bonds of the Commission when such bonds have been executed and are available for delivery.

SEC. 4. (a) The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge as hereinafter provided, but the rates of toll so fixed shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War as provided by the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906. In fixing such rates of toll they shall be so adjusted as to provide a maintenance fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of the bonds issued by the Commission and the redemption or repurchase price of any such bonds redeemed or repurchased before maturity. All tolls and other revenue from such bridge shall be used solely for such purposes and for the purposes hereinafter specified in this section. After payment or provision for payment has been made from the maintenance fund of all such costs of maintaining, repairing, and operating such bridge and its approaches, and there has been reserved an amount of money estimated to be sufficient for such purposes during an additional period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of the tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund at intervals to be determined by the Commission.

(b) An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and approaches, of the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

(c) The Commission shall establish reasonable classifications for all traffic over the bridge. The tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by the Commission as to be of uniform application to all traffic within any such classification, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and the use of such bridge shall not be permitted except upon payment of tolls so fixed and adjusted. No official or employee of the Commission, no official of the Government of the United States while in the discharge of duties incident to his office or employment, and no member of a fire department or peace officer when engaged in the performance of his official duties shall be charged any toll for using such bridge.

SEC. 5. Within a reasonable time after the construction of the bridge the Commission shall file with the Public Roads Administration of the Federal Works Agency a sworn itemized statement showing the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the cost of acquiring any interest in real or other property necessary therefor, and the amount of bonds debentures, or other evidence of indebtedness issued in connection with the construction of such bridge.

SEC. 6. (a) After payment of the bonds issued by the Commission and the interest thereon, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment shall be provided and shall be held for that purpose, the Commission shall convey to the States of Virginia and Maryland as hereinafter provided all the interest of the Commission in and to such bridge. The deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance delivered by the Commission shall transfer to each of such States an undivided half interest in such bridge to be administered by the State or by any municipality or agency thereof that may be authorized by or pursuant to the law of such State to administer the same, but such conveyance and transfer shall be made only upon the condition that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and shall be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by such States acting jointly through such agencies thereof as may be mutually agreed upon. If the State of Virginia or the State of Maryland fails to accept, or is not authorized to accept, such undivided half interest in such bridge, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the Commission, and the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a maintenance fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of such bridge and its approaches under economical management, until such time as the States of Virginia and Maryland shall accept such conveyance under the conditions herein prescribed.

(b) Notwithstanding any restrictions or limitations imposed by the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, or by any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the Federal Works Administrator may extend Federal aid under such acts for the construction of such bridge out of any moneys allocated to the State of Virginia, with the consent of the department of highways of such State, and out of any moneys allocated to the State of Maryland, with the consent of the State highway commission of such State.

SEC. 7. (a) There is hereby created a body corporate to be known as the Great Falls Bridge Commission, which shall have perpetual succession, and shall have power to make contracts; to sue and be sued; to complain and defend, in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to adopt, alter, and use a common seal; to purchase or otherwise acquire and to hold or dispose of real estate and other property; to accept and receive donations of money or property and apply the same to the purposes of this act; and to do all other things necessary or proper to carry out such purposes.

(b) The Commission shall consist of James Nolan and Robert Peter, of Montgomery County, Md.; and John C. Mackall and H. W. T. Eglin, of Fairfax County, Va.; and J. Edward Burroughs, Jr., of the District of Columbia. Each of such persons shall qualify as a member of the Commission by filing in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this act, a statement under oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act, and each person appointed to fill a vacancy in the membership of the Commisison shall qualify in like manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in the Commission by reason of death or resignation, or by failure to qualify as above provided, shall be filled by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(c) Before any bonds are issued by the Commission each member of the Commission shall give such bond as may be fixed by the Public Roads Administration of the Federal Works Agency conditioned upon the faithful performance by such member of all the duties required of him by this act. The cost of such surety bond prior to and during the construction of the bridge shall be paid or reimbursed from the proceeds of the bonds issued by the Commission, and thereafter such cost shall be deemed an operating expense and paid by the Commission. The Commission shall elect a Chairman and Vice Chairman from its members, and may establish rules and regulations for the conduct of its business. A majority of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

(d) The members of the Commission shall each be entitled to a per diem compensation for their services in the amount of $15 for each day actually spent in the business of the Commission, but the maximum compensation of the Chairman in any year shall not exceed $1,800, and that of each of the other members in any year shall not exceed $1,200. Each member of the Commission shall also be entitled to receive a traveling-expense allowance of 10 cents per mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the Commission.

(e) The Commission may employ and fix the compensation of a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorneys, and other such experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary. All salaries and expenses of the Commission shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act.

SEC. 8. (a) The Commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts of the Commission shall be used solely for carrying out the purposes of this act.

(b) After all the bonds issued by the Commission and the interest thereon shall have been paid and all other obligations of the Commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payments shall have been made, and after the bridge shall have been conveyed to the States of Virginia and Maryland as provided in section 6, the Commission shall be dissolved by an order of the Commissioner of Public Roads. Such order shall be made upon the initiative of the Commissioner or upon application of the Commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a public hearing in the city of Washington, D. C. Notice of the time and place of such hearing and the purpose thereof shall be published once, at least 30 days before the date thereof, in a newspaper published in the city of Washington. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the Commission shall be divided and distributed equally between the States of Virginia and Maryland, in such manner as may be determined by the Commissioner of Public Roads of the Federal Works Agency.

SEC. 9. The Commission is further authorized to enter into a contract or contracts with the Department of Highways of the State of Virginia and the State Highway Commission of Maryland, or with any county or municipality of either of such States, under which the Commission may receive financial aid in the construction or maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, and to enter into a contract or contracts with the highway departments of such States, or either of them, under which such highway departments, or either of them, may construct, operate, and maintain, or participate with the Commission in the construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches. The Commission may also in its discretion avail itself of any of the facilities of the highway department of either of such States in connection with the construction of the proposed bridge.

SEC. 10. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the Commission or any member thereof to create any obligation or incur any liability other than obligations or liabilities which are dischargeable solely from the funds which are made available for carrying out the purposes of this act. No obligation created and no liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be a personal obligation or liability of any member or members of the Commission, but shall be chargeable solely to the funds so made available. No indebtedness created pursuant to this act shall be an indebtedness of the United States.

SEC. 11. In the event that the States of Virginia and Maryland, the State of Virginia or the State of Maryland, or a political subdivision or agency of either or both of such States, shall create a commission or other public body with authority to construct the bridge across the Potomac River referred to in this act, and such construction is to be undertaken in the manner prescribed by and subject to the provisions and limitations of this act, such commission or other public body shall ipso facto succeed to all the rights of the Great Falls Bridge Commission under this act, and shall assume all the outstanding obligations and liabilities of such Commission.

SEC. 12. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3886) to amend the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. May we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

IMPROVEMENT OF EAST RIVER, N. Y.

The bill (S. 3918) adopting and authorizing improvement of East River, N. Y., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of that bill by the Senator from New York?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the Navy Department and, I believe, the Maritime Commission, were requested to pass upon this bill when it was before the Senate Commerce Committee. As I remember, the only present avenue by which the larger ships of the Brooklyn Navy Yard can reach the ocean is the southern passage. As a war measure it is desired to dredge the East River so that ships may proceed north via the East River and find an outlet to the ocean by way of Long Island Sound. This is a war measure. It will give the Navy an alternate route out and in to the navy yard. It is a measure which originated with the Navy Department, and it came to us with the recommendation of the Council of National Defense, and, as I understand, is a national-defense measure.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF HOUSEHOLD GOODS

The bill (H. R. 9264) to provide for uniformity of allowances for the transportation of household goods of civilian officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, this bill is the result of a recommendation which will be found in the annual report of the Comptroller General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939.

The bill provides for uniformity of allowances for the transportation of household goods of civilian officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty.

The Comptroller General says at the present time, under administrative regulations, there is a wide variance in the authorized allowances with respect to the limitations fixed for packing, crating, drayage charges—some allow uncrating—and so forth, also as to the weight and nature of the effects which may be shipped at Government expense.

As shown by the report, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Labor, the Department of Agriculture, and the Veterans' Administration have different regulations and requirements and privileges, and the purpose of the bill is to unify them and make all the departments subject to the same regulations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4985) to provide for a Fishery Educational Service in the Bureau of Fisheries was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether hearings were held on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] has charge of the bill. He is not now present.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill be passed over until the Senator returns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) declaring the conservation of petroleum deposits underlying submerged lands adjacent to and along the coast of California below low-water mark and under the territorial waters of the United States of America essential for national defense was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1492) to provide for a 5-year building program for the United States Bureau of Fisheries was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6687) to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (H. R. 1550) granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. Popejoy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed owing to the fact that the proposed beneficiary has been taken care of under general legislation heretofore passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT—USE OF REFRIGERATOR CARS

The bill (S. 2753) to amend part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the use of refrigerator cars was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. At the request of a Senator who is unable to be present, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, this bill has been passed over many times. I now serve notice that at the first opportunity I intend to move to take up the bill. The bill has had extensive hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee, and a unanimous report from the committee has been filed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. REED. I wish to be certain that I am correct as to the bill we are considering.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is Calendar No. 1710, Senate bill 2753.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator who made the objection to withdraw it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am making the objection on behalf of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], who is temporarily absent. I do not know anything about his interest in it, but I feel that under the circumstances the bill should go over.

Mr. REED. Let me say that I do not think the Senator from New Jersey would object to the bill. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] who introduced the bill has agreed to an amendment to meet the objection.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. REED. The bill as it now reads is unobjectionable, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not been advised of the reason why the Senator from New Jersey objects. He has requested me to object, and have the bill go over. I cannot inquire into his reasons, but I feel that out of courtesy to him the bill should be passed over. I shall try to ascertain the reasons for his objection when he returns.

Mr. REED. May we return to the bill later?

Mr. BARKLEY. Let it go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In connection with the colloquy with regard to Calendar No. 1710, Senate bill 2753, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2753) to amend part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the use of refrigerator cars, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The bill (S. 2753) was introduced by Mr. SHIPSTEAD on July 6, 1939, and as so introduced read as follows:

"That subsection (11) of section 1 of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'Shippers in interstate commerce of fresh meats, packing-house products, or dairy products (including butter, eggs, cheese, and dressed poultry), shall have the right to supply themselves with such safe and adequate refrigerator cars as they deem efficient and proper for the transportation of such products; and it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to refuse to accept such cars for transportation in interstate commerce of such fresh meats, packing-house products, or dairy products (including butter, eggs, cheese, and dressed poultry.'"

Elaborate hearings on the bill were conducted before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of July 20 and 21, 1939, such subcommittee consisting of Mr. SHIPSTEAD, as chairman, and Mr. BONE and Mr. STEWART. At that hearing testimony on behalf of dairy and farming interests, fish and poultry associations, farmers' cooperative associations, vegetable distributors, as well as testimony on behalf of the railroads through the Association of American Railroads, was introduced and considered. Senator SCHWELLENBACH, of Washington, also appeared as a witness. The testimony introduced at the hearings developed this important factor: That the railroads had actually in the past discriminated against shippers tendering refrigerator cars for transportation in interstate commerce by declining to take the cars of some of the shippers while accepting the cars of other shippers. There was no question in the minds of any of the members of the committee that this practice was wrong and such unjust discrimination should be corrected.

It was the endeavor of the committee to remove these discriminations as fully developed by the testimony and as a result of the testimony it was felt that the bill as originally introduced on July 6, 1939, heretofore set out, did not accomplish that purpose.

With this in mind, the Committee on Interstate Commerce considered the alternative proposals to S. 2753. As a result of that consideration the committee recommended that the bill as amended be enacted.

As amended, the bill (S. 2753) would read as follows:

"That paragraph (11) of section 1 of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That in the case of inability or refusal of any carrier by railroad to supply safe, adequate, and proper refrigerator cars to any shipper in interstate commerce of perishable food products or commodities, and which are suitable to protect the marketability of such shipments, such shipper shall have the right to supply to such carrier such refrigerator cars as the Commission approves as being safe, adequate, and proper for the transportation of such products and commodities: Provided further, That if any carrier by railroad is unable to, or refuses to, supply safe, adequate, and proper cars to a shipper in interstate commerce of perishable food products or commodities, and which are suitable to protect the marketability of such shipments, and (1) refuses to accept any refrigerator car so approved by the Commission and tendered to such carrier by such shipper for the transportation in interstate commerce of any such products or commodities, or (2) unjustly discriminates either between private car companies supplying refrigerator cars to such shipper or between shippers owning refrigerator cars who have the right to supply cars to such carrier as herein provided, such refusal, or unjust discrimination, as the case may be, shall be deemed to be an unjust and unreasonable practice with respect to car service.' "

The bill as amended gives the shipper the right to supply, in case of inability or refusal of any railroad to do so, cars for the transportation of perishable food products which are safe, adequate, and proper for that purpose and which are suitable to protect the marketability of shipments of such products. The duty is imposed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine what cars are safe, adequate, and proper for such transportation. The bill also prohibits any railroad from unjustly discriminating against private car companies or shippers in the transportation of such cars, whether the refrigerator cars are owned or supplied by the private car companies or shippers. The refusal of any railroad to accept any such car approved by the Commission, or for any railroad to unjustly discriminate in the manner forbidden by the bill, is declared to be an unjust and unreasonable practice with respect to car service. No separate penalty for a violation of the provisions of the bill was provided because it was felt that the matter was adequately covered by the omnibus penalty provisions of section 10 (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1717) to revise the method of determining the payments to be made by the United States to the several States with respect to conservation lands subject to the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3268) to amend section 4438 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the better protection of life and property was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LAWS RELATING TO STEAM VESSELS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3864) to apply laws covering steam vessels to certain passenger-carrying vessels, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to pleasure craft not for hire.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That wherever used in this act (a) the term "motor vessel" means any steam vessel which is not more than 65 feet in length, measured from end to end over the deck excluding sheer, and also any vessel propelled in whole or in part by machinery other than by steam.

(b) The term "motor vessel carrying passengers for hire" shall include motor vessels as defined in subsection (a) of this section only when carrying more than 16 passengers for hire: Provided, That the term "motor vessel carrying passengers for hire" shall include motor vessels as defined in subsection (a) of this section which carry more than 12 passengers, when such motor vessel is on an international voyage as defined in the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1929 (50 Stat. 1121).

SEC. 2. All laws covering the inspection of steam vessels be, and are hereby, made applicable to all motor vessels carrying passengers for hire to such extent and upon such terms as may be required by the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 3. So much of section 4426 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 404), as relates to the inspection of hulls and boilers and manning of motor vessels to which this act applies, and so much of section 5 of the act of June 9, 1910 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 515), as relates to licensing of operators or manning of motor vessels to which this act applies, as are in conflict with any provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. This act shall become effective 18 months after date of its enactment.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to pleasure craft not for hire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRAINING OF AIRCRAFT OBSERVERS

The bill (S. 4005) to further amend section 13a of the National Defense Act so as to authorize officers detailed for training and duty as aircraft observers to be so rated, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a companion bill, House bill 9898, is on the calendar as No. 2140.

House bill 9898 permits the detail of officers of the various arms of the Army to training and duty with the Air Corps as aircraft observers.

It is not contemplated that these officers shall be given training as pilots.

They are merely to be assigned as members of the combat crews and will be required to participate in regular and frequent flights and will be subject to the same risks and hazards as are pilots.

The use of officers of other branches for this duty will contribute to better integration of the air arm and the ground arms and will further the cooperative effort of observation aviation and the troop with which it works in training and in combat.

The War Department says that this legislation is urgently needed in order that training as aerial observers of officers of ground arms may be initiated with the least practicable delay.

I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the House bill be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9898) to further amend section 13a of the National Defense Act so as to authorize officers detailed for training and duty as aircraft observers to be so rated, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4005 is indefinitely postponed.

CHAIM WAKERMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3087) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Chaim Wakerman, known as Hyman Wakerman, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment at the top of page 2 to insert:

Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current quota year.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of Chaim Wakerman, known as Hyman Wakerman, New York, N. Y., on June 23, 1929, and that he shall for all purposes under the immigration and naturalization laws be deemed to have been lawfully admitted as an immigrant for permanent residence.

Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current quota year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UMBERTO TEDESCHI

The bill (H. R. 2036) for the relief of Umberto Tedeschi was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC SURMANY

The bill (H. R. 5417) for the relief of Isaac Surmany was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOTIEJUS BUZAS AND BERNICE BUZAS

The bill (H. R. 6409) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Motiejus Buzas and Bernice Buzas, his wife, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. RUPINSKI AND MARIA ZOFIA RUPINSKI

The bill (H. R. 7515) for the relief of Joseph B. Rupinski and Maria Zofia Rupinski was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEO NEUMANN AND ALICE NEUMANN

The bill (H. R. 8295) for the relief of Leo Neumann and his wife, Alice Neumann, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA KNUTSON

The bill (H. R. 2684) for the relief of Emma Knutson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4860) to amend existing law so as to provide for the exclusion and deportation of aliens who advocate the making of any changes in the American form of government was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LOUIS D. FREEDMAN

The bill (H. R. 7179) authorizing the naturalization of Louis D. Freedman was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADOLPH BURNSTEIN AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 6083) for the relief of Morris Burnstein, Jennie Burnstein, and Adolph Burnstein was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been advised by the distinguished Representative from New York, Mr. SOL BLOOM, that the title should be amended to apply exclusively to Adolph Burnstein, and not to the other two persons mentioned in the title. I move that the title be amended by striking therefrom "Morris Burnstein, Jennie Burnstein, and", so as to read "for the relief of Adolph Burnstein." The title is wrong. The bill is correct. The title should be amended to apply to only one person instead of three.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the title offered by the Senator from Utah.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of Adolph Burnstein."

SALVATORE TARAS

The bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Salvatore Taras was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE, ASTORIA, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3765) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 2. That so much of section 4 of the act approved June 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 949, 950), which reads as follows: "or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management," is hereby repealed.

And on the same page, line 10, to change the number of the section from "2" to "3", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., authorized to be built by the Oregon-Washington Bridge Board of Trustees by an act of Congress approved June 13, 1934, as amended, as heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved August 30, 1935, January 27, 1936, August 5, 1937, May 26, 1938, and August 5, 1939, are further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 13, 1940.

SEC. 2. That so much of section 4 of the act approved June 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 949, 950), which reads as follows: "or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes."

EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS BY EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

The resolution (S. Res. 273), favoring the furnishing to the Senate by the various executive agencies of information concerning the number, compensation, and duties of aliens employed therein, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that each executive department, independent establishment, and other agency in the executive branch of the Government shall furnish to the Senate immediately full and complete information with respect to the number of aliens employed by such department, establishment, or agency, or compensated in whole or in part from Federal funds appropriated for such department, establishment, or agency, and such information shall include, among other things, statements with respect to the compensation being paid to each such alien, the type of service he is performing, and the length of time he has been employed in any capacity by any agency of the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, May I inquire what was done with Calendar No. 1786, Senate Resolution 273?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think probably the resolution ought to go over. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate Resolution 273 was agreed to be reconsidered, and that the resolution go over. I think the information is already available in a report, which makes it unnecessary to adopt the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which Senate Resolution 273 was agreed to is reconsidered, and the resolution is passed over.

USE OF FACILITIES OF NATIONAL PARKS AND MONUMENTS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4097) to authorize the use of certain facilities of national parks and national monuments for school purposes, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That in order to facilitate the providing of educational opportunities for children of Government employees and other residents in the national parks and national monuments, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion, to make available for elementary-school purposes therein, without charge, space in Government-owned buildings, when such space may be available for such purposes without detriment to the official business of such national parks and national monuments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NELL MULLEN

The bill (H. R. 1857) for the relief of Nell Mullen was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2001) for the relief of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (H. R. 7611) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I shall later ask unanimous consent to recur to this bill. It may go over for the present.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, recurring to Order of Business No. 1865, House bill 7611, to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army, if I may have unanimous consent to do so, I desire to say that an identical bill passed the Senate some time ago and also passed the House and was signed by the President and is now the law. I therefore ask that the House bill to which I have referred be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, House bill 7611 is indefinitely postponed.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN MAHNOMEN, MINN.

The bill (H. R. 8124) to provide funds for cooperation with public-school districts (organized and unorganized) in Mahnomen, Itasca, Pine, St. Louis, Clearwater, Koochiching, and Becker Counties, Minn., in the construction, improvement, and extension of school facilities to be available to both Indian and white children, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6560) relating to placer mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1825) to provide for the acquisition of certain property for public use in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire on behalf of the United States for public use at a reasonable price from Federal funds, through purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the following-described property, together with all improvements thereon, located in the District of Columbia, which appears on the assessors' records for the District of Columbia as parcels 168/50, 168/32, 175/30, 175/41, 175/116, 175/73, and 175/56 at a cost not to exceed $500,000: Provided, however, That, if at any time an appropriate use for this property or any portions thereof shall be found for District of Columbia purposes, such property may be transferred to the government of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government reimbursed from District appropriations.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums, not in excess of $500,000, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. DANAHER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 1825 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which Senate bill 1825 was passed is reconsidered.

Mr. DANAHER. May we have an explanation of the bill so we may know where the land is and for what purposes it is proposed to be acquired? It is proposed to authorize the expenditure of $500,000 to acquire certain lands.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. MEAD rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] is familiar with the measure, and I yield to him for an explanation.

The Senator from New Jersey, I think, is also familiar with it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, several years ago a point was raised in the other House against construction of an abattior or a slaughterhouse in the District of Columbia. It seems that a permit was secured and property and materials were all accumulated, and the construction was under way, but, because of a fight waged in the other House, the progress of the project was stopped. Subsequently, legislation was enacted which prevented the construction of slaughterhouses or abattoirs of this particular type in the District of Columbia. There was a great loss sustained, and a bill was introduced to compensate those who had made certain progress in the construction of the slaughterhouse. There was contained in the bill a provision to reimburse the owners of the property for certain good-will and loss of trade, and so forth; but that provision was eliminated by the Senate committee, and there is nothing now left in the bill except provision for the actual sale of the land by the company to the authorities of the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I suggest to the Senator that the sale is not directed in this bill, but the Secretary is merely given the authority to buy the property?

Mr. MEAD. I think that is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. He does not have to buy if he does not want to.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct; the bill was amended so that the Secretary of the Interior may purchase the property if he desires to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the bill provides "That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire."

Mr. MEAD. I was taking the suggestion of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. But the bill provides as I have stated.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator please look at line 3, page 1, where it provides, "That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire" the property.

The report, let me say to the Senator, indicates that the property has a value of $134,127, but the bill authorizes an expenditure of $500,000. I should like to see those figures reconciled.

Mr. MEAD. The reason $500,000 is in it is that in the bill as it came before the committee it proposed to reimburse the particular party for the loss of trade and goodwill and for the damage resulting from the prohibitory legislation. But the Senate committee struck all that from the bill and there remains only the direction to purchase the property. It is assumed that the property is worth over $150,000. The Secretary of the Interior, whose Department made the investigation, has this comment to make:

Since it was agencies of the Federal Government which, in the main, carried on this fight to prevent the erection of the slaughterhouse, it seems to me only just that the Federal Government should buy this property at a reasonable market value. I believe that we could afford to pay this for the absence of the proposed nuisance alone; but I am certain that the Government will be able to use this property or to dispose of it in a manner that will not mean any loss.

This Department is in favor of this bill, and my personal hope is that it will pass at this session.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to find out where this property is located.

Mr. MEAD. It is located in the northeast section of the city in the direction of the Baltimore Pike.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it near the bridge across the Anacostia River?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. My understanding is that it is in the northeast section in the direction of the Baltimore Pike.

Mr. AUSTIN. This may be the same property that I examined personally because of claims which I thought were extravagant in amount. If it is, I certainly would object, and because of the uncertainty I shall object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made and the bill will go over.

RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT FOR POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 4116) amending the act of June 25, 1938, extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I inquire if any Senator has asked for an explanation.

Mr. KING. I asked that the bill go over, but I will be glad to withhold the objection to enable the Senator to explain it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, there is not very much to this bill. When Congress passed the act covering postmasters into the civil service, the Civil Service Commission was required, before it certified an applicant for examination, to make sure that he lived within the delivery district of the post office. It has been found that at certain military camps, certain insane asylums, and other similar institutions postmasters cannot possibly live. So only in those extreme cases would the bill permit the Civil Service Commission to certify a man who lives outside the delivery district.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1076), is amended by changing the period to a colon and adding thereto the following: "Provided, That residence within the delivery of the post office or within the city or town where the same is situated shall not be essential to the examination, appointment, reappointment, or promotion of applicants for postmaster at offices where the Civil Service Commission decides that peculiar local conditions preclude or render impracticable the application of such requirements. In such cases the Commission may examine and certify for appointment, reappointment, or promotion persons who reside in such area adjacent to, or surrounding, the delivery zone of the post office as may be fixed by the Civil Service Commission."

COAL PRICES ESTABLISHED BY NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) making applicable to certain coal deliveries the prices established by the National Bituminous Coal Commission, which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States and various departments and agencies thereof having entered into agreements during the fiscal year 1938 providing, under certain circumstances, for the delivery of coal at prices established by the National Bituminous Coal Commission, and deliveries having been made under such agreements between 12:01 antemeridian, on December 16, 1937, the earliest effective date of orders of the National Bituminous Coal Commission "establishing minimum prices", and 11:59 postmeridian, on February 25, 1938, the effective date of the revocation of these orders by the National Bituminous Coal Commission, there is hereby recognized the effectiveness and applicability to these deliveries of the prices established in such price orders.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. MINTON. I inquire if objection was made to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation has been requested.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, after the passage of the so-called Bituminous Coal Act the Government entered into certain contracts with operators who were supplying coal to the Government. In those contracts it was provided that if the Bituminous Coal Commission established prices, the prices paid would not be the prices fixed by the contract but those fixed by the Bituminous Coal Commission. The Commission did establish prices, but, as the Senate will recall, those established prices were enjoined in the local district court, although the matter was never taken up to the higher court to determine whether or not those prices were validly fixed. The Bituminous Coal Commission simply backed away from it and started over. During that time some of those who had furnished coal to the Government were paid the prices established by the Bituminous Coal Commission. There were some others who were not paid, and the joint resolution, if enacted, would permit those who were not paid to be paid the prices established by the Bituminous Coal Commission. If this is not done, of course, the General Accounting Office will have to bring suit against those who have been paid, and try to recover back the money. In the judgment of the department that recommends the joint resolution, it should be passed to enable them to pay the other operators. The total cost would be probably $60,000, not to exceed $70,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MINTON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Has the joint resolution been recommended favorably by any department of the Government?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; it has been. The Interior Department has recommended its passage; in fact, it drafted the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARTICIPATION BY STATES IN REVENUES FROM NATIONAL PARKS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3869) to authorize the participation of States in certain revenues from national parks, national monuments, and other areas under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the explanation of the bill is that it proposes to do in the case of the National Park Service exactly what is now done with respect to the national forest reserves and lands under the grazing service administered by the General Land Office and the Biological Survey; that is to say, that 25 percent of the revenues derived from national parks shall be paid to the States and counties in lieu of taxes. I understand the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] objected to the bill on a previous occasion, but he has informed me that he is now satisfied with the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the bill apply only to western national parks?

Mr. HAYDEN. It applies to all parks, and is based on a perfectly sound principle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the next fiscal year following the approval of this act, 25 percent of the moneys derived by the Federal Government during any fiscal year from the collection of fees, including motor and other vehicular fees, from visitors to areas which are now or hereafter may be under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service, as shall be certified by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as practicable after the end of each fiscal year, to the State in which each area under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service is situated.

When any such area is in more than one State, the diistributive share therefrom to each State shall be proportional to its area therein, as shall be certified by the Secretary of the Interior. Such funds shall be expended for the benefit of the county or counties in which each area is situated, in such manner, and by such agencies of State or local government as the State legislatures shall prescribe: Provided, That for each fiscal year there shall not be paid to any State for the benefit of any county an amount in excess of 40 percent of the revenues derived by said county from all other sources during such fiscal year.

SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

FOREIGN ACCOUNTS IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The bill (S. 4174) relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope that whoever objected to the bill will withdraw it in order that an explanation may be made. It is a bill that was almost passed 2 or 3 months ago, but there was some conflict between the provisions on the House and the Senate bill, which the Senator from New York can explain.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Connecticut objects to the bill?

Mr. DANAHER. I think we ought to take it up, let me say, under a motion to consider it separately. I do not think we can dispose of it under the 5-minute rule. I think there is too much involved in the question whether or not the Government should undertake to recognize any agency of a foreign government to whom billions of dollars may be turned over, and thereupon have it appear that the Federal Reserve bank will be absolved of liability. That is what is involved in this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is much simpler than that. I am not going to waste the time of the Senate if the Senator is going to persist in his objection.

Mr. DANAHER. I insist that the bill should go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Then I shall have to let it go over, and ask that at some future time when I get the opportunity it may be considered by the Senate.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to cooperate with him to get the bill up in any way, but not on the call of the calendar. I want to see action on it at such time as we can fully explore it, and there is not sufficient time on the call of the calendar to do so.

Mr. WAGNER. I am perfectly willing that that be done, but I wanted to inquire of the Senator whether he intends to insist on his objection. If he is, I shall not proceed any further.

Mr. DANAHER. I shall insist on the objection; and the same objection applies also to Calendar No. 2045, House bill 10127.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, Senate bill 4174 and House bill 10127 will be passed over.

ACQUISITION OF TITLE TO LOW-VALUE LANDS

The bill (H. R. 9736) to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to authorize the Attorney General to approve the title to low-value lands and interests in lands acquired by or on behalf of the United States subject to infirmities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether an objection was interposed to the consideration of this bill? The passage of the bill is greatly desired by the Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I objected because there was no explanation of the bill. I shall be glad to listen to the Senator, and probably he can correct any misapprehensions I may entertain.

Mr. KING. This bill was submitted by the Department of Justice. In the acquisition of land for military purposes they frequently find it necessary to acquire little areas of small value—just a few hundred dollars—and the bill authorizes the acquisition of the land without going to the expense of filing suit for condemnation. In other words, they may acquire the property by making payment, and later if there is any infirmity in the title suit for condemnation may be brought. The bill is merely an aid in the acquisition of small areas which are essential to round out a field which has been acquired for aviation or for naval purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand, the Attorney General has written a letter urging the enactment of the bill.

Mr. KING. Yes; I have his letter here, and I shall ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. McNARY. In the face of the explanation I withdraw any objection.

Mr. KING. I ask that the letter of the Attorney General, as printed in the report of the committee, be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1940.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a bill to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes to authorize the Attorney General to approve the title to low-value lands and interests in lands acquired by or on behalf of the United States subject to infirmities.

Section 355 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 255) governing the approval of title in land acquisition, except in certain specific instances, in effect prohibits such acquisition unless the Attorney General renders an opinion "in favor of the validity of title." In the interpretation of this provision over a long period of years, it has been established that a valid title is one free of any infirmities. Frequently in the acquisition of large areas of submarginal, logged-off, and other low-value lands, it has been necessary to eliminate infirmities in the title by condemnation or other judicial proceedings, entailing in many instances the expenditure of funds in excess of the value of the land itself.

Practical considerations make it desirable that the Government should be able to purchase low-value lands for conservation projects, rural rehabilitation, land retirement, national parks, national forests, and other similar purposes, without the delay and expense involved in the removal of title infirmities, provided such action will not jeopardize the interests of the United States. In the event that, subsequently to the purchase of the land, it should become necessary to remove title infirmities, resort may then be had to condemnation or other proceedings.

In order to eliminate, so far as possible, the delay and expense now incident to the acquisition of low-value lands, the proposed legislation would authorize the approval of title by the Attorney General, in the case of such low-value lands, subject to infirmities. Appropriate safeguards adequate to protect the interests of the United States are included in the proposed bill.

I recommend the enactment of the legislation.

With kind regards,

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer a number of amendments to the bill. I send them to the desk and ask to have them stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 4 and 5, and to insert in lieu thereof, "as amended, is hereby."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, at the end of line 6, it is proposed to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out "or by exchange or donation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "The" and to insert in lieu thereof "That the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to strike out "nor in cases of donation and exchange shall grants be accepted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 6, after the word "act", it is proposed to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "in cases of purchase."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out "and in cases of donation and exchange by the acquiring authority's appraisal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 17, after the word "authority", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

and nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any manner any authority which the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, or the Secretary of the Interior have under the provisions of law in force on the date this section as amended takes effect with respect to the approval by them of title to land or interests in land acquired by the War Department or the Department of the Interior, as the case may be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 355. No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy yard, customhouse, lighthouse, or other public building of any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other law, whenever the average value of any lands or interests in land to be acquired by or on behalf of the United States under a single option or contract of sale does not exceed $10 per acre (hereinafter referred to as 'low-value lands'), the title may be accepted subject to such infirmities as, in the opinion of the Attorney General, may, without jeopardizing the interests of the United States, be left for removal by condemnation or other appropriate proceedings, if and when necessary: Provided, That the total value of any lands or interests to be acquired under a single option or contract of sale subject to an infirmity does not exceed $3,500. No public money shall hereafter be expended for the acquisition of such low-value lands or interests in land by or on behalf of the United States for any purpose until the written opinion of the Attorney General has been had approving the title, subject, if expedient, to infirmities as herein provided. However, no money in excess of $2,500 shall be expended for the construction of buildings, works, or other improvements (except roads, trails, and fire-protection improvements) on any site, tract, or parcel of land the title to which is subject to infirmities, until the written opinion of the Attorney General in favor of the validity of the title has been had as in the case of other lands. For the purpose of this act, values of lands and interests in land shall be determined by the consideration paid or to be paid.

"The Attorney General is hereby authorized to approve the title to easements or rights-of-way to be acquired by or on behalf of the United States, subject to such infirmities as, in his opinion, will not jeopardize the interests of the United States.

"Nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the authority now or hereafter delegated to any officer in exercising the power of eminent domain for or on behalf of the United States, to take title to or possession of or to expend money for or upon any land or interest in land, or to expend money as security for an ultimate award in advance of final judgment in any proceedings to determine just compensation; nor shall this act be construed to preclude any acquiring agency from expending money for the erection of any preliminary and temporary structure upon any land.

"The head or other authorized officer of any department, independent establishment, or agency, shall procure any evidence of title which the Attorney General may deem necessary, and the expenses of procurement, except where otherwise authorized by law or provided by contract, may be paid out of the appropriations for the acquisition of land or out of the appropriations made for the contingencies of, the acquiring department, independent establishment, or agency.

"The Attorney General may, in his discretion, base any opinion as to title required either by this act or any other law upon either or both of the following: Certificates of title of title companies or such evidence of title as he may deem satisfactory.

"The foregoing provisions of this section shall not be construed to affect in any manner any existing provisions of law which are applicable to the acquisition of lands or interests in land by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any manner any authority which the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, or the Secretary of the Interior have under the provisions of law in force on the date this section as amended takes effect with respect to the approval by them of title to land or interests in land acquired by the War Department or the Department of the Interior, as the case may be. Nor shall the foregoing provisions of this section, or the provisions of any other law, be construed to require any opinion of the Attorney General in connection with the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way for military or naval purposes; or for the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way by the Department of Agriculture for forest and other conservation purposes where the cost of any such easement of right-of-way acquired under a single instrument of conveyance and the cost of any improvement thereon does not exceed $2,500; and the Attorney General may, in his discretion, waive the requirement for his opinion in connection with the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way for other purposes when, in his opinion, such waiver will not jeopardize the interests of the United States.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the obtaining of exclusive jurisdiction in the United States over lands or interests therein which have been or shall hereafter be acquired by it shall not be required; but the head or other authorized officer of any department or independent establishment or agency of the Government may, in such cases and at such times as he may deem desirable, accept or secure from the State in which any lands or interests therein under his immediate jurisdiction, custody, or control are situated, consent to or cession of such jurisdiction, exclusive or partial, not theretofore obtained, over any such lands or interests as he may deem desirable and indicate acceptance of such jurisdiction on behalf of the United States by filing a notice of such acceptance with the Governor of such State or in such other manner as may be prescribed by the laws of the State where such lands are situated. Unless and until the United States has accepted jurisdiction over lands hereafter to be acquired as aforesaid, it shall be conclusively presumed that no such jurisdiction has been accepted.

STATUS OF RETIRED OFFICERS OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, AND COAST GUARD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9024) relating to the status of retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard of the United States, and to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 113 of the Criminal Code is hereby amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"Retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard of the United States, while not on active duty, shall not by reason of their status as such be subject to the provisions of this section: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to allow any retired officer to represent any person in the sale of anything to the Government through the department in whose service he holds a retired status."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Navy Department favors this bill. Will the Senator from Texas make an explanation of it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, section 113 of the criminal code is amended by this bill so as to permit retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, while not on active duty, to appear before Departments, bureaus, commissions, and other agencies of the Government in behalf of business concerns. These officers were held to come within this section by an interpretation and holding of a court. That interpretation would exclude business executives and accountants on a salary basis, as well as lawyers charging fees, from appearing before Departments, bureaus, commissions, and other agencies of the Government in behalf of business concerns, should they happen to be retired officers. Many retired officers are sorely put to it to make a living for themselves, and they make it largely by doing this kind of work. This bill is to relieve them of the handicap of that court holding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9389) to more effectively utilize certain lands of the public domain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COST OF PRODUCTION OF CRAB MEAT, ETC.

The resolution (S. Res. 200) directing the Tariff Commission to investigate the production costs of crab meat, crab paste, and crab sauce was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purposes of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the differences in the cost of production between the domestic article and the foreign article, and to report at the earliest date practicable, upon crab meat, fresh or frozen (whether or not packed in ice), or prepared or preserved in any manner, including crab paste and crab sauce.

ENFORCEMENT OF CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3778) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the words "and the", to strike out "Secretary of Labor" and insert "Attorney General", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 68), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That to aid in the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws along the Canadian and Mexican borders and to provide better facilities for such enforcement at points along such borders at which no Federal or other buildings adapted or suitably located for the purpose are available, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General are hereby authorized to expend, from the funds appropriated for the general maintenance and operation of the Customs and the Immigration and Naturalization Services, respectively, the necessary amounts for the acquisition of land and the erection of buildings, sheds, and office quarters, including living quarters for officers where none are otherwise available: Provided, That the total amount which may be so expended for any one project, for the use of one department, including the cost of the site, shall not exceed $5,000, and that where quarters are so erected or facilities so provided for the joint use of the Customs and the Immigration and Naturalization Services the combined cost charged to the two appropriations concerned shall not exceed $10,000 for any one project, including the site.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend, from the funds appropriated for the general maintenance and operation of the Customs Service, such amounts as may be necessary for the erection of protective gates across international highways and roads crossing the Canadian and Mexican borders and for the erection of such fences in the immediate vicinity of such highways and roads as may be necessary to prevent unlawful entry or smuggling."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCEPTANCE OF GIFT OF LANDS FROM TUCSON, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 4120) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept a gift of lands from the city of Tucson, Ariz., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept as a gift to the United States title to all or any part of the following-described lands, owned or optioned by the city of Tucson, Ariz.:

Gila and Salt River base and meridian: Sections 25, 36, and all of that portion of sections 34 and 35 lying north of the right-of-way of the Southern Pacific Railroad, township 14 south, range 14 east; sections 31, 32, the southwest quarter section 30, township 14 south, range 15 east; section 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 13, 24, the south half and the northwest quarter section 1, the northeast quarter, the north half of the northwest quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter section 8, the north half, the southeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter section 15, the northeast quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, the north half of the northwest quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 23, the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter and the east half of the southeast quarter section 25, township 15 south, range 15 east; sections 30 and 32, the southwest quarter and the west half of the northwest quarter section 7, the south half, the northwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 18, the west half, the west half of the northeast quarter, the west half and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter section 19, the south half of the southwest quarter section 20, the west half and the southeast quarter section 29, the north half, the southeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter section 31, township 15 south, range 16 east.

META DE RENE M'LOSKEY

The bill (H. R. 554) for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEN L. KESSINGER AND M. CARLISLE MINOR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1183) for the relief of Ben L. Kessinger and M. Carlisle Minor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish the reading clerk would go slowly enough so that we may follow the proceedings. Frequently I am unable to follow the reading clerk, and am in doubt as to what action has been taken, or what the ruling of the Chair may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will restate the title of the bill.

The Chief Clerk restated the title of the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASYL KULMATYCKI

The bill (H. R. 2286) for the relief of Wasyl Kulmatycki was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOLAND BLASS

The bill (S. 3185) for the relief of Noland Blass was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Noland Blass, of Little Rock, Ark., the sum of $4,271.57 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for a refund of income tax paid for the year 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6699) for the relief of special tax school districts Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, Broward County, Fla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RUFUS E. FARMER

The bill (H. R. 6842) for the relief of Rufus E. Farmer was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARENTS OF CHARLDEAN FINCH

The bill (H. R. 7425) for the relief of the parents of Charldean Finch was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMELIE WITZENBACHER

The bill (H. R. 7681) for the relief of Emelie Witzenbacher was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTELLE M. CORBETT

The bill (H. R. 7747) for the relief of Estelle M. Corbett was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I renew my request that the reading clerk proceed with sufficient deliberation so that we may follow him and understand what we are doing.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I for one wish to say that we have probably the most efficient reading clerk now alive. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if he will get a copy of the calendar and follow it from item to item, there will be no difficulty at all in keeping up with what is going on.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Regular order!

Mr. CONNALLY. I think it is really a reflection on the Senate to have a Member advise the country that he cannot keep up with the clerk when the Member has a written copy of each bill in front of him. There are so many bills on the calendar that we want to get through with it at some time or other.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Texas that I also like to take a glance at the bill itself, as well as the calendar of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will look under his desk—I do not know whether he ever looks under his desk or not—he will find a compilation of the bills by number, giving the calendar number and the number of the bill, and he can turn it over just as he would a newspaper, which I have seen him do at times. He will find it right there.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Texas that I have in front of me the calendar of bills and reports; but not being so rapid, fast, quick, and smart as the Senator from Texas, I find difficulty in looking at the bills as fast as the reading clerk reads them, and I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

JOHN A. KAMES

The bill (H. R. 10036) for the relief of John A. Kames was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if we cannot have a fair amount of deliberation, I shall make a point of no quorum after every bill that is disposed of. I do not want to do that, and I shall not do it if we may have the bills read in such a way as to give the amount of time which is reasonably necessary to know what we are doing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Kansas want the clerk to read every bill that is called before the Senator can decide whether he objects to it or is willing to have it passed? Certainly that is not usually done; and I think the Senator does himself an injustice when he intimates that he cannot keep up.

Mr. REED. I will say to the senior Senator from Kentucky that several times I have not been able to keep up. I have not been able to follow the reading clerk or the Presiding Officer. I do not want to go to the extreme of making a point of no quorum between each of the bills; but, unless we can have deliberation, that I shall do.

Mr. BARKLEY. What sort of deliberation? If there is no objection to a bill, of course, it is the duty of the Chair to announce its passage.

Mr. REED. I should like to be able to look at the bill before I decide whether or not I shall object to its consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order to try out the system proposed by the Senator from Kansas, I ask unanimous consent that in the case of the next three bills none of them be acted on until the Senator from Kansas says he is satisfied, just to see how fast we go.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Kansas. I cannot hear whether the Presiding Officer says the bill is passed or is passed over. I frequently cannot distinguish the words of the reading clerk, because he reads so fast.

I fully agree with the Senator from Kansas that the procedure here is one which is very difficult and in fact almost impossible to follow. I see no reason why the title of the bill should not be read so that we may hear it, or why the Presiding Officer should not clearly pronounce the words which are necessary to pass the bill or to pass it over. Frankly, in three out of four cases I cannot tell whether the bill is being passed or passed over.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, at the particular point on the calendar where this debate arose we were considering bills reported by the Committee on Claims. The 10 or a dozen bills particularly involved were all under the charge of the very able junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. I will say to the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Ohio that all the bills we are now considering have had the study of the House Committee on Claims, and have passed the House. When they came to the Senate Committee on Claims each of them was assigned to an individual member, who made a thorough study of all the reports, and then brought the bill back before the full committee, where the matters were argued out and discussed; and only the bills which met with the unanimous approval of the committee were reported out on the calendar. As a matter of practicality, if the clerk is to read Calendar No. 2107, House bill 10036, where we now are, and must then pause until the Senators do over again the work which was done by the individual member of the Claims Committee and by the Claims Committee itself, we shall not cover one page of the calendar in an entire session.

I think the request made is altogether unreasonable. We have known for sometime that we were going to consider the calendar, and any Senator who felt that, in accordance with his duty, he must be familiar with every one of the bills, should have taken the opportunity, before the calendar was called, to do the work which has been done in this case by the Committee on Claims, laboriously, during all the weeks and months of the session. I think it would be altogether unfair and improper to hold up the proceedings of the Senate on meritorious claims in order that each individual Senator might now, on the floor of the Senate, after a bill has been called, study the bill and the report of the department, and the report of the committee, in order to determine whether he in turn would agree with the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not asked anything unreasonable. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Sheppard
Andrews	Ellender	Lodge	Shipstead
Ashurst	Frazier	McKellar	Smathers
Austin	George	McNary	Smith
Bailey	Gerry	Maloney	Stewart
Barbour	Gillette	Mead	Taft
Barkley	Green	Minton	Thomas, Idaho
Bridges	Guffey	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gurney	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hale	Norris	Tobey
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	Townsend
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Truman
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Tydings
Caraway	Herring	Pepper	Van Nuys
Chavez	Hill	Pittman	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Radcliffe	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Reed	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Russell	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz	Wiley
Davis	King	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not desire to have to renew the call for a quorum. I think the Senate and Senators are entitled to that degree of reading which enables us to follow what we are doing. If we can have that, I shall be very happy to cooperate in expediting the call of the calendar. If we cannot have that, I am serving notice now that there will be a quorum call after action on every bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next calendar number to be considered is 2108. The clerk will state the bill.

WILLIAM A. REITHEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3907) for the relief of William A. Reithel, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the sum of $3,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William A. Reithel, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injury by reason of the negligent driving of an Army auto-truck driver which resulted in driving over the foot of the said William A. Reithel and necessitating amputation of the foot: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SECOND LT. JOHN TOMLINGSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3657) authorizing the appointment and retirement of John Tomlingson as a second lieutenant, United States Army, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint John Tomlingson, of Rutland, Vt., formerly a first sergeant, Battery D, Fifty-seventh Regiment Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, a second lieutenant, United States Army, with commission to date from October 19, 1918, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Army with the pay and allowances to which he would have been entitled if he had served as a second lieutenant between October 19, 1918, and November 11, 1918; but no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, upon examining the report I find the following language:

The War Department is strongly opposed to the enactment of this legislation.

That is signed by Secretary of War Woodring.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me explain that this bill would not be here were it not for the statement the Senator has just read. It is because of the unusual character of the case that it came to the Congress at all. It would not be here if it were not necessary for Congress to exercise its discretion in granting relief to the soldier involved. The exigencies of time intervened, so that, although the soldier had earned his commission, it had not been issued to him when the Armistice came. He certainly had nothing to do with bringing about the Armistice, yet it had the legal effect of depriving him of his commission.

The committee has examined the case with great care. This is not my bill, it is my colleague's bill, and he is not present, being absent from the Senate on a necessary engagement. I should like to see the bill passed. This is an extraordinarily interesting case, and it had the backing of many members of the American Legion of Vermont, and recently, at the maneuvers, a petition was signed by a large number of soldiers in active training on behalf of relief to this particular soldier.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I invite the attention of the Senator to this statement:

> In this connection it has been ascertained the beneficiary is now receiving $75 per month for 100-percent service-connected disability, from the Veterans' Administration.

I was wondering whether or not, in view of that statement, the enactment of the measure under consideration is warranted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not know that the money consideration is important. I observe that the bill itself provides that "no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued by reason of this Act; prior to its passage." If it carries anything in the way of money consideration, it has reference to the future only.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was this man wounded on the battlefield, and is that the reason why he draws his compensation; and was he authorized to be appointed, and was it the Armistice only that prevented his receiving his commission? If so, I think he should by all means receive the relief.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont. Would the passage of this bill create a precedent?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think not. I think it is a unique case.

Mr. WALSH. Is this the only man in the country who failed to obtain his commission because of the signing of the armistice?

Mr. AUSTIN. I could not say that.

Mr. WALSH. How many more men would claim the same thing?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think it will be found that no other man was in exactly the same situation this man was in.

Mr. WALSH. I also desire to inquire why the bill did not go to the Committee on Finance. It apparently seeks, indirectly, at least, to remove a veteran from one category and place him in another, and to increase his compensation. As chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and as a member of the Committee on Finance, I realize the importance of avoiding setting precedents. I know that when we adopt a policy in the Committee on Naval Affairs or in the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance handling veterans' affairs, it may come home to haunt us again and again, and we have absolutely no standard to go by. Of course, I do not mean to be critical of the committee which reported the measure now under consideration.

The question of giving relief in Army and Navy cases and veterans' cases should be very carefully considered and acted on only after thorough investigation, and after the committees handling Army and Navy and veterans' affairs have considered the problems. I do not rise to object, but I merely desired to make these comments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Massachusetts that this is not quite the sort of case which goes to the Committee on Finance, which has a subcommittee handling veterans' legislation. This is a bill to authorize the appointment of a soldier as a lieutenant.

Mr. WALSH. It apparently indirectly affects compensation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but that sort of bill always goes to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. I can see the reason for its going to that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MIGRATORY BIRD AND WILDLIFE REFUGES

The bill (S. 2576) to authorize the expenditure of the receipts from migratory bird and wildlife refuges or other areas or projects operated by the Bureau of Biological Survey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I could not hear who suggested that the bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. I suggested that it go over.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the bill is temporarily absent from the floor of the Senate, but I think I understand the purposes of the bill and what it seeks to accomplish. As the Senator from Montana knows, we have for a great many years established a considerable number of migratory bird refuges in various sections of the United States. From some of these refuges the Government is obtaining very small amounts of revenue. On some of them stock is grazed. I think on some of them fur-bearing animals are caught. Hay is cut on some of them. The purpose of the legislation is to take such receipts, which in the aggregate amount to only $50,000 at this time, and turn them into the Treasury, in a special fund to be used hereafter for the protection of our wildlife resources. I cannot see any valid objection to the bill, and I hope the Senator from Montana will not press his objection.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2576) to authorize the expenditure of the receipts from migratory bird and wildlife refuges or other areas or projects operated or controlled by the Bureau of Biological Survey, United States Department of the Interior, for the protection of such refuges, areas, or projects and the wildlife thereon, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Special Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "controlled by the", to strike out "Bureau of Biological Survey" and to insert "Fish and Wildlife Service", so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That all money received from the sale or other disposition of any products or from the use of any land or resouces of migratory bird and other wildlife refuges or other areas or projects administered or controlled by the Fish and Wildlife Service, not otherwise obligated, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be received and set aside as a special fund to be known as the wildlife development fund, which when appropriated by Congress shall remain available until expended, as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, for the protection, administration, improvement, extension, operation, and control of such migratory bird and other wildlife refuges, on the same basis as direct appropriations for the administration, maintenance, development, operation, and control of such refuges or other areas or projects are available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the expenditure of the receipts from migratory-bird and wildlife refuges or other areas or projects operated or controlled by the Fish and Wildlife Service, United States Department of the Interior, for the protection of such refuges, areas, or projects and the wildlife thereon, and for other purposes."

OVERTIME COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT AND COAST GUARD

The bill (S. 4196) establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the field services of the Navy Department and the Coast Guard, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator withdraw his request for a moment, so I may make a brief explanation of that bill?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Under the general law, and prior to the law that was passed in June this year providing for extra compensation for overtime work, 90 percent of all Government naval employees when engaged in overtime work were paid for overtime. In the act of June of this year that number was increased, and certain designated employees who were not per diem employees were given overtime pay for extra work, so that at the present time 96 percent of all naval employees are given extra compensation for overtime work.

This bill would take care of the other 4 percent. The committee is of the opinion that we cannot discriminate between two persons working side by side, and say to one, "Because you are a stenographer you cannot receive overtime pay," and say to another, "Because you are a mechanic you may receive overtime pay." The purpose of the bill is to have a general law providing for extra compensation for the remaining 4 percent of employees who are not covered by the existing law.

Mr. REED. Do I correctly understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that 96 percent of employees similarly situated are now receiving overtime pay?

Mr. WALSH. Ninety-six percent of naval employees who work over 40 hours a week now receive extra compensation.

Mr. REED. That applies to the Coast Guard also?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. So far as our committee has had any influence in establishing a policy, we have been urging that overtime work be kept down to its lowest possible peak, on the theory that more persons should be employed rather than to increase the overtime compensation. That has been the policy and is the policy. But there are certain scientific occupations and certain specialty work for which additional employees are not available, and, of course, persons engaged in those lines must be employed overtime and must receive overtime pay. At present 96 percent of all the employees, when they work 1 minute over 40 hours a week, receive extra compensation.

Mr. REED. With that explanation by the Senator from Massachusetts, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I am heartily in favor of this measure, but at the same time I call to his attention that it is a fact that at this minute in other departments employees are being subjected to as much as 60 and 65 hours of work a week without receiving adequate commensurate compensation. In the Department of Justice alone, for instance, where the men in the Fingerprint Division have been overloaded with work, due to extra requirements by reason of congressional legislation, they are working 65 hours a week over microscopes, with a faint light, requiring extra strain on their eyes and causing a drain on their nervous energy. They are working for that length of time without additional compensation. It seems to me that such a condition should receive some public notice, and that adequate compensation should be allotted to employees under those circumstances. I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts takes notice of the situation in the case of the employees covered by this bill.

Mr. WALSH. I sympathize with the employees referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, but he can understand that I am dealing only with the Navy Department.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; I do.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator can also understand that if a mechanic, under the existing law, received overtime pay, his assistant and his supply clerk and his stenographer ought also to receive overtime pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the employees enumerated in section 5 (a) of the act approved June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong.), compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate shall be paid to all per annum employees of the field services of the Navy Department and the Coast Guard who are not enumerated in such act: Provided, That such overtime employment is hereby authorized, under such regulations as the head of the Department concerned, with the approval of the President, may prescribe, only where additional employees cannot be obtained or will not suffice to meet the exigencies of the situation: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of the foregoing per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be effective during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, and shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

REGULATION OF DELIVERY OF CERTAIN CHECKS TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2296, Senate bill 4353. I wish to make a brief explanation of the bill. In the first place, let me say that the conferees on the excess-profits-tax measure will be in session in 15 or 20 minutes, and it will be necessary for me to be absent from the Senate Chamber at that time, and there is no chance that the bill will be reached in that time in its order on the calendar.

This is a bill which the Treasury Department, the State Department, and the Veterans' Administration are most anxious to have passed in order that it might go to the House for consideration. I will be pleased to explain in a word, if the Senate will bear with me, what the bill proposes.

Some time ago I introduced a bill in the Senate to authorize the Veterans' Administrator to withhold delivery of checks payable to persons residing in foreign countries that were at war, and where the payees of the checks could not receive the value of the checks. The State Department and the Treasury Department called upon the Finance Committee and requested that the bill be held for a while, and subsequently asked that the bill introduced, which dealt only with checks issued by the Veterans' Administration to payees in foreign countries, such as Belgium or France, be amended so as to apply to all checks made payable to payees residing outside the limits of the United States or its possessions, in cases in which the Secretary of the Treasury was reasonably certain that there could be no delivery made of the checks, or that the payees could not receive the benefit of them.

On April 10, 1940, the President issued an Executive order directing that checks be not forwarded to foreign payees residing in the war-torn countries, and the Division of Disbursements in the Treasury now has on hand a considerable number of checks which it cannot deliver, and is advised by the representatives of the State Department in foreign countries that there are some twenty-odd thousand additional checks that cannot be delivered. The Treasury Department, the Veterans' Administration, and the State Department join in the recommendation that this legislation be enacted, which simply authorizes the Veterans' Administrator to leave the checks in the Treasury in a special account until the account of the individual veteran or beneficiary, as the case may be, reaches $1,000. Then it goes into miscellaneous account.

The Disbursing Division of the Treasury is authorized under the bill to pass the checks into a special Treasury account. It has a responsibility for the checks, under the Executive order, which is rather heavy, and it wishes to put the checks in a special Treasury account. Of course, the money is ultimately payable to the payees of the checks whenever the Treasury is satisfied that delivery may be made to the payees in foreign countries. All the bill undertakes to do is simply to legalize and authorize the setting up of special accounts in the Treasury, and the payment of the sums due the payees in foreign countries into such special accounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4353), to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments. In section 2, on page 3, line 9, after the word "amount", to strike out the comma and "exclusive of amounts due under contract of insurance," and at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no check or warrant drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency, or instrumentality thereof, shall be sent from the United States (including its Territories and possessions and the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands) for delivery in a foreign country in any case in which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that postal, transportation, or banking facilities in general, or local conditions in the country to which such check or warrant is to be delivered, are such that there is not a reasonable assurance that the payee will actually receive such check or warrant and be able to negotiate the same for full value.

SEC. 2. Any check or warrant, the sending of which is prohibited under the provisions of section 1 hereof, shall be held by the drawer until the close of the calendar quarter next following its date, during which period such check or warrant may be released for delivery if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that conditions have so changed as to provide a reasonable assurance that the payee will actually receive the check or warrant and be able to negotiate it for full value. At the end of such quarter, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall otherwise direct, the drawer shall transmit all checks and warrants withheld in accordance with the provisions of this act to the drawee thereof, and forward a report stating fully the name and address of the payee; the date, number, and amount of the check or warrant; and the account against which it was drawn, to the Bureau of Accounts of the Treasury Department. The amounts of such undelivered checks and warrants so transmitted shall thereupon be transferred by the drawee from the account of the drawer to a special deposit account with the Treasurer of the United States entitled "Secretary of the Treasury, Proceeds of Withheld Foreign Checks", at which time such checks and warrants shall be marked "Paid into Withheld Foreign Check Account." Thereafter the drawee shall deliver such checks and warrants, together with other paid checks and warrants, to the Comptroller General of the United States, who shall allow credit therefor in the accounts of the drawer and the drawee.

In the case of checks representing payments under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, when the amount transferred to the special deposit account on behalf of any individual payee equals $1,000, the amounts of any further checks, except checks under contracts of insurance, payable to such payee under such laws shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The deposit in the special deposit account or the covering into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, pursuant to the provisions of this section, of the amount of any check issued under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be considered for all purposes, including determinations of rights under section 305 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, as payment to the person entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. Payment of the amounts which have been deposited in the special deposit account in accordance with section 2 hereof shall be made by checks drawn against such special deposit account by the Secretary of the Treasury, only after the claimant shall have established his right to the amount of the check or warrant to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury (or, in the case of claims based upon checks representing payments under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, to the satisfaction of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs) and the Secretary of the Treasury has determined that there is a reasonable assurance that the claimant will actually receive such check in payment of his claim and be able to negotiate the same for full value.

In the case of the death of the payee of any check in payment of pension, compensation, or emergency officers' retirement pay accruing under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, while the amount thereof remains in the special deposit account, such amount shall, subject to the other conditions of this act, be payable as follows: (a) Upon death of the veteran, first to the widow; if there is no widow, to his child or children under the age of 18 at his death; (b) upon death of the widow, to her children under the age of 18 years at her death; (c) upon the death, prior to disbursement of all or any part of the apportioned amount, of an apportionee of a part of the veteran's pension, compensation, or emergency officers' retirement pay, such apportioned amount not disbursed shall be payable to the veteran; (d) in all other cases no disbursement whatsoever of such pension, compensation, or emergency officers' retirement pay shall be made or allowed except so much as may be necessary to reimburse the person who bore the expense of burial: Provided, however, That no disbursement shall be made unless claim therefor be filed in the Veterans' Administration within 1 year from the date of the death of the person entitled and perfected by the submission of the necessary evidence within 6 months from the date of the request of the Veterans' Administration therefor. Such benefits shall include only amounts due and unpaid at the time of death under then existing ratings or decisions.

SEC. 4. The provisions of sections 2 and 3 hereof shall apply to all checks or warrants the delivery of which is now being, or may hereafter be, withheld pursuant to Executive Order No. 8389 of April 10, 1940, as amended, as well as to all checks or warrants the delivery of which is now being withheld pursuant to administrative action, which administrative action is hereby ratified and confirmed: Provided, That any check or warrant the delivery of which has already been withheld for more than one quarter prior to the enactment of this act shall be immediately delivered to the drawee thereof for disposition in accordance with the provisions of sections 2 and 3 hereof: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to dispense with the necessity of obtaining a license to authorize the delivery and payment of checks in payment of claims under section 3 hereof in those cases where a license is now or hereafter may be required by law to authorize such delivery and payment.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he in his discretion may deem necessary or proper for the administration and execution of this act.

SEC. 6. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as affecting or applying to checks or warrants issued in payment of salaries or wages or for goods purchased by the Government of the United States in foreign countries.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I do not quite understand the necessity for a bill of this kind. Surely it is fairly easy to locate a person who is in occupied France. Is it the idea that we do not want to transmit money to someone in occupied France?

Mr. GEORGE. The bill as it was originally introduced applied only to payments made by the Veterans' Bureau to persons within the countries which were then engaged in war, and are now engaged in war, or which have been subjugated. It was found from experience that checks could not be delivered to the payees with any certainty that the actual payees would receive the checks; and if they did receive them, it was also found that for various reasons—including, in some instances, confiscatory taxes—the value of the check would not be realized by the payee. It was therefore thought best to prevent the sending out of the checks, and to place the checks or the funds in the Treasury so as to protect the payees.

Mr. TAFT. I have in mind the case of a private annuity of a woman in France who has no other means of support. It has been exceedingly difficult to deliver to her the payments on an annuity of about a thousand dollars a year. I see no reason why she should not receive the annuity. I see no reason why checks should not go through if the recipients want to receive them. I cannot understand the theory. I suppose it applies to England also; but why should not the checks go through? If the payee does not endorse a check, it cannot be cashed, and it can later be replaced by another check. As a matter of fact, we can tranmit money to private individuals in Germany today, but we cannot transmit it to persons in occupied France, except for the relaxation in the regulations which was made yesterday.

Mr. GEORGE. As a matter of fact, money may be transmitted to many countries, but there is no assurance that a great part of it will not be taken away by the tax gatherer. That was found to be true particularly in those areas which had been occupied by Russia following the occupancy of Latvia and other small countries by the Russian Government.

Mr. TAFT. Is the bill intended to apply merely to a case here and there, or is it intended to be practically a universal limitation on the sending of such checks? I think many persons are solely dependent on such checks. If they cannot get out of the countries where they are, how are they to live?

Mr. GEORGE. The bill provides expressly that the check may be passed into the Treasury only when there is no reasonable assurance of delivery or realization upon the check.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. M. HURLEY AND JOE WHITSON

The bill (H. R. 775) for the relief of W. M. Hurley and Joe Whitson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUTHER HADEN

The bill (H. R. 8743) for the relief of Luther Haden was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA PAONE

The bill (H. R. 4954) for the relief of Rosa Paone was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEVE ZEGURA, JR., AND B. DRAGOMIR ZEGURA

The bill (H. R. 8830) to amend the records at the port of New York to show the admission of Steve Zegura, Jr., and B. Dragomir Zegura as aliens admitted for permanent residence was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICHOLAS G. KARAS

The bill (H. R. 8906) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Nicholas G. Karas was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HJALMAR M. SEBY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3729), for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments. On page 1, line 5, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$31,000" and insert "$14,369.61"; in line 7, after the word "Texas", to strike out "on account of" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for"; on page 2, line 10, after the name "Hjalmar M. Seby", to strike out "; and (5) failure of United States Government representatives to accord him, the said Hjalmar M. Seby, credit for increased prices of materials under the terms of the National Recovery Act" and to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $14,369.61 to Hjalmar M. Seby, general contractor, of Abilene, Tex., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages and losses sustained by him at the hands of representatives of the United States Government through (1) unjust cancelation of contract No. 4646, United States Government form No. P. W. A. 51, for extension and remodeling United States post-office building, Vernon, Tex., known as Public Works Administration project No. 41; (2) failure of United States Government representatives to pay him for work done and materials furnished; (3) improper interference by United States Government representatives with him in the performance of his functions and duties as contractor under contract beforementioned; and (4) confiscation by United States Government representatives of materials and tools belonging to said Hjalmar M. Seby: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. I have read the very numerous reports from various departments, and from the Comptroller General, and they are all adverse.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I say to the Senator that if there ever was a case of bureaucratic oppression and tyranny, it is this one. Generally one bureaucrat sustains another.

Mr. Hjalmar Seby, the beneficiary of this bill, a general contractor of Abilene, Tex., contracted with the United States to rebuild and remodel the post-office building at Vernon, Tex., and also to construct a large addition thereto.

He was awarded the contract on November 28, 1933. He was then living in Abilene, Tex., was 54 years of age, and had been in the general contracting business for upward of 30 years. He had an excellent reputation for honesty and ability in his chosen profession; he had constructed on contract many fine buildings in Texas, including the Fine Arts Building of Simmons University and the Administration Building of Abilene Christian College, both of which involved much larger construction than did the Vernon post-office contract. Among other buildings, he had constructed a girls' dormitory at the McMurray College in Abilene, Tex.

His bankers, neighbors, and those for whom he had constructed buildings all gave him the highest recommendation as to ability and integrity. He had never before had a Government contract.

Mr. Seby was by birth a Norwegian, coming to this country in 1902 and becoming a naturalized citizen on June 20, 1910. He volunteered for service in the armed forces of the United States in the first World War. He was accepted and recommended for a commission in the stevedore and labor battalions on October 26, 1918. The commission was issued, but not signed before the armistice.

Mr. Seby commenced work on the Vernon, Tex., post office in February 1934. At that time the National Industrial Relations Act was in effect. The Government sent one of its officials as its construction engineer to the project.

Mr. Seby was the subject of attempted bribery by this construction engineer, and this engineer, in an attempt to force Seby to pay him money or give him property, such as free gasoline or an automobile, continually interfered with and seriously delayed him in the construction of this post-office building. This engineer caused changes to be made in the construction of the building that were contrary to the contract specifications.

From that time on the evidence discloses a systematic attempt to drive Mr. Seby out of this contract.

On or about August 16, 1934, a special agent of the Public Works Administration commenced investigating Mr. Seby on Seby's alleged violations of the then-existent N. I. R. A. Code with regard to the hours he allowed labor to work. A few days later Mr. Seby was arrested by virtue of a warrant issued on an affidavit made by this agent and was forced to absent himself from his work for several days. The Federal grand jury, however, refused an indictment against Mr. Seby after going into the situation.

On August 28, another construction engineer was sent to the job, the former engineer having been dismissed. This second engineer caused newspaper items to appear in Vernon that Seby had been arrested on this labor charge, and worst of all this engineer telegraphed the companies supplying materials to Mr. Seby, intimating that he was financially insolvent, they had best be careful in dealings with him, and told them of Mr. Seby's arrest, not adding that he had been exonerated, and said that he was facing a loss of his contract. As a natural result of this Mr. Seby had trouble securing credit from these companies and securing necessary materials. In fact his credit and name were finally destroyed, a credit and name it had taken him 30 years to build, and he has been unable to obtain work since.

Finally payments due him by the Government were withheld and he was forced to surrender the work. The Government seized his office, equipment, and materials, and eventually the bonding company took charge.

The man was ruined. He had put all he had into this project. I looked into his case and came to the conclusion that he should have $31,000 from the Government. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], to whom the bill was referred as a member of the Claims Committee, reduced the amount to $14,000 stating virtually that this was the minimum which Mr. Seby ought to be paid now by the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave to attend a conference on the tax bill. I know nothing about the case. In hastily examining the report I find that Mr. Elliott the Acting Comptroller General, the engineer, and Alan Johnstone, the general counsel, have recommended against it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They supported the reports which came in from the field. I do not suppose they had personal knowledge of the situation.

Mr. KING. I know the evils of bureaucracy; and if the Senator contends that this is a bureaucratic imposition, I am inclined to support his views.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. REED. I was about to ask the Senator from Texas, if this man was such a good character, why he made a claim for $31,000, whereas the Committee on Claims has allowed him only $14,000?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was the finding of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. He felt that that was the least Mr. Seby ought to be given. It was my judgment that he ought to have had $31,000, the entire amount which I was convinced he lost. Seby himself claimed $42,000 and substantiated it with evidence he presented to the Treasury.

Mr. REED. Only because of my belief in the unquestioned integrity of the Senator from Texas will I withhold objection to this bill. I think it is a bad thing.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. How long ago did this transaction take place?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In 1934; and Mr. Seby has been trying to obtain a settlement ever since.

Mr. WILEY. Has any action been taken to punish those who were in a position of trust with the Government, and who set out to ruin this man?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Apparently there was a conspiracy. Officials evidently interacted with one another and evidently had understandings with one another.

Mr. WILEY. From what the Senator was reading. I thought he was describing an episode in Russia.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It sounds like it. I have not given all the facts, all the impositions and persecutions. To save time, I have given only samples of what Mr. Seby underwent. Today he is a ruined and financially broken man at 61. He was one of the most prosperous, able, and successful contractors of west Texas.

Mr. WILEY. I can fully appreciate the Senator's viewpoint in relation to Mr. Seby. I am interested in what has been shown. If we now have a condition in this country under which Government employees and Government agencies may persecute a man and use grand juries and instrumentalities of government to ruin him, it is about time the Senate of the United States investigated the situation, brought the real culprits before the bar of justice and put them in prison where they belong.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. These are troublous times, and the way for the Government to remain intact is to have men in the public service who are intact mentally and morally.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Again I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. Apparently, we have in this instance men whose business it was to see that they were lining their own pockets and persecuting men who wanted to be honest.

I know nothing about the merits of the bill, but I think the facts as given here should be investigated by the proper authorities and further evidence should be presented to this body so that we may determine our course.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am in thorough agreement with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question. Did I understand the Senator from Texas to contend that there was some sort of conspiracy against this contractor indulged in by officials of the Federal Government, including the Comptroller General's Office?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No. The Comptroller General evidently accepted the report of the bonding company which seemed to be a conspirator against Mr. Seby also.

Mr. NORRIS. He would not listen to Seby and evidently has decided, as I understand it, to support the conspirators. Did the committee call these men before it and have them testify?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was not on the committee. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] was a member of the Committee on Claims who looked into the matter and made the favorable report. His report specifically reviews the evidence; in fact, my remarks have been based largely on his report.

Mr. NORRIS. Has it been contended that these Government officials formed a conspiracy against the other man who had not violated the law?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is my opinion that what they did to the contractor, Mr. Seby, amounted to conspiracy.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the nature of their conspiracy? What was behind it? What did they claim?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They asked that they be given cash, gasoline, an automobile, and the use of Mr. Seby's organization for their benefit. It was graft.

Mr. NORRIS. Did their superior officers have their attention called to the fact that some officials of the Government in subordinate positions had been trying to graft on the contractors and get them to compensate them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They had their attention called to it, and at one time they dismissed one of the agents. Later, I am advised, he showed up in another branch of the service.

Mr. NORRIS. That was not removing him.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The man who took his job seemed to be of the same color.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot yet understand why the officials above these subordinate officials having their attention called to the fact that they had under them employees guilty of a conspiracy, and of trying to rob an honest man, have taken no action. It is quite evident that if they did their duty these men would be sent to the penitentiary or at least removed from office, it seems to me.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, what has been done along that line?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The case only came to my attention a few months ago, and I am not through with it, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE TO VIRGINIA OF PORTION OF NAVAL RESERVATION AT DAHLGREN, VA.

The bill (H. R. 9636) authorizing the conveyance to the Commonwealth of Virginia of a portion of the naval reservation known as Naval Proving Ground, Dahlgren, Va., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY

The bill (S. 4207) to provide uniformity in temporary promotions in the Army of the United States in time of emergency was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Texas desired that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the bill has been taken care of in another bill which has been passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The substance of this bill was placed in the second supplemental appropriation bill as a rider and became a law. So this bill may be postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4207 is indefinitely postponed.

COMMANDANTS OF NAVAL DISTRICTS

The bill (S. 4247) to repeal the first proviso to the appropriations for "Miscellaneous expenses," as contained in title I of the Naval Appropriations Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941 (Public, No. 588, 76th Cong., 3d sess.) was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I inquire why the proviso of the appropriations act referred to should be repealed? I should like an explanation of why the bill seeks to repeal the limitation placed originally on the use of the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me state the purpose of the bill.

The bill was introduced at the request of the Navy Department. The committee have been advised that the bill meets with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

The purpose of the bill is to repeal a restriction in the Naval Appropriation Act which has been in effect since the act of July 12, 1921, the Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1922. This restrictive clause prevents the Secretary of the Navy from assigning an officer as commandant of a naval district unless he should be ordered to command a navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base, if any of these be in the naval district involved, and is a measure which is not adaptable during war or national emergency.

During war or national emergency the military phase of the district organization increases enormously and requires the individual and undivided attention of the commandant, which is not possible when he is responsible for the administrative functioning of another activity, such as a navy yard or naval operating base. In the interests of national defense it is necessary that district commandants be relieved of the details of work or administration of other agencies or subdivisions within their jurisdiction.

Let me illustrate: In the Boston naval district there is a navy yard at Boston. The Secretary of the Navy can designate only one commandant for that whole naval district and the commandant of the district must also be commandant of the navy yard. In that naval district there is a navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H.; there is at Newport, R. I., a naval torpedo station; there is at New London a submarine base; and there are other naval stations, one at Hingham, for storage purposes, and there is also now an auxiliary navy yard at Boston. I refer to those as an example.

Because of the great volume of work, it is impossible for the commandant of the naval district and also commandant of the Boston Navy Yard properly to attend to all the work devolved upon him. Over his desk must come not only matters affecting the Boston Navy Yard but also those affecting the entire district, including a naval base almost as large as the yard which he commands.

This amendment would permit the Secretary of the Navy to assign an officer as commandant of the naval district independent of the commandant of the Boston Navy Yard or the Portsmouth Navy Yard or at the New London submarine base or at the Newport torpedo base if, in his opinion, it was essential and necessary.

The bill has a different objective from what it appears to have. It really amounts to permitting the appointment of responsible officers to command large naval districts, something which is now forbidden by reason of the provision in the appropriation act.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator that that would certainly be true if we were to add to the language which is used some clause to the effect, "Provided, That there is already a commandant in the yard or district where the appropriation is to be utilized." It is not proposed to say that, but, quite to the contrary, what is proposed is to repeal a limitation on the use of an appropriation. While the objective, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, is perfectly correct——

Mr. WALSH. And desirable.

Mr. DANAHER. There is no reason why the money upon which Congress placed a limitation cannot be spent whether there is one commandant or fifty. In point of fact, there is no reason why there should be any.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator suggest appropriate language? This bill was drafted by the legal staff of the Navy Department, and I suppose was confined strictly to the objective they had in mind.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator see the force of the point I now raise?

Mr. WALSH. I take it, that the Senator is of the opinion that the removal of this limitation might be abused?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me point out to the Senator, if he will allow me, that we previously provided that none of this fund could be used for certain purposes unless there was a certain type of officer who would be in charge of the yard in question. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. DANAHER. Now by this bill it is proposed to repeal that limitation. Therefore, there is no longer any limitation on the appropriation to be utilized under the head of "Miscellaneous" in any yard or in any district, regardless of how many commandants there may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I object; but I withhold the objection until I can discuss the matter for a moment with the Senator from Massachusetts.

I cannot quite get the philosophy of this bill. I assume that a naval officer of sufficiently high rank is placed in charge of a naval district. I also assume that a naval officer of proper rank is placed in charge of a naval station, or reserve station, or any other kind of station that might happen to be included in the district. It seems to me the point made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] is very well taken.

Mr. WALSH. But the present law requires every expenditure by the commandant in a given district to go to the desk and to be acted upon by a commandant who is already swamped with work. The purpose of this bill is, in the interest of the national defense, to permit a division and a breaking-up of these large districts, which operate successfully and well in time of peace; but now it is necessary to make a subdivision of them, and we cannot do it under the existing law.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that we have what are known as corps areas, and within those corps areas in the Army are forts. An officer of proper rank is in command of a corps area, and he is also in command of all the things in the corps area; but in charge of each separate fort, again, is an officer of proper rank.

I cannot see the philosophy of the bill. I think the point made by the Senator from Connecticut is well taken; and I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. BYRNES subsequently said: Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to the bill which he endeavored to have considered a few minutes ago. I should like to advise the Senator that the last appropriation bill passed by the Senate embodies the exact language of the bill in question, and it is now the law. In view of that fact, I suggest that the Senator might have the bill stricken from the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Very well, Mr. President, I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4247 will be indefinitely postponed.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONED AND WARRANT OFFICERS IN NAVAL RESERVE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4246) to provide for the appointment of certain persons as commissioned or warrant officers in the Naval Reserve, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the word "not", to strike out "thereby"; and, in line 13, after the word "allowances", to insert "to which they would have been entitled had they continued on active duty in their regular status", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter commissioned warrant and warrant officers and enlisted men of the Regular Navy and enlisted men of the Fleet Reserve may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, be issued appointments as commissioned or warrant officers in the Naval Reserve, under which appointments they may be required to serve only in time of war or when in the opinion of the President a national emergency exists: Provided, That while serving on active duty under appointments made as herein provided, the regular status of such appointees shall be considered as in abeyance, and upon termination of active duty thereunder they shall revert to the status held by them immediately preceding such active duty: Provided further, That active duty in the Naval Reserve performed under the provisions of this act shall be counted for all purposes as though it had been rendered by the individuals concerned in the status held by them immediately preceding such active duty.

SEC. 2. Appointees called to active duty as commissioned or warrant officers of the Naval Reserve as provided by section 1 of this act shall not suffer any reduction in pay and allowances to which they would have been entitled had they continued on active duty in their regular status: Provided, That if while so serving on active duty they contract sickness or disease or sustain injury, or die as a result of such sickness, disease, or injury, they or their beneficiaries shall be entitled to all the benefits provided for commissioned or warrant officers of the Naval Reserve or to the same benefits to which they would have been entitled had such active service been performed in their prior status as commissioned warrant or warrant officers or enlisted men of the Regular Navy, or the Fleet Reserve, whichever may be the greater.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF NAVAL ACADEMY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) providing for the celebration in 1945 of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to provide for the commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the United States Naval Academy, there is hereby established a commission to be known as the United States Naval Academy Centennial Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"), to be composed of three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the person occupying the office of President of the United States on the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, the Governor of the State of Maryland, the Secretary of the Navy, the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy, and five persons to be appointed by the President. The members of the Commission shall select, from among their number, a chairman and a vice chairman. The Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy shall appoint, subject to the approval of the chairman and vice chairman of the Commission, a secretary for the Commission. If any vacancy occurs in the office of secretary, such vacancy shall be filled in the manner provided for the original appointment. The authority of the Commission under this joint resolution shall cease and terminate on June 30, 1946.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Commission to formulate plans for the celebration to be held on or about October 10, 1945, in commemoration of such anniversary.

SEC. 3. The Commission is authorized to cooperate with the State of Maryland, the city of Annapolis, the Navy Athletic Association, and other organizations, in order to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 4. The members of the Commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission.

SEC. 5. The Commission is authorized to make such expenditures for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution as it may deem advisable, but no expenditure shall be made except for the purposes authorized by a majority of the members thereof. Expenditures of the Commission shall be paid upon the presentation of vouchers approved by the chairman of the Commission.

SEC. 6. The Commission shall make a report to the Congress, as soon as practicable, of the plans formulated and the recommendations of the Commission for the observance of such anniversary.

SEC. 7. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000, to be expended by the Commission for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

ADVANCEMENT ON RETIRED LIST OF CERTAIN NAVY OR MARINE CORPS OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 9688) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps retired pursuant to the provisions of section 13 or 15 (e) of the act of June 23, 1938, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps who has heretofore been placed on the retired list pursuant to the provisions of section 13 or 15 (e) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), or both of such sections, shall receive the retired pay of a rear admiral of the upper half.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9854) to authorize certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy, the United States Marine Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve to accept such medals, orders, decorations, and presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER and other Senators. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK HALL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7283) for the relief of Frank Hall, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,844.29" and insert "$3,700", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank Hall, of New Paris, Ohio, the sum of $3,700. Such sum represents and shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for loss incurred in the destruction by fire of real and chattel property on or about February 18, 1939, said fire resulting from actions of an agent or agents of the Soil Conservation Service, United States Department of Agriculture: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN J. MURPHY

The bill (H. R. 5365) for the relief of John J. Murphy was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS ST. JACQUES

The bill (H. R. 5771) for the relief of Louis St. Jacques was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT DEPONTI

The bill (H. R. 5776) for the relief of Albert DePonti was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS A. CHARLAND

The bill (H. R. 6605) for the relief of Louis A. Charland was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9766) to direct the deportation of Harry Renton Bridges was announced as next in order.

Mr. WAGNER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

I. M. COOK, J. J. ALLEN, AND RADIATOR SPECIALTY CO.

The bill (S. 4250) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgments upon the claims against the United States of I. M. Cook, J. J. Allen, and the Radiator Specialty Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgments upon the claims against the United States of I. M. Cook, of Charlotte, N. C.; J. J. Allen, of Charlotte, N. C.; and the Radiator Specialty Co., of Charlotte, N. C., for damages sustained by each by reason of a fire which destroyed a building, known as the Cook Body Co. Building, in Charlotte, N. C., in December 1938, such fire having started from an oil stove in a part of such building which was occupied by the Works Progress Administration.

SEC. 2. In the determination of such claims, the United States shall be held liable for such damages, and for any acts committed by any of its officers and employees, to the same extent as if the United States were a private person.

SEC. 3. Suits upon such claims may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claims, and appeals from, and payment of, any judgments thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of paragraph "Twentieth" of the Judicial Code, as amended.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4203) to provide for the employment on active duty of retired personnel of the Regular Army, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a similar House bill will be here shortly. It will be best, therefore, to have this bill passed over without prejudice, and kept on the calendar until the House bill arrives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

DISCONTINUANCE OF CERTAIN PROFESSIONAL EXAMINATIONS IN THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4224) to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps during time of war or emergency declared by Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "declared by", to insert "the President or by", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in time of war or during an emergency declared by the President or by Congress, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps, except those relating to physical examination.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to know from the Senator from Texas whether or not this bill will instantly become law and become operative should we pass it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It must pass the House.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; I mean, when it passes the Congress?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. In other words, the emergency referred to and defined in the bill is now in existence. Is that it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I understand, a limited emergency has been proclaimed by the President.

Mr. DANAHER. There is nothing in the bill about "limited." I want to know if the Senator understands that we are now operating under an emergency in this country.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think so.

Mr. DANAHER. We are doing it, therefore, I take it, pursuant to a declaration by Congress?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the passage of the so-called National Guard bill and the passage of the draft bill indicate that Congress considers that we are in an emergency.

Mr. DANAHER. Directing the Senator's attention to line 4, where the bill provides, if it becomes operative, that we shall dispense with the regular order of examination for promotions when the Congress declares an emergency to exist, does the Senator understand that the Congress has ever declared any such emergency?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it did; yes, sir.

Mr. DANAHER. When?

Mr. SHEPPARD. By implication, when it passed the two bills to which I have referred.

Mr. DANAHER. "By implication." Could we, therefore, properly strike out the words "the President" and still have the bill operative?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill itself was prepared by the War Department, and refers both to the President and to Congress. I do not think there should be any change in these respects.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator understand that we are operating under an emergency declared by the President?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Both by the President and by Congress.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not understand how the President can declare an emergency, or what effect that declaration has. There are a number of acts which permit the President under certain circumstances, for the purposes of those acts, to declare emergencies. There is no law permitting him to declare a limited emergency, or a general emergency, or any other kind of an emergency.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I understand, in September he declared what he called a limited emergency.

Mr. TAFT. He did, but there is no law authorizing him to do that, and there is no law giving any effect to such a declaration. As a matter of fact, the original declaration of a limited emergency applied to certain particular laws which state that when he declared a thing, certain other things should happen.

It seems to me this bill certainly should clearly state whether the President shall declare a general emergency, what kind of an emergency, or whether it is an emergency declared merely for the purpose of this particular bill, because I do not understand that there is any law in existence giving the President power to declare emergencies merely because he thinks there is an emergency of some kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. REED. Certainly; I will withhold it.

Mr. HILL. May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Texas?

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs amended the bill by inserting in the bill, after the words "declared by," the words "the President or by," meaning that the emergency had to be declared by the President or by Congress. Why not further insert—I think that might meet the objection in the minds of some Senators—the words "for the purposes of this act"?

Mr. TAFT. That would meet my objection.

Mr. HILL. That would meet the objection. I can see no reason why that language should not go in, and I think the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I accept the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire a little more information. As I read the bill, which is very short, there still is required a physical examination of officers to be promoted. I inquire of the Senator from Alabama whether I am correct in that understanding.

Mr. HILL. The Senator certainly is correct in that understanding. All that the bill would do would be to permit the War Department, in case of an emergency declared by Congress and declared by the President for the purposes of the act, to waive the professional examination.

The only officers in the Army who are required today to stand a professional examination for promotion are the officers of the Medical and Dental Corps of the Army. No other officers are required to stand any professional examinations. Now we are getting ready to expand or greatly increase the Army, and these promotions ought to be stepped up. To have to hold a large number of examinations at the present time would delay things. Certainly, after all is said and done, the bill is not one of very great consequence; but it would permit promotions of medical and dental officers to go through just as promotions now go through for all the other officers in the Army.

Mr. REED. Let me inquire of the distinguished Senator from Alabama whether there is not this distinction between medical officers, dental officers, veterinary officers, and the other officers of the Army, in that other officers of the Army are educated in a Government school, namely, at West Point, and that they have to have a certain length of service and certain qualifications for promotion, but the Government takes its medical, its dental, and its veterinary officers without such Government training. Am I correct?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that only about 35 percent of the officers in the Army are educated and trained by the Government. Between 60 and 65 percent of the officers come in without ever having gone through West Point or any other Government school. The officers in the dental and medical corps of the Army have to undergo a very rigid examination before they come into the Army, and they are all graduates of grade A medical or dental schools. They are graduated from some of the best medical and dental schools in the country, such as Harvard University, the University of West Virginia, the University of Wisconsin, the University of Kansas, and others. They have to graduate from a grade A dental or medical school before they can get commissions in the Army.

In addition to that, we have a school for doctors and dentists at Carlisle, Pa., as the Senator knows, where these officers are sent for training in special courses. I think the requirements for dental and medical officers in the Army today are certainly just as rigid as those for officers in other branches of the Army, and, indeed, I think they are far more rigid.

Mr. REED. Officers in the Army are sent to the Officers' School at Fort Leavenworth, or they may be sent to some other school; they may be sent to a quartermasters' school; they may be sent to any one of various kinds of schools. Can the Senator from Alabama say whether the officers who would be covered by the bill now before us are required to take any training after they have entered the Army?

Mr. HILL. Certainly, as I have just stated.

Mr. REED. Will not the Senator from Alabama please point out where the school is?

Mr. HILL. It is at Carlisle, Pa. The Army has a fine school there for doctors and dentists, where we send these officers, where all kinds of courses are prescribed for officers of both the Dental Corps and the Medical Corps of the Army. In addition, as the Senator knows, there are great Army hospitals, such as the Walter Reed Hospital, which is a large medical center. Officers are detailed there, and there they take courses in all kinds of training and experience.

Mr. REED. I still have my doubts about the bill, but in deference to my good friend from Alabama and my good friend from Texas, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama intend to offer an amendment?

Mr. HILL. I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after the word "discretion", it is proposed to insert the words "for the purposes of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question, having in mind the possibility of a further amendment, and I direct my inquiry to the Senator from Texas. I notice that the bill was reported on August 23, having first been reported favorably by the committee as of July 30, apparently. I am not certain of that, but I think that is accurate. That was before we passed the National Guard bill, covering the National Guard into the Federal Army. I should like to know whether or not this bill, if enacted, would apply to officers of the National Guard in the divisions of service described in the bill.

Before the Senator answers the question, I point out that within 24 hours I read a dispatch in the papers to the effect that one of the leading adjutant generals of the National Guard already claims that the National Guard officers are being discriminated against by the Army in the matter of promotions. In order that there may be no inequity in that particular, I think we should amend this bill further, if the Senator from Texas agrees, to include officers of the National Guard who are covered into the Federal service pursuant to the recent act of Congress.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall be glad to accept such an amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily, and I will prepare the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. DANAHER subsequently said: A few moments ago I asked the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to allow a bill to be passed over until I had prepared an amendment. The amendment is completed, and I should ask that the Senator recur to Senate bill 4224, Calendar No. 2144.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4224) to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps during time of war or emergency declared by Congress.

Mr. DANAHER. I submit an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "Army", it is proposed to insert "and in the National Guard of the United States."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, that amendment is entirely acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in time of war or during an emergency declared by the President or by Congress, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion in the Regular Army and in the National Guard of the United States of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps, except those relating to physical examination.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 3493 OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE, FORMERLY SECTION 404 OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

The bill (H. R. 10080) to amend section 3493 of the Internal Revenue Code, formerly section 404 of the Sugar Act of 1937, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. REED. Yes; I am very happy to withhold my objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department and of every one interested in it. It does not deal with the question of sugar as sugar, as may be thought from its title, but it deals with the matter of extension of time in which certain claims may be filed. I cannot see any reason for objection being made to the bill.

Mr. REED. What is the amount involved?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know.

Mr. McNARY. May I add a word? This is a House bill. It simply provides that the claimant be given one additional year to file a claim for rebate in connection with exportation of sugar. There is no money involved in the bill. It simply gives the claimant an opportunity to make his claim; giving him an extension of 1 year in which to do so. The bill passed the House. It involves no liability on the Government.

Mr. REED. I am very happy, on the assurance of the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], to withdraw my objection. One could not find the purpose of the bill from a reading of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10080) to amend section 3493 of the Internal Revenue Code, formerly section 404 of the Sugar Act of 1937, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot finish the call of the calendar today. It will have to go over. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, desires to have immediate consideration of the so-called Habana treaty, which was unanimously reported from the committee the other day, and which it is important to get action upon as soon as possible.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the able Senator from Kentucky when he proposes to conclude the consideration of the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. We shall try to conclude the calendar Monday, without having a session tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. With the assurance that we shall proceed with the calendar Monday, I shall not present a unanimous-consent request with reference to taking up a bill out of order. I wish to say, however, that Calendar No. 2251, House bill 10412, is a bill of general importance, relating to housing in connection with the defense program, and it is highly necessary to get it through quickly, because we must provide an appropriation in the pending deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say I am familiar with that bill, and I am for it. I can assure the Senator from Texas that we will go ahead with the calendar on Monday. I say that because I had previously indicated to Senators that we would not have a session tomorrow, and I wish to keep my promise in that respect.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

PERSONAL STATEMENT—ARTICLE IN WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. BARKLEY. At the beginning of the session today I called the attention of the Senate to an article appearing in this morning's Times-Herald in which I was misrepresented and misquoted. The Times-Herald has in its later edition an article correcting the article in the morning edition, in which it takes full responsibility for the omission of an entire sentence, which places an entirely different meaning on the article as it appeared in the morning edition. It also appears that Mr. Magruder, whose name appears at the top of the article, did not actually write it. Mr. Magruder, I am informed, is not a regular correspondent of the morning Times-Herald, but is a correspondent of the United Press, which furnishes to the Times-Herald articles of various sorts; that is, its service is used by the morning newspapers. While the article published in this morning's paper, of which I complained, was on the front page, this correction is inside somewhere, which I presume will be seen if everyone reads every page of the newspaper. But I am glad to exonerate Mr. Magruder, and I am glad that the Times-Herald has made the correction of the article of which I complained earlier today.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that the story to which he makes reference was not a local story written by a reporter of the Times-Herald?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was a story, as I am informed, written by a reporter for the United Press, whose service is used by the Morning Times-Herald. Whether that article went out over the country under a United Press date or headline, I do not know. I have not seen any other newspaper, and I do not know whether or not it appeared elsewhere, but the newspaper of which I complain here in Washington has made the correction, and I am glad to acknowledge it. The newspaper states that it was a mistake in the make-up. It may have been made by the linotype operator; it may have been made by somebody else, but it contained an omission of a vital sentence, which makes a tremendous difference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me say, I was present on the floor during the colloquy, and I will say that this morning when I read that newspaper story I noticed the omission of the significant sentence of the Senator from Kentucky. If the article was written by a reporter for the United Press, and the mistake was occasioned by dropping a paragraph in the make-up, then undoubtedly no fault attaches to the correspondent of the United Press who wrote the story.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been shown the article as it was prepared for use, and it seems that the omission occurred somewhere in the composition room of the local newspaper.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. As the distinguished Senator from Kentucky knows, in addition to being a farmer I am a newspaperman of sorts, and while the article did do the Senator an injuctice, which I am very happy the Times-Herald has corrected, I wanted to tell the Senator that in the confusion on the floor yesterday and the running colloquy it would not have been a difficult matter for a man in the Press Gallery to become confused with respect to the question which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] directed to the Senator from Kentucky, and which the Senator from Kentucky in turn directed to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

I stated this morning, and I repeat now, that the article did do the Senator from Kentucky an injustice, which should be corrected, and, having had a part in the discussion yesterday, insofar as anything I can say, I want that injustice corrected, and I am very happy that even so much progress has been made in correcting it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that in the confusion here our friends in the gallery may at times have difficulty. I want to pay them the tribute of saying that they, I believe, try their level best to be accurate. My experience and my association with the boys who sit up in the gallery, which has been more intimate in recent years than it used to be, has been most delightful, and I feel that I can say without reservation that for the most part I have great confidence in them, and I believe that they try to report accurately what occurs here. The article that went out from the Capitol here was correct. The mistake was made somewhere else, not here.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator, having had some newspaper publishing experience, as well as having been a working newspaperman, that, after all, I know of no body of men who try more earnestly to get the facts correctly than working newspapermen, and that includes the Press Gallery of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad the Senator says "working" newspapermen.

Mr. REED. Yes; of whom I am one.

Mr. BARKLEY. The boys who sit up in the Press Gallery here are working newspapermen.

Mr. REED. They are, most of them.

Mr. WHEELER. That does not apply to all the columnists, however.

Mr. REED. I meant by "working" newspapermen, men who write the day's facts; what we call "spot news." I think the men who write spot news do a magnificent job.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a great difference between those who write "spot" news and those who write "spotty" news. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kentucky may have it his own way.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on behalf of the State Society of Minnesota, I have been requested to announce that memorial services for the late Senator Lundeen will be conducted at 4 o'clock next Sunday afternoon at the Augustana Lutheran Church in Washington. The State society invites any Members of the Senate who desire to be present to attend the services.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Louis Albert Ledbetter, Oklahoma National Guard, to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Gerald A. Gleeson, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, vice J. Cullen Ganey (appointed district judge).

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Lt. Comdr. Albert M. Martinson to be a commander in the Coast Guard, to rank as such from September 1, 1940.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

PROVISIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF EUROPEAN COLONIES AND POSSESSIONS IN THE AMERICAS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive O, Seventy-sixth Congress, Provisional Administration of European Colonies and Possessions in the Americas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the Convention, Executive O (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a convention entitled "Convention on the provisional administration of European colonies and possessions in the Americas," signed at Habana on July 30, 1940, which was read the second time, as follows:

CONVENTION ON THE PROVISIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF EUROPEAN COLONIES AND POSSESSIONS IN THE AMERICAS

The Governments represented at the Second Meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics,

CONSIDERING:

One. That the American Republics have formulated at the Second Consultative Meeting the Act of Habana with regard to the destiny of colonies of non-American countries located in this hemisphere as well as with respect to the provisional administration of such colonies;

Two. That as a result of the events which are taking place in the European continent situations may develop in the territories of the possessions which some of the belligerent nations have in the Americas which may extinguish or materially impair the sovereignty which they exercise over them, or leave their government without a leader, thus creating a state of danger to the peace of the continent and a state of affairs in which the rule of law, order, and respect for life, liberty and the property of inhabitants may disappear;

Three. That the American Republic consider that force cannot constitute the basis of rights, and they condemn all violence whether under the form of conquest, of stipulations which may have been imposed by the belligerents in the clauses of treaty, or by any other process;

Four. That any transfer, or attempted transfer, of the sovereignty, jurisdiction, possession or any interest in or control over any such region to another non-American State, would be regarded by the American Republics as against American sentiments and principles and the rights of American States to maintain their security and political independence;

Five. That no such transfer or attempt to transfer or acquire any interest or right in any such region, directly or indirectly, would be recognized or accepted by the American Republics no matter what form was employed to attain such purposes;

Six. That by virtue of a principle of American international law, recognized by various conferences, the acquisition of territories by force cannot be permitted;

Seven. That the American Republics, through their respective government agencies, reserve the right to judge whether any transfer or attempted transfer of sovereignty, jurisdiction, cession or incorporation of geographic regions in the Americas, possessed by European countries up to September 1, 1939, has the effect of impairing their political independence even though no formal transfer or change in the status of such region or regions shall have taken place;

Eight. That in the cases foreseen, as well as any others which might leave the government of such regions without a leader, it is, therefore, necessary to establish a provisional administrative regime for such regions until such time as their definitive regime is established by the free determination of their people;

Nine. That the American Republics, as an international community which acts strongly and integrally, using as a basis political and juridical principles which they have applied for more than a century, have the unquestionable right, in order to preserve their unity and security, to take such regions under their administration and to deliberate as to their destinies, in accordance with their respective degrees of political and economic development;

Ten. That the provisional and transitory character of the measures agreed to does not imply an oversight or abrogation of the principle of nonintervention which regulates inter-American life, a principle proclaimed by the American Institute, recognized by the meeting of jurists held at Rio de Janeiro and fully reaffirmed at the Seventh International American Conference held at Montevideo;

Eleven. That this community has therefore international juridical capacity to act in this manner;

Twelve. That in this case, the most appropriate regime is that of a provisional administration; and that this system entails no danger because the American Republics do not entertain any purpose whatsoever of territorial aggrandizement;

Thirteen. That the establishment of a special provisional regime in the present convention and in the Act of Habana concerning the provisional administration of European colonies and possessions in the Americas does not eliminate or modify the system of consultation agreed upon at Buenos Aires, confirmed at Lima, and practiced at Panama and Habana.

Fourteen. Being desirous of protecting their peace and safety and of promoting the interests of any of the regions herein referred to which may fall within the purview of the foregoing recitations, have resolved to conclude the following convention:

I

If a non-American State shall directly or indirectly attempt to replace another non-American State in the sovereignty or control which it exercised over any territory located in the Americas, thus threatening the peace of the continent, such territory shall automatically come under the provisions of this convention and shall be submitted to a provisional administrative regime.

II

The administration shall be exercised, as may be considered advisable in each case, by one or more American States, with their previous approval.

III

When the administration shall have been established for any region it shall be exercised in the interest of the security of the Americas and for the benefit of the region under administration, with a view to its welfare and progress, until such time as the region is in a position to govern itself or is restored to its former status, whenever the latter is compatible with the security of the American Republics.

IV

The administration of the region shall be exercised under conditions which shall guarantee freedom of conscience and of worship, subject to the regulations which public order and good habits may demand.

V

The administration shall enforce the local laws coordinating them with the purposes of this convention, but it may furthermore adopt such measures as may be necessary to meet situations in which such laws do not exist.

VI

In all that concerns commerce and industry, the American nations shall enjoy the same situation and benefits, and the administrator is forbidden to establish a privileged position for itself or its nationals or for certain states. Open economic relations shall be maintained with all countries on a reciprocity basis.

VII

Natives of the region shall participate, as citizens, in public administration and in the courts of justice without further qualification than their capacity so to do.

VIII

To the extent that it may be practicable, rights of every sort shall be governed by local law and custom, and vested rights shall be protected in accordance with such law.

IX

Forced labor shall be abolished in the regions where it exists.

X

The administration shall provide facilities for education of all kinds with the two-fold purpose of developing the wealth of the region and improving the living conditions of the population, especially as regards public and individual hygiene and preparation for the exercise of political autonomy as soon as possible.

XI

The natives of a region under administration shall have their own Organic Act which the administration shall establish, consulting the people in whatever manner is possible.

XII

The administration shall submit an annual report to the inter-American organization entrusted with the control of the regions under administration, of the manner in which it has fulfilled its functions, attaching thereto copies of its accounts and of the measures adopted in the region during the year.

XIII

The organization referred to in the preceding article shall be competent to take cognizance of the petitions submitted by inhabitants of the region through the medium of the administration, with reference to the exercise of the provisional administration. The administration shall transmit, with this petition, such observations as it may deem proper.

XIV

The first administration shall be granted for a period of three years; at the end of this period, if necessary, it shall be renewed for successive periods not longer than ten years.

XV

The expenses incurred in the exercise of the administration shall be defrayed with the revenues of the region under administration but in case they are insufficient the deficit shall be met by the State or States which act as administrators.

XVI

A commission to be known as the "Inter-American Commission for Territorial Administration" is hereby established, to be composed of a representative from each one of the States which ratifies this convention; it shall be the international organization to which this convention refers. Once this convention has become effective, any country which ratifies it may convoke the first meeting proposing the city in which it is to be held. The Commission shall elect its chairman, complete its organization and fix its definitive seat. Two-thirds of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum and two-thirds of the members present may adopt decisions.

XVII

The Commission is authorized to establish a provisional administration in the regions to which the present convention refers; allow such administration to be exercised by the number of States which it may determine in each case, and supervise its exercise under the term of the preceding articles.

XVIII

None of the provisions contained in the present convention refers to territories or possessions which are the subject of dispute or claims between European powers and one or more of the Republics of the Americas.

XIX

The present convention is open for signature by the American Republics at the City of Habana and shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their constitutional procedures. The Secretary of State of the Republic of Cuba shall transmit at the earliest possible date authentic certified copies to the governments for the aforementioned purpose of ratification. The instrument of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

The present convention shall enter into force when two-thirds of the American Republics have deposited their respective instruments of ratification.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries, having deposited their full powers found to be in due and proper form, sign this convention on behalf of their respective Governments and affix thereto their seals on the dates appearing opposite their signatures.

RESERVATIONS

RESERVATION OF THE CHILEAN DELEGATION

1. The Chilean Delegation, convinced of the necessity of effecting practically the continental solidarity, approves the resolution, making clear that Chile shall only acquire commitments and responsibilities when the said resolutions shall have been ratified by its constitutional organisms.

RESERVATION OF THE ARGENTINE DELEGATION

2. The Delegate of the Argentine Republic in signing this Act places on record that it does not refer to or include the Malvinas Islands, because the latter do not constitute a colony or possession of any European nation, since they are a part of the Argentine territory and are included within its dominion and sovereignty, as was stated at the Panama meeting, which statement he considers reiterated hereby in its entirety, and also with reference to other southern Argentine regions as he has stated in the deliberations of this Commission. He likewise states that the signing of this Act and Resolution does not affect and leaves intact his Government's powers established in the constitutional norms which obtain in Argentina, with respect to the procedure applicable in order that this Act and Resolution may acquire validity, force and effectiveness.

RESERVATION OF THE COLUMBIAN DELEGATION

3. I vote in the affirmative with the suggestion that I shall sign the Convention, subject to the approval by my Government and the constitutional standards of my country.

RESERVATION OF THE VENEZUELAN DELEGATION

4. The Venezuelan Delegation signs with the understanding that the Convention concerning the colonial possessions remains subject to the public powers of the nation, in accordance with its constitutional provisions.

ADDITIONAL RESERVATIONS OF THE CHILEAN DELEGATION

5. The Chilean Delegation, at the time of signing this Convention, in addition to the reservation set forth at yesterday's meeting, makes reservation of Chile's rights in Antarctica.

I, Miguel Angel Campa y Caraveda, Secretary of State of the Republic of Cuba,—CERTIFY: That this is a true copy of the original text of the Convention on Provisional Administration of European Colonies and Possessions in the Americas, signed at Habana by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics or their personal representatives, the thirtieth day of July, nineteen hundred and forty, at the closing session of the Second Meeting of the Mininisters of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics.

For the purpose of notifying the Government of the United States of America, I issue this certification in the City of Habana on the thirtieth day of the month of August, nineteen hundred and forty.

[SEAL] MIGUEL ANGEL CAMPA.

FINAL ACT OF THE SECOND MEETING OF MINISTERS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS, SIGNED IN THE CITY OF HABANA, THE THIRTIETH DAY OF JULY, ONE THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED AND FORTY

XX

ACTS OF HABANA CONCERNING THE PROVISIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF EUROPEAN COLONIES AND POSSESSIONS IN THE AMERICAS

WHEREAS:

1. The status of regions in this continent belonging to European powers is a subject of deep concern to all of the Governments of the American Republics;

2. As a result of the present European war there may be attempts at conquest, which has been repudiated in the international relations of the American Republics, thus placing in danger the essence and pattern of the institutions of America;

3. The doctrine of inter-American solidarity agreed upon at the meetings at Lima and at Panama requires the adoption of a policy of vigilance and defense so that systems or regimes in conflict with their institutions shall not upset the peaceful life of the American Republics, the normal functioning of their institutions, or the rule of law and order;

4. The course of military events in Europe and the changes resulting from them may create the grave danger that European territorial possessions in America may be converted into strategic centers of aggression against nations of the American Continent;

The Second Meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics.

DECLARES:

That when islands or regions in the Americas now under the possession of non-American nations are in danger of becoming the subject of barter of territory or change of sovereignty, the American nations, taking into account the imperative need of continental security and the desires of the inhabitants of the said islands or regions, may set up a regime of provisional administration under the following conditions:

(a) That as soon as the reasons requiring this measure shall cease to exist, and in the event that it would not be prejudicial to the safety of the American Republics, such territories shall, in accordance with the principle reaffirmed by this declaration that peopies of this continent have the right freely to determine their own destinies, be organized as autonomous states if it shall appear that they are able to constitute and maintain themselves in such condition, or be restored to their previous status, whichever of these alternatives shall appear the more practicable and just;

(b) That the regions to which this declaration refers shall be placed temporarily under the provisional administration of the American Republics and this administration shall be exercised with the two-fold purpose of contributing to the security and defense of the Continent, and to the economic, political and social progress of such regions and,

RESOLVES:

To create an emergency committee, composed of one representative of each of the American Republics, which committee shall be deemed constituted as soon as two-thirds of its members shall have been appointed. Such appointments shall be made by the American Republics as soon as possible.

The committee shall meet on the request of any signatory of this resolution.

If it becomes necessary as an imperative emergency measure before the coming into effect of the convention approved by this Consultative Meeting, to apply its provisions in order to safeguard the peace of the continent, taking into account also the desires of the inhabitants of any of the abovementioned regions, the committee shall assume the administration of the region attacked or threatened, acting in accordance with the provisions of the said convention. As soon as the convention comes into effect, the authority and functions exercised by the committee shall be transferred to the Inter-American Commission for Territorial Administration.

Should the need for emergency action be so urgent that action by the committee cannot be awaited, any of the American Republics, individually or jointly with others, shall have the right to act in the manner which its own defense, or that of the continent requires. Should this situation arise, the American Republic or Republics taking action shall place the matter before the committee immediately, in order that it may consider the action taken and adopt appropriate measures.

None of the provisions contained in the present Act refers to territories or possessions which are the subject of dispute or claims between European powers and one or more of the Republics of the Americas.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics or their personal representatives, sign and seal the present Final Act.

Done in the City of Habana, this thirtieth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and forty, in texts in the English, Spanish, Portuguese and French languages,[1] which shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union. The Secretary General of the Meeting shall transmit the original of the present Final Act to the Pan American Union through the intermediary of the Department of State of Cuba.

RESERVATIONS

Reservation of the Argentine Delegation:

2. As to the Act of Habana:

"The Delegate of the Argentine Republic in signing this Act places on record that it does not refer to or include the Malvinas Islands, because the latter do not constitute a colony or possession of any European nation, since they are a part of the Argentine territory and are included within its dominion and sovereignty, as was stated at the Panama meeting, which statement he considers reiterated hereby in its entirety, and also with reference to other southern Argentine regions as he has stated in the deliberations of the Commission. Reservation of the Uruguayan Delegation:

3. As to the Act of Habana (XX):

"The Delegation of the Republic of Uruguay states that the purpose of this Act is to anticipate the carrying out of the Convention approved on this subject, in case it is necessary to apply the Convention before the number of ratifications requisite for its taking effect has been obtained.

"It wishes, therefore, to place on record a reservation respecting the attitude of its Government, under the latter's express instructions, in case it should deem necessary, prior to the application of the Act, to examine the question of whether under the Uruguayan constitutional regime, prior legislative ratification is required."

Reservation of the Colombian Delegation:

7. As to the Act of Habana (XX) and the Declaration concerning Reciprocal Assistance and Cooperation for the Defense of the American Nations (XV):

"I vote affirmatively with the statement that I shall sign the Act of Habana and the Declaration concerning the Reciprocal Assistance and Cooperation for the Defense of the Nations of the Americas, subject to approval by my Government and to the constitutional norms of my country."

Reservation of the Venezuelan Delegation:

8 As to the Act of Habana (XX):

I, Miguel Angel Campa y Caraveda, Secretary of State of the Republic of Cuba,

Certify: that the present is a true copy of the original text of the Final Act of the Second Consultative Meeting of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics, signed at Habana by the Delegates of the Governments to the said Meeting, July 30, nineteen hundred and forty.

And for the purpose of notifying the Government of the Republic of the United States of America, I issue this certification in the City of Habana, on the sixth day of the month of September, nineteen hundred and forty.

[SEAL] MIGUEL ANGEL CAMPA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me state briefly what the convention is. The convention was signed at Habana on [1] Spanish, Portuguese, and French texts not printed.

July 30, 1940. It is intended to take care of the transfer of non-American possessions in the Western Hemisphere. The matter has been discussed quite fully.

The provision is that when any one of the republics feels that there is a threat of the transfer of one of the non-American possessions, it may first call it to the attention of the American republics. The American republics then appoint a committee consisting of representatives from each republic. When two-thirds of the committee are appointed, they meet for the purpose of determining whether or not there is a threat of change of sovereignty or whether or not there has been an actual change of sovereignty. If they decide that such is the case, then any one or all of the republics, through the committee, may participate in the temporary control of the territory.

The provisional arrangement is to take effect only until the convention which is now submitted is ratified by two-thirds of the republics. If there is a threat of transfer or an actual transfer of non-American possessions, then the governments communicate with each other, and all or any one of them may take temporary possession of the territory and hold it until it is returned to the original sovereign, or until an independent government is set up for the government of the territory.

That is the substance of the convention.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to ask the Senator a few questions.

As I read the convention, it sets up, immediately it is ratified, an inter-American commission for territorial administration, with one representative from each state. I do not understand that any one state may step in after the commission is created. Must there not be an affirmative vote by a majority, and must not the commission say which nations shall participate in the administration of the territory?

Mr. PITTMAN. No. If the Senator will read paragraph 7, he will see that it says:

> 7. That the American republics, through their respective government agencies, reserve the right to judge whether any transfer or attempted transfer of sovereignty, jurisdiction, cession, or incorporation of geographic regions in the Americas, possessed by European countries up to September 1, 1939, has the effect of impairing their political independence even though no formal transfer or change in the status of such region or regions shall have taken place.

Each government determines that question for itself.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator mean that any government may then take possession? Does the Senator mean, for example, that we may go ahead without the approval of the Commission?

Mr. PITTMAN. Temporarily.

Mr. TAFT. I am not referring to the temporary situation. I am referring to the convention we are considering, which sets up an Inter-American Commission for Teritorial Administration. That commission is authorized to establish a provisional administration. I read article XVII on page 8 of the report:

> The Commission is authorized to establish a provisional administration in the regions to which the present convention refers; allow such administration to be exercised by the number of states which it may determine in each case, and supervise its exercise under the term of the preceding articles.

So it seems to me that if the Inter-American Commission should decide that it does not want us to take possession of Bermuda in the event it should be attacked by Germany, but should want Brazil to do so, we should be bound by the convention to agree that Brazil and not ourselves may take possession of Bermuda.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not so understand.

Mr. TAFT. That seems to be the obvious effect of the language of the convention. I thoroughly approve of the general idea; but it seems to me we are putting our entire welfare, and the occupation of regions which may be absolutely necessary for our defense, within the power of a majority of the American republics, which may not agree with us in any way.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the section states that each government may determine for itself whether or not there is a violation; and, having done so, it may take possession. Any or all of them may enter into possession.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the provision would not apply to the United States, because it is an American power. It relates only to the transfer of sovereignty to some non-American power.

Mr. TAFT. Assuming the occupation of Bermuda by the Germans, the convention would at once go into effect; and under the terms of the convention it seems to me that the Inter-American Commission for Territorial Administration, on which we have one seat out of some 22, would determine who should occupy Bermuda. It might not be in the interest of our own national welfare to permit anybody except ourselves to occupy Bermuda.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator was referring to the bases. It would not affect our title to the bases.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think it has anything to do with the bases. I am not referring to the bases. I simply took Bermuda as an example of a territory over which the British have sovereignty. It seems to me very doubtful whether it is wise for us to give power to a majority of the South American republics on matters which relate directly to our own possible national defense.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think there is no question that our Government or any other government may enter into possession. As to the provisional administration which may be set up pending possession, that matter is left open to the various parties who see fit to participate.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I notice in article 1 that the American republics expressly state that they are formulating this convention at the second consultative meeting. Am I correct in understanding that the first consultative meeting, which is also so described by the President in his message to the Senate, was the one which was held at Panama last October?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator please tell me whether or not the convention arising out of and agreed upon at the first consultative meeting has ever been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it has not. It is in no way binding upon the convention which is now presented.

Mr. DANAHER. I do not mean that. It was simply a matter of curiosity in my mind as to why the second should have been submitted to the Senate and not the first. I wonder if the Senator can help me.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was explained by Assistant Secretary Berle, and also by Mr. Hackworth, legal adviser to the Secretary of State. They consider the convention of the conference at Panama as purely temporary. They consider the convention before us as permanent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is what we call the Act of Habana, which was regarded as temporary, a sort of ad interim provision to govern the conduct of the republics while the convention is being ratified by the various countries?

Mr. PITTMAN. There were three conventions: The Panama Convention, which was temporary; the provisional convention, which has been referred to, which is not binding; and the permanent convention, which is now before us for ratification.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. When the matter was before the committee, was the question gone into as to whether or not the first meeting at Panama was considered binding? I am sure the Senator will readily remember that we declared a neutrality zone off our eastern shores. Does the Senator recall whether or not the particular agreement looking to that development was considered binding on the respective republics?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Assistant Secretary discussed that question. He does not consider it a binding convention.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say one other thing to the Senator, in view of his courteous cooperation with me. Those of us who are not members of the committee have not had the benefit of advice and assistance from the Department; but it is interesting to note that at the convention which was arrived at in Panama on October 3, 1939, the same foreign ministers who were present at Habana said:

That with regard to their status as neutrals—

Referring to their several countries—

there exist certain standards recognized by the American republics applicable in these circumstances, and that in accordance with them they shall prevent the setting on foot of any military, naval, or aerial expedition in the interests of the belligerents, the fitting out or arming of any ship or vessel to be applied in the service of one of the belligerents, to cruise or commit hostilities against another belligerent.

I am quoting from the Appendix of the Record, page 5659.

Let me ask the Senator whether there was any discussion in the committee by the Department representatives as to whether or not that particular portion of the Convention of Panama was considered binding.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; there was not.

Mr. DANAHER. It was not discussed?

Mr. PITTMAN. No.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. REED. With great regard for the distinguished Senator from Nevada, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I am unable to escape the same conclusion stated too briefly by the Senator from Ohio.

As I read the convention, there is to be first a determination whether or not a provisional government shall be set up. Then it provides that the provisional set-up shall be that provided in section XVI on page 8:

A commission to be known as the Inter-American Commission for Territorial Administration is hereby established, to be composed of a representative from each one of the states which ratifies this convention; it shall be the international organization to which this convention refers. Once this convention has become effective, any country which ratifies it may convoke the first meeting proposing the city in which it is to be held.

Then it goes on to say that the Commission shall elect its chairman, and that two-thirds shall be a quorum. Then it says, in section XVII, to which the Senator from Ohio calls attention:

The Commission is authorized to establish a provisional administration in the regions to which the present convention refers; allow such administration to be exercised by the number of states which it may determine in each case, and supervise its exercise under the term of the preceding articles.

I am very happy, of course, to see the American republics brought into a closer relationship; but I cannot escape the belief that under this Habana treaty or convention, or whatever it may be called, the United States becomes 1 of 22 republics which may set up a provisional commission, and that commission may determine the administration of any region which now belongs to a foreign country, and the possession of which might be affected by the outcome of war or any other reason. I shall be very happy if the Senator from Nevada will be so good as to put any other construction upon language which seems to me to be very plain.

I am not trying to be captious or critical. I am happy that the Western Hemisphere republics are taking on a responsibility; but I cannot escape the absolute conviction that under this convention we are merely 1 of 22 republics, and that the Commission which is set up under the provisions of the convention will determine what kind of an administration there shall be, and who shall have authority over any one of the regions or islands or terrtiories affected.

Mr. PITTMAN. I stated that under the convention, any or all of the American republics are entitled to go in and protect the possessions in question. As to the administration of the possessions, as to what form of government they will have, that, of course, is left to these people to determine; but all the way through the right to enter is left to the determination of each state itself.

Mr. REED. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator from Nevada. Let us assume that we desired to take over control of the island of Trinidad as being necessary to the defense of the Panama Canal Zone, and that the Republic of Colombia also desired to take it over. Then what?

Mr. PITTMAN. They would both enter into possession, of course, and so would Brazil, if it saw fit; but as to whether the island should have a mayor, or a city council, or what not, the form of government would have to be determined by all of the countries.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that the United States of America and the United States of Colombia could not both enter into possession of Trinidad, except by mutual agreement.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see why they could not enter into possession of it.

Mr. REED. Each one of them?

Mr. PITTMAN. They could both go on the island. There would be no question of entering into possession of the island. The question would be what form of government they should set up, and whether or not it should be an independent government.

Mr. REED. Who would determine that question?

Mr. PITTMAN. That question would be determined by two-thirds of the governments.

Mr. REED. But who would first determine which one of these 22 republics should take possession of any particular territory, whether it be an island or a part of the mainland?

Mr. PITTMAN. No one would determine who should take possession. There is no question that each government for itself might determine whether or not there had been a transfer of sovereignty, or a threat of transfer of sovereignty. That question is left to each government to determine for itself; but, of course, they must have some form of administration. Two-thirds of them would determine that question.

Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. TAFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield first to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas and also to the Senator from Nevada that section I of the formal convention, on page 6, provides:

If a non-American state shall directly or indirectly attempt to replace another non-American state in the sovereignty or control which it exercised over any territory located in the Americas, thus threatening the peace of the continent, such territory shall automatically come under the provisions of this convention and shall be submitted to a provisional administrative regime.

Under the commission which is set up by a representative from each of the republics, the declaration of Habana, which is not a part of the convention, but which is found on page 11, provides temporarily that if one country feels that this thing is taking place, and action must be taken immediately, it may intervene and go in, but it is only a temporary arrangement, and finally, as I understand, the administration is to be taken over by the commission which is to be set up.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think the provision is very ambiguous, but I am willing to vote to ratify the treaty on the statement of the Senator from Nevada that the right is reserved to go in our own initiative, and also on a similar statement on the part of the Secretary of State which I find on page 4, where he says:

The determination of the necessity for establishing such a provisional regime is entrusted to an emergency committee consisting of one representative of each of the American republics, although provision is also made for individual or joint action on the part of any of the American republics should the need be so urgent that consideration by the committee cannot be awaited.

On the basis and with the understanding that that is what the treaty means, I withdraw any objection to its ratificaion.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that we had quite a full meeting of the committee, and these questions were asked for an hour and a half; and Assistant Secretary Berle and the legal adviser of the Department, Mr. Hackworth, agreed to that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Nevada, in agreement with the Senator from Ohio, that I expect to vote for the ratification of the treaty; but I do so with the belief that, after all, we are only one of the 22 republics, and that the whole spirit and philosophy of the Habana Convention is that the 22 American republics, so-called—some of them—shall, through this international commission, absolutely determine who shall administer it, and what kind of an administration they will have, subject to the limitations written into the treaty.

Mr. PITTMAN. That may be true. Nevertheless, I think it is really a great advance that we have reached this point.

Mr. REED. In which opinion I am in entire agreement with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I fail to find in the treaty any reservation of the right of denunciation. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is necessary to have within a treaty a reservation of the right of denunciation, or whether that right inheres in sovereignty.

Mr. PITTMAN. Congress may denounce a treaty at any time. The only reason for having in a treaty a provision for its denouncement is to have a length of time provided within which it shall not be denounced.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. Is there any provision of assumption in the convention that all the signatories are to be beyond the influence of any non-American state throughout the life of the convention? In other words, what would be the effect if any one of the signatories to the convention should actually come under the domination, in reality, of a non-American state? Would the United States still be bound?

Mr. PITTMAN. Under section 7 the United States would determine for itself whether there had been a violation of the transfer of sovereignty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive O, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a convention entitled "Convention on the Provisional Administration of European Colonies and Possessions in the Americas," signed at Habana on July 30, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Bower Broaddus to be United States district judge for the eastern, northern, and western districts of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Royce H. Savage to be United States district judge for the northern district of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmations of the two judges for Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of August Klecka to be United States marshal for the district of Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward Millard Bryan to be United States marshal for the district of Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Anna M. Brewster to be postmaster at East Islip, N. Y., which had previously been passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nomination be confirmed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, September 30, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the giver of all good, at this the beginning of another day, we acknowledge and bless Thee for Thy gifts. Help us so to use them, that we may rise above the realm of mediocrity into the heights of great achievement, as we dedicate our lives anew before the altar of our country and our God. May the light of faith within, though it be but a transient gleam of beauty from Thy loving heart, soften for us the harshness of the clouds without and make a pleasant glow amidst the gloom within. We believe not only in Thy justice but also in Thy mercy. Make us, therefore, just and upright in our every dealing, and humanly divine in the quality of our kindness to our fellow men. And, as we alternate this day 'twixt rest and labor, repose, and the task that taxes us, may we carry with us no marring care into the haven where Thou dost refresh Thine inheritance, but may we find therein the peace of God that passeth understanding, that shall keep our hearts and minds safeguarded in the fellowship of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, September 27, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was recommitted the bill (S. 4175) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2138) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4240) to authorize the sale, under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203), of surplus War Department real property, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2188) thereon.

DISTRIBUTION OF HYDROELECTRIC ENERGY IN PACIFIC NORTHWEST

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], who is temporarily absent, sent me a bill which he desires me to introduce at this time in his name for the development and conservation of the resources of the Pacific Northwest through the wide distribution of electric energy generated by certain Federal projects, for the improvement of navigation and the promotion of the national defense, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be introduced and appropriately referred.

I also ask that there be printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] with respect to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 4390) for the development and conservation of the resources of the Pacific Northwest through the wide distribution of electric energy generated by certain Federal projects, for the improvement of navigation and the promotion of national defense, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The letter from the Secretary of the Interior addressed to the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 30, 1940.

Hon. HOMER T. BONE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BONE: In accordance with our conversations with you and some of your colleagues from the Northwest regarding the establishment of the Columbia power administration as a regional agency in the Department of the Interior, I have reviewed the attached bill. While it has not been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, I am glad to give you my views concerning it.

The Columbia power administration will accomplish a needed coordination of the power facilities of the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dam projects in a permanent agency, will permit on a practicable and equitable basis the acquisition of existing private utility properties by the people of the Northwest where they have voted to establish public power agencies, will make possible the more efficient use of the resources of the region for the national defense and the public welfare, and will encourage the wider use of electricity in the homes, farms, and factories of the Pacific Northwest.

I recommend the enactment of this bill.

The existing Bonneville Power Administration was established provisionally by the act of August 20, 1937, to market the power generated at the Bonneville Dam. The Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, was authorized by the President, pursuant to the act of August 30, 1935, to complete and operate the Grand Coulee Dam project. On August 26, 1940, pursuant to this same act, the President signed Executive Order No. 8526 designating the Bonneville Power Administrator, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as the agent for the sale and distribution of electrical power and energy generated at the Grand Coulee Dam project. This order provided a single Federal agency to market the energy produced at both the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dam projects. Additional legislation is required, however, to give full effect to this coordination since the arrangement continues to be provisional. This situation hampers the efficient marketing of power.

Another serious obstacle to the marketing of Columbia River power has been the inability of local public agencies to acquire necessary distribution systems. The people, in the exercise of their right of the ballot, have created agencies in many counties for the distribution of Columbia River power. Their efforts have been largely frustrated because their local agencies have found it economically infeasible to acquire the existing distribution systems which comprise parts of larger systems owned and controlled by eastern holding companies. Obviously, the piecemeal acquisition of such systems, by several unrelated public agencies would be uneconomical and impractical from the point of view of both the public agencies and the private companies. These people need and want the assistance of the Federal Government in meeting their problem of acquiring the existing utility properties on a system-wide basis on terms that are practicable and equitable. Such assistance will be afforded to them by means of this bill.

The Bonneville Administrator now has the power to acquire transmission lines. The bill would extend this power by providing for the acquisition of entire systems, including generating and distribution facilities, where such systems are economically dependent on such transmission lines. The act directs that distribution facilities so acquired be sold to public bodies or cooperatives as quickly as such sales can be properly consummated. In order to effect these acquisitions, the administrator is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue bonds of the Administration, guaranteed by the United States. Such acquisitions are to be entirely self-liquidating.

There is also an important function to be performed by the proposed Columbia power administration in the advancement of the national-defense program. The development and utilization of the many strategic and critical mineral resources found in the Pacific Northwest forms an essential part of this program. These resources require for their fullest development an abundant supply of cheap power, used chiefly in their processing. A single coordinating agency will be an invaluable aid in the efficient marketing of power for these purposes.

Finally the agency will foster and encourage the wider use of Columbia River power in the general development of the Pacific Northwest. It will do this through the making of studies, experiments, and demonstrations in the wider and better utilization of electricity on farms, in homes, and in manufacturing processes. It will do this through the continuation and extension of provisions of the present Bonneville legislation assuring that the power to be made available through the proposed Columbia power administration shall be sold at rates and in a manner to encourage the widest possible use, and by retaining the provisions of existing law granting preferences and priorities to public agencies and cooperatives.

The primary purposes for which the Grand Coulee Dam project is being constructed, including the irrigation and reclamation of arid lands, have been recognized in the proposed legislation. The basic requirements of the irrigation features of the Grand Coulee Dam project, as recognized in existing law, are not altered by the bill.

I have discussed the proposed legislation with the President, and its objectives have received his approval.

Very truly yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN BRITISH POSSESSIONS AND REDUCTION OF GREAT BRITAIN'S INDEBTEDNESS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KING. More than 2 years ago upon a number of occasions I stated that it was my belief that an understanding had been reached between Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin under the terms of which democratic nations were to be conquered or brought under their jurisdiction and control. I also added that there was accumulating evidence that Japan was a party to the understanding or agreement. Upon a number of occasions since then I repeated the statements just referred to.

When Czechoslovakia was assailed I reaffirmed the views formerly expressed, and when Poland was crushed and divided between Hitler and Stalin, I repeated the statements which I had formerly made.

It is apparent that for a number of years the powers referred to have cooperated in order to bring a large part of the world under their dominion and control. They are earnestly seeking now to bring Spain within the terms of the axis, and Japan gives evidence of active cooperation in aid of the destruction of free peoples and democratic governments, and with the purpose of joining in a division of conquered territory and of the spoils of war.

China has been the victim of a ruthless assault upon the part of Japan, and the recent conduct of Japan evidences a purpose upon her part to continue her brutal and barbarous attack upon China and to effect her complete subjugation. Not only that, but Japan is giving evidence of her cooperation and, indeed, union with the European axis, in order to effectuate the destruction of democratic nations.

Some time ago, before France had been conquered, I suggested to the Department of State that our Government obtain leases from Great Britain and France of their territory in the Western Hemisphere.

After France had been conquered and brought under the cruel and iron hand of Hitler I suggested to the State Department that our Government obtain 100-year leases from Great Britain of her territorial possessions in the Western Hemisphere. Unfortunately we delayed action with France, and undoubtedly France is not now in a position to act independently with the United States or any nation. We are warranted, I assume, in taking the position that the Vichy government is not in a position to make any disposition of territory which France had or may have in the Western Hemisphere.

Our Government acted wisely in obtaining from Great Britain naval bases in the Caribbean area. It is not too late for our Government to obtain from Great Britain naval bases and other territory in the Pacific and the Pacific region.

The bill which I am about to offer authorizes the President to enter into negotiations for the immediate acquisition by lease or otherwise of such islands or other possessions of Great Britain in or bordering on the Pacific Ocean as he may deem to be necessary. In connection with such program it also provides that to facilitate such acquisitions and by way of partial consideration, the President may be authorized, through the Export-Import Bank of Washington, or such other Federal agency as he may designate, to make such loans and extensions of credit to the Government of Great Britain, and its political subdivisions, as may be deemed advisable; also the President is authorized to provide for reducing the amount of the indebtedness of the British Government to the United States provided in the act of 1922, as amended, by an amount equivalent to the reduction of the indebtedness of the Italian Government to the United States which was granted by the act of April 28, 1926.

The bill also provides that the prohibition contained in sections 7 and 8 of the Neutrality Act of 1939, and in the act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default of its obligations to the United States, shall not apply with respect to the Government of Great Britain or any political subdivision thereof, or with respect to any person as defined in either of such acts, or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of the Government of Great Britain or any such political subdivision.

The critical situation of democratic peoples and democratic governments should challenge the attention of all those who believe in democracy and who are concerned in preserving democratic institutions and justice and liberty throughout the world. It is evident that Hitler and his associates are determined to superimpose upon the peoples of the world an autocratic and tyrannous form of government. They have, in a ruthless and barbarous way, destroyed peaceful and democratic nations; they have planned and are planning to divide the world and to impose upon the people a system of government under which liberty and freedom may not exist. Great Britain, with heroism, seldom, if ever, equaled and never surpassed, is fighting not alone for the British Empire, but for all people who love liberty and justice.

Mr. President, I believe that the time is propitious for the consideration not only of conditions in Europe, but the situation in the Pacific. For that reason, I have prepared a bill which I desire to introduce in the Senate and to have the same read for its information at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be read.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4391) to authorize negotiations for the acquisition of certain British possessions, to provide for reducing the indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States, and for other purposes, was read, the first time by its title and the second time at length and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, in furtherance of the national-defense program, to enter into negotiations for the immediate acquisition by lease or otherwise of such islands or other possessions of Great Britain in or bordering on the Pacific Ocean as he may deem to be necessary in connection with such program.

SEC. 2. In order to facilitate such acquisitions and in partial consideration therefor, the President is further authorized (1) through the Export-Import Bank of Washington or such other Federal agency as he may designate, to make such loans and extensions of credit to the Government of Great Britain and its political subdivisions, as he may deem advisable, and (2) to provide for reducing the amount of the indebtedness of the British Government to the United States specified in the act of February 9, 1922, as amended, by an amount equivalent to the reduction of the indebtedness of the Italian Government to the United States which was granted by the act of April 28, 1926.

SEC. 3. After the date of enactment of this act, the prohibitions contained in sections 7 and 8 of the Neutrality Act of 1939, and in the act entitled "An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States," approved April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 574), shall not apply with respect to the Government of Great Britain or any political subdivision thereof, or with respect to any person (as defined in either of such acts), organization, or association acting for or on behalf of the Government of Great Britain or any such political subdivision.

PROBLEMS OF SMALL-BUSINESS ENTERPRISES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MURRAY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 298) to appoint a special committee to study and survey problems of American small-business enterprises, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR DEFENSE IMPROVEMENTS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BYRD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

STUDY OF FEDERAL HOUSING ACTIVITIES

Mr. TAFT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 322), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate is hereby established, to consist of five members to be appointed by the President of the Senate from the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Education and Labor, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It shall be the duty of such committee to make a comprehensive study of the activities of the Federal Government in the field of housing, particularly as administered by the United States Housing Authority, the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Works Agency, and other agencies of a temporary or emergency nature. Such committee shall particularly consider—

(1) The need for housing in connection with the national-defense program;

(2) The formation of a long-range plan for stimulating slum clearance and the construction of new housing for the lower and middle income groups with a minimum of Government subsidy;

(3) The coordination of all Government housing activity and the consolidation or elimination of agencies where such consolidation or elimination will promote greater economy and efficiency in administration; and

(4) The stimulation of private investment and private industry in the housing field.

Such committee shall report its findings to the Senate not later than March 30, 1941, and shall recommend such legislation as it may deem necessary to carry out the objectives set forth in this section.

For the purposes of this section, such committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and Seventy-seventh Congresses; to employ such clerical and other assistants; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

CONSIDERATION OF THE UNANIMOUS-CONSENT CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. By special order of the Senate, the clerk will call the calendar, beginning where the Senate left off Friday last.

JOE L. M'QUEEN

The bill (H. R. 7139) for the relief of Joe L. McQueen, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOSTON & MAINE RAILROAD

The bill (H. R. 7815) for the relief of Boston & Maine Railroad, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID J. WILLIAMS, JR.

The bill (H. R. 5814) for the relief of David J. Williams, Jr., a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND MEN OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The bill (H. R. 9073) to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and men of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the value of personal effects lost, damaged, or destroyed in a fire aboard the Coast and Geodetic Survey launch Mikawe at Norfolk, Va., on October 27, 1939, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, this is a small claim approved by the Department of Commerce and acted upon favorably by the committee. It involves $831.15, as I recall.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM M. IRVINE

The bill (H. R. 10155) for the relief of William M. Irvine, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL ROBERTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6091) for the relief of Samuel Roberts, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,919.25" and insert "$1,387.10", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel Roberts, Somerville, Mass., the sum of $1,387.10, upon either the making of an assignment of all rights under, or upon the filing of a discharge and satisfaction of a judgment and execution for a like sum rendered in the district court of Somerville against the operator of a United States mail truck in favor of the said Samuel Roberts, for damages sustained by him as the result of personal injuries received on January 6, 1937, when he was struck on Massachusetts Avenue, Somerville, Mass., by the said mail truck. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained as the result of such injuries: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

VERDIE BARKER AND FRED WALTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5053) for the relief of Verdie Barker and Fred Walter, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000", and in lien 8, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$500" and insert "$200", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Verdie Barker, of Bloomingdale, Jefferson County, Ohio, the sum of $2,000; and to Fred Walter, of Richmond, Jefferson County, Ohio, the sum of $200, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained by them on November 21, 1937, when the truck in which they were riding was struck by a United States Department of Interior truck numbered 6458, assigned to Civilian Conservation Corps Company 580, Camp SP–9, Broadacre, Ohio: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS

The bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, between lines 20 and 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

Norfolk Harbor, Va.; House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise not for the purpose of opposing the amendment; but this bill is boiled down to the limit from an old bill which was before the Senate some time ago, with which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is more conversant than I am. At that time several amendments were offered which were abandoned because it was the purpose to come within the limitation prescribed by the President. I am curious to know what this amendment is.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment is offered at the request of the Navy Department. It is part of the defense program of the country. Last week, when I offered the amendment, I had printed in the RECORD a letter from the Department setting forth their reasons. I have taken up the matter with the chairman of the committee, and I believe he feels that the amendment is an important one and defendable on the basis of being in the interest of national defense.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there are a number of projects that will bear that stamp. I am not familiar with the attitude of the chairman of the committee. I respect his judgment on matters of this kind, of course; but there are a number of amendments which come within the category of national defense. In that category there are a number of projects that I have abandoned out of respect to the judgment of the President of the United States, who stated what he wanted.

Now, apparently, there is to be an enlargement of the plan. If we are to go into the question of national defense wherever we or the Navy Department may think it is justified, the bill is open to general amendment.

I am not opposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I simply wish to know what the policy is to be. If we are to write a new bill on the floor of the Senate, I should want the bill to go over until I have an opportunity to present a few projects which are also worthy; but I am willing to take the bill in the naked form in which it was proposed to the committee and was voted out, and stand on that, because it conforms to the President's own letter. I shall not interpose an objection to this amendment, however, because I know the Senator from Massachusetts would not attempt to offer an amendment that was not actually needed for the defense of the country.

Mr. WALSH. I call attention to the fact that the amendment is not for my own section of the country at all, and that I have no personal interest in it except the national interest.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that. The Senator from Massachusetts is always unselfish and looks at the broad question of national defense on any matter; but I want to know from the chairman of the committee what is to be the policy of the chairman regarding the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has stated my views precisely. I hope we can get the legislation through. It has been delayed. The amount authorized is not great. It is $35,000,000. The bill is on a national-defense basis, approved by the President, the War Department, the Coast Guard, and the Navy Department.

Two Senators have proposed amendments which are of equal value with the projects in the bill. The one proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts could not possibly be resisted by me in the committee, and I am not inclined to resist it here. If we can get it through, together with one to be offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], which is on all fours with it, I shall be glad to proceed today and get the bill through; but if we cannot do that, I shall have to ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill at the end of the consideration of the truth-in-fabric bill.

I wish to get the legislation through at this session, and it is of the greatest importance that we do so. That is my view. I am perfectly willing to agree, as chairman, to the amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Texas. That is all I can do; but if we are to open up the bill, we shall have to have a special day for its consideration, and I am afraid the legislation will be defeated.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my statement involved a question of policy only. I think the Crescent City project, in the northern part of California, is as worthy as any project in the bill. I refrained from pressing it because I wanted to respect the views the President expressed in his letter. If these other projects are going through, I will accept them, and I will forego, even now, in order to get this bill out, offering my amendment; but I doubt if this is the proper way to legislate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD in this connection.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,
Washington, D. C., September 24, 1940.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: It is my understanding that H. R. 9972, authorizing improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of national defense, will be brought up on the floor of the Senate within the next day or two.

We have been cooperating very closely with the War Department (Office of the Chief of Engineers) in connection with this bill, inasmuch as all of the projects therein are of vital interest to the Navy in connection with the national-defense program.

The Navy Department has just received an urgent letter from the commandant of the fifth naval district recommending that the project for providing additional anchorage area south of Craney Island in Norfolk Harbor be inserted in the subject bill.

This project, which will provide two anchorage bases, at an estimated cost of $182,000, south of Craney Island, which is the naval fuel depot in Norfolk Harbor, is covered in detail in House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session. (See Chief of Engineers' letter of March 19, 1940, p. 2, and pars. 8, 11 (b), 14, and 50.)

The increasing importance of the Hampton Roads area, due its central strategic location and enlarged defense plans now under way, makes it necessary that additional anchorage areas be provided for naval craft. This area will be used for ships awaiting their turn to fuel at the Craney Island depot; as a sheltered harbor for the increasing small naval craft used for loading stores, making minor ship's force repairs, liberty parties, and for the relief of the already crowded condition of other anchorage areas and dock spaces at the navy yard and the naval operating base.

The anchorage situation in the Elizabeth River at Norfolk has been made more acute owing to the necessity of providing buoy moorings for the large number of destroyers which are now basing at the operating base. Ships of the fleet are using the Craney Island depot for fueling purposes on a continually increasing scale. It is contemplated that this anchorage will now be used entirely for naval craft rather than for barges, freighters, and other commercial ships, as contemplated in the original project and report. The estimated cost of $182,000 would appear very reasonable in proportion to the benefits to be obtained from this project.

I would very much appreciate it if you could propose the following suggested amendment when this bill is brought up on the floor of the Senate:

Amendment intended to be proposed by —— to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes: On page 2, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

"Norfolk Harbor, Va., House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress."

Sincerely yours,

B. MOREELL, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me it is hardly fair to undertake to pass a bill of this magnitude under the unanimous-consent rule. I am not opposing this legislation, but I think everybody must recognize that the bill is one of national importance; and whatever may be the view of any Senator, he could hardly expect such a bill to be put through the Senate under the unanimous-consent rule.

I should like to say to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] that I am somewhat in doubt as to the nature of the bill which he says ought to pass, and the nature of amendments which ought not to be offered or ought to be rejected if offered. I have an amendment which has been approved by the Board of Engineers. So far as I know, it is all ready for inclusion by Congress in a legislative bill. I expected, if this legislation should be taken up, to offer that amendment to this bill. I have not prepared it. I am not ready to do so today, because I had no idea that we were to take up this bill under a unanimous-consent agreement.

I realize that I could object to the consideration of the bill, as any other Senator could; but I do not want to be captious. I do not want to object if there is something here which, as a matter of national defense, we ought to pass. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether I am to understand that it is his belief that no amendments ought to be offered to the bill, and that it contains everything which can be included under the term "national defense," and that any other amendments—although they may be, as I think mine is, without objection—should not be offered at this time?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I could not go that far. I think there may be other desirable amendments; but all the propositions we have before us are those submitted by the President, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Coast Guard, and the two amendments to which I have referred, one from the Senator from Massachusetts and the other from the Senator from Texas. The latter amendments seem to me to be as good as the others, and I could not object to them.

I realize, however, that when we open up the bill to these amendments, we open it up to other amendments. I am not insisting that the bill pass without discussion. I am perfectly willing to pass it over for the present, provided we can get it up sometime this week; and probably that will satisfy the Senator, too.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that. I should like to cooperate. I do not want to be in the attitude of impeding the passage of anything that is brought in here as a matter of national defense by including something that is not a matter of national defense.

I have talked with the Senator briefly about the amendment I propose to offer, but it was at a time when I did not think any such legislation was to be taken up. I do not think it would take long to prepare the amendment. If we should take up this bill as we would take up any other legislation of considerable magnitude, it probably would necessarily be a day or two before we could dispose of it.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator that I am not inclined to the view that a bill of this kind should pass while bills are being considered by unanimous consent. It was presented. I am not going to resist its going over if the Senate wishes to have that done.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I think the bill ought to go over, Mr. President.

Mr. BAILEY. Before we dispose of the matter, let me ask our leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] just when I may reasonably expect to have this matter brought up.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that it is impossible to fix the hour and the day.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that, of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am very much interested in the Senator's bill, and will cooperate with him in getting it up. Immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of bills on the calendar the conference report on the wool bill is in order. I do not know how long that will take. Probably there is to be some discussion of it. It may take an hour or two. By that time the conference report on the tax bill may or may not be here. But I may say to the Senator I feel confident that within the next 2 or 3 days we can take up his bill for consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is agreeable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from North Carolina, I should like to confer with him, if the bill shall go over, and I hope he will not make a motion to take it up within a day or two, at least. I should like to have some time to prepare an amendment, if, after consultation with the Senator from North Carolina, I decide that it is proper to offer it.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be very glad to confer with the Senator about it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is interested in having a proper time fixed for considering this important bill. I suggest for his earnest consideration that he arrange to have it come up immediately after the Senate concludes consideration of the Logan-Walter bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I agree with that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have stated the situation with which I have been dealing. I have stated why I wanted to get the bill through this morning, and, of course, if I cannot, I cannot, and I will take my chances with the assurance given me by the majority leader.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

REPEAL OF OBSOLETE STATUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4316) to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, this is a bill to repeal certain obsolete statutes, and is recommended by the proper department and approved by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 686 and 687) be, and they are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. All certificates heretofore issued to seamen under the authority of section 4588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby declared void.

FISH HATCHERIES AT GRAND COULEE DAM

The bill (H. R. 9921) to authorize the maintenance and operation of fish hatcheries in connection with the Grand Coulee Dam project was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STONY POINT LIGHT STATION RESERVATION

The bill (H. R. 10246) to further amend the act of July 30, 1937, authorizing the conveyance of a portion of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation to the Palisades Interstate Park Commission, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTIVE DUTY FOR CERTAIN COAST GUARD OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 10337) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to order retired commissioned and warrant officers of the Coast Guard to active duty during time of national emergency, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, INDIANA

The bill (H. R. 9952) authorizing the Indiana State Toll Bridge Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Wabash River at or near Mount Vernon, Posey County, Ind., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, MINNESOTA

The bill (H. R. 9561) granting the consent of Congress to the Minnesota Department of Highways and the counties of Benton and Stearns, in Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Sauk Rapids, Minn., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIG SANDY RIVER BRIDGE, WEST VIRGINIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4087) authorizing the Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Nolan, W. Va., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes" and to insert "the consent of Congress is hereby granted to"; on line 7, to strike out "is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate" and to insert "to complete construction of"; on line 9, after the word "at", to strike out "a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Nolan"; on page 2, line 2, after the name "Virginia", to strike out "in accordance with" and to insert "and to maintain and operate said bridge as a lawful structure subject to"; on line 6, after the numerals "1906", to strike out "and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors and assigns, to complete construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, at West Virginia, and to maintain and operate said bridge as a lawful structure subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of West Virginia, the State of Kentucky, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 5 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include goodwill, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 percent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within 3 years after the completion of such bridge investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize the construction by the Big Creek Bridge Co., Consolidated, of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Nolan, W. Va."

WITHLACOCHEE RIVER BRIDGE, GEORGIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4135) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Board of Georgia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at or near Horns Ferry, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, after the enacting clause, to strike out, "That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Board of Georgia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Withlachoochee River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at or near Horns Ferry, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act," and to insert, "That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Board of Georgia to complete construction, in accordance with plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, of a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Withlachoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry, and to maintain and operate said bridge as a lawful structure subject to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Board of Georgia to complete construction, in accordance with plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, of a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry, and to maintain and operate said bridge as a lawful structure subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize the construction by the State Highway Board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry."

CHARLES F. MARTIN

The bill (H. R. 4724) for the relief of Charles F. Martin, a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLIE BARR

The bill (H. R. 4615) for the relief of Sallie Barr was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN E. AVERY

The bill (H. R. 6215) for the relief of John E. Avery was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETTY JANE BEAR ROBE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7910) for the relief of Betty Jane Bear Robe, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to insert a new section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the superintendent of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, S. Dak., for the account of Betty Jane Bear Robe, minor child and sole heir to the estate of Bessie Bear Robe, the sum of $2,000. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $500 of such sum may be expended by such superintendent to pay debts outstanding against the estate of the said Bessie Bear Robe. The payment of such sum of $2,000 shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the death of Aloysius Spotted Bear, minor son of the said Bessie Bear Robe, who was killed on March 30, 1938, when struck by an automobile of the United States Indian Service while alighting from an Indian Service school bus on United States Highway No. 18 within the boundaries of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, S. Dak.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 2. That any person duly enrolled as a member of an Indian tribe who received in pursuance of a tribal treaty or agreement with the United States an allotment of land which, by the terms of said treaty or agreement was exempted from taxation, restricted against alienation, or which by the terms of any act of Congress was continued under the supervision of the United States during the minority of such allottee, and from which land the restrictions have or have not been removed, and any such enrolled member of an Indian tribe having restricted money in the custody and control of the United States, and who was required or permitted to pay prior to April 26, 1931, any Federal income tax on such lands or on the rents, royalties, or other gains arising from such lands during such restricted or tax-exempt period or on income from such restricted funds while in the custody or control of the United States, or on income from any allotment during the minority of the allottee, or any such person who has been erroneously or illegally taxed by reason of not having claimed or received the benefit of any deduction or exemptions permitted by law, and who would be entitled under this or previous acts or rulings of the Treasury Department in similar Indian cases to a refund of the taxes so illegally or erroneously collected, but for the fact that he failed to file a claim for such refund within the time prescribed by law, shall be allowed 2 years after the approval of this act within which to file such claim, and if otherwise entitled thereto he may recover such taxes in the same manner and to the same extent as if such claims for refund had been theretofore duly filed as required by law, it not being the policy of the Government to invoke or plead a statute of limitations to escape the obligations of agreement solemnly entered into with its Indian wards, or prior to April 26, 1931, to exact for its own use and benefit an income tax from them while their property continued under the supervision of the United States, and/or during the minority of the allottee: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of a member of an Indian tribe his heirs who succeeded to his allotment of lands be permitted to file claims and recover refunds in the same manner as duly enrolled member of an Indian tribe: Provided further, That in the case of the death of any enrolled member of an Indian tribe any such illegal taxes paid by him or on his account may in like manner be claimed and recovered by the person or persons who would have received such money had it constituted a part of his estate at the time of his death.

That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are modified for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of carrying into effect the provisions hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this measure. It seems to be a rather important bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the first part of the bill proposes to pay the sum of $2,000 to the parents of an Indian boy who was killed on an Indian reservation. The Indian boy was on his way home from school, and just before he reached home he got out of the truck in which he was riding, and another car came by, in which there were an Indian policeman and one or two other passengers, and it ran over the boy and killed him. The first part of the bill is to cover that claim.

The second part of the bill has to do with refund-of-taxes claims. Oklahoma was admitted to the Union with the Indian lands tax free, but later on the State proceeded to tax them, and still later the Supreme Court held that the taxes could not be levied against these lands. Congress has heretofore passed a law providing that claims could be filed for refunds. The time for the filing of the claims has expired. Many Indians paid taxes, without the knowledge that they had a right to file claims for refunds until the time had expired. This measure proposes to give them 2 years from the date of the enactment of the bill within which they may file claims for refunds. Then the Treasury Department will have to pass on the question whether or not the claims are just. The bill would give them 2 years in which to file their claims.

Mr. REED. This bill is entitled "An act for the relief of Betty Jane Bear Robe." That claim is covered in the first part of the bill. It is not the kind of bill that is customarily found under a title of this kind. The second part of the bill is general legislation, and should not be included under such a title as this, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me say for the RECORD that a condition exists in another body which makes it practically impossible for an Indian bill to be passed. Whenever a bill has an Indian title it is objected to. Therefore, unless we include some of these bills in a sort of an omnibus measure, and send them to the other House as amendments, there is no chance to have Indian legislation enacted. That is why the committee saw fit to tack this amendment on to this particular bill. The second part of the bill has passed the Senate heretofore, and that is why it is attached to the other bill as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. GURNEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 2196, House bill 7910. I have conferred with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and they have agreed there will be no objection on their part to the consideration and passage of the bill if the amendment of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs is deleted. Therefore I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7910) for the relief of Betty Jane Bear Robe, and to carry out certain obligations to certain Indians, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has heretofore been agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this is a House bill, which was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and approved by the committee. In order to secure the enactment of some legislation on another subject, the committee saw fit to attach an amendment to the bill. I am sure no member of the committee desires to withhold the relief from this Indian family in South Dakota, simply in order to have an amendment adopted. In view of the fact that the objection made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] precludes and prevents Indians from another State having an opportunity to file a claim at their first knowledge of their right to file a claim, of course, the bill, as amended, cannot pass. So, at the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], I am agreeable to the Senate disagreeing to the Senate committee amendment, to the end that this relief may be given to the Indian family which lost its son.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment providing for changing the title will be disagreed to.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITY, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 10267) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant an easement in a small strip of land at Veterans' Administration Facility, Los Angeles, Calif., to the county of Los Angeles, Calif., for sidewalk was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TICKETS TO THE INAUGURAL CEREMONIES, 1941

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 467) to exempt from the tax on admission amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941 which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Ceremonies", to insert "on the occasion"; and on line 8, after the word "section", to strike out "500 of the Revenue Act of 1926" and to insert "1700 of the Internal Revenue Code", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That all amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941, said committee to be appointed with the approval of the President-elect, shall be exempt from the tax on admissions imposed by section 1700 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, all the net proceeds from the sale of said tickets to be donated by the said committee to charity.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

HERBERT ZUCKER

The bill (S. 4227) for the relief of Herbert Zucker, and others, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accord nunc pro tunc examinations under the immigration laws to Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, and Dorrit Claire Zucker, citizens of France, and Martha Hirsch, citizen of Czechoslovakia, and if such aliens upon examination be found admissible to the United States except for lack of immigration visas he shall record their lawful admittance for permanent residence as of the date of their temporary entry at New York on November 17, 1939. Upon the making of such record of permanent admission and payment by the aliens of fees fixed by law the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officers to deduct four numbers from the German quota and one from the Czechoslovak quota of the current fiscal year.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask that the report of the Committee on Immigration on the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT NO. 2088

The Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4227) for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Because of its brevity, the bill is quoted herein in full.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accord nunc pro tunc examinations under the immigration laws to Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, and Dorrit Claire Zucker, citizens of France, and Martha Hirsch, citizen of Czechoslovakia, and if such aliens upon examination be found admissible to the United States except for lack of immigration visas he shall record their lawful admittance for permanent residence as of the date of their temporary entry at New York on November 17, 1939. Upon the making of such record of permanent admission and payment by the aliens of fees fixed by law the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officers to deduct four numbers from the German quota and one from the Czechoslovak quota of the current fiscal year."

Unlike most bills of this character, its purpose is to benefit an American community and the residents thereof rather than the aliens involved. These aliens arrived in the United States under a temporary visitors' permit November 17, 1939. The alien Herbert Zucker has, since 1920, been substantially interested in a New York corporation known as the Astra Bent Wood Furniture Corporation, Inc. That company has a capital of $60,000, all of which is owned by the aliens involved in this bill or their immediate families. In addition to that, Mr. Zucker and his family have other investments in American corporations amounting to $98,000, and cash and credits in American banks or financial institutions amounting to $70,000.

The business connection of Mr. Zucker and the other aliens involved in this bill which is of public interest involves the purchase by them of the Hale Co., of East Arlington, Vt. The record discloses that during the months of January and February of 1940, the Hale Co., which is a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing furniture, was in liquidation. Had it been liquidated and closed, the town of Arlington, Vt., would have lost a pay roll of $200,000 a year and the employment of 200 persons. Mr. Zucker invested $204,000 in this enterprise and not only protected this pay roll of the town of Arlington, but has extended the construction of the factory involved and will increase the pay roll.

The files of the committee contain many letters from responsible citizens of Arlington, Vt., and Bennington County, Vt., outlining the importance of the maintenance of this corporation to the community and county. They show the firm was founded in 1860, and it is apparent that this factory has been the backbone of employment in the community for many years.

Therefore, your committee feel that the bill should be enacted by the Congress and recommend such action. There follows the report of the Attorney General:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 17, 1940.

Hon. RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
Chairman, Committee on Immigration, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This acknowledges your request for the views of this Department concerning a bill (S. 4227) to authorize and direct the Attorney General to accord nunc pro tunc examinations under the immigration laws to Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, and Dorrit Claire Zucker, citizens of France, and Martha Hirsch, citizen of Czechoslovakia, and if such aliens are found admissible except for lack of immigration visas, to record their admission for permanent residence as of November 17, 1939.

It appears from the files of the Immigration and Naturalization Service that Herbert Zucker, age 52, his wife, Emma, age 40, and his two daughters, Hanni and Dorrit Claire, age 20 and 15, respectively, arrived in the United States on November 17, 1939, and were admitted temporarily for a period of 6 months. They are citizens of France, although born in Czechoslovakia. For 6 years preceding their arrival in the United States they resided in Paris. It is represented that Mr. Zucker has been financially interested in the Astra Bent Wood Furniture Co., Inc., a New York corporation, since sometime in 1920. The business of the company is the importation and sale of a specialty which originated in Czechoslovakia and which was manufactured in France.

The instant bill does not propose the waiver of any provision of the immigration laws, except that relating to quotas.

Whether the bill should receive favorable consideration involves a question of legislative policy concerning which I prefer not to make any suggestion.

The files of the Immigration and Naturalization Service concerning this matter are enclosed herewith. It is requested that they be returned to that Service when they have served your purpose.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON.

VICKSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK, MISS.

The bill (S. 3907) to authorize the acceptance of donations of property for the Vicksburg National Military Park in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an identical House bill—H. R. 9658—on the calendar which, without objection, will be substituted for the Senate bill and be now considered.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9656) to authorize the acceptance of donations of property for the Vicksburg National Military Park in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3907 will be indefinitely postponed.

CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 2728) to add certain lands to the Cleveland National Forest in Orange County, Calif., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY W. SHURLDS AND W. H. WHITE

The bill (H. R. 9942) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Henry W. Shurlds and W. H. White a patent to certain lands in the State of Mississippi was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUTH GAINEY BRANSCOME

The bill (H. R. 9943) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Ruth Gainey Branscome a patent to certain lands in the State of Mississippi was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF OIL- AND GAS-PROSPECTING PERMITS

The bill (S. 3172) to provide for the extension of certain oil- and gas-prospecting permits, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the calendar is an identical House bill, and, without objection, it will be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8448) to provide for the extension of certain oil- and gas-prospecting permits, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "permits", to insert "and under which the permittee had in good faith complied with all existing laws and regulations", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, any oil- or gas-prospecting permit issued under authority of the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920, as amended, which expired between December 31, 1937, and January 1, 1940, because of lack of authority under existing laws to make extension of such permits, and under which the permittee had in good faith complied with all existing laws and regulatons, shall, upon application to the Secretary of the Interior and subject to valid intervening rights, be extended for an additional period ending December 31, 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3172 will be indefinitely postponed.

FORT MARION NATIONAL MONUMENT, FLORIDA

The bill (H. R. 8353) to change the designation of the Fort Marion National Monument in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will permit the Senate to consider this bill. It is a measure which does nothing except change the name of the Fort Marion National Monument to the Castillo de San Marcos National Monument. The people of Florida are asking for this action and, so far as I know, all the historical societies are requesting that the change be made. The Government is now doing rehabilitation work at that point, reestablishing this old fort, which has been in disuse since shortly after the Revolutionary War, and it is desired that the original name be restored to the fort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES. I object.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have been requested by the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to ask that the bill go over at this time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I dislike very much to object to the request made by the Senator from Florida, but as a matter of fact, ever since Florida was ceded to the United States, this fort has been known as Fort Marion, named after a distinguished soldier and patriot of the American Revolution. Members of the Daughters of the American Revolution in South Carolina who have communicated with me, believe that at this time it is not wise to change the name of this national monument in which all the people of the United States have an interest; but, on the contrary, that more such monuments might be named after Revolutionary heroes. I should not want to agree to consideration of the bill until the Daughters of the American Revolution have had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. ANDREWS. I have no objection to the Daughters of the American Revolution being heard with respect to the matter. However, let me say that every historical society in Florida has expressed a desire that the proposed change be made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, we would like to give notice that in due course we propose to move to take the bill up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

REQUISITION OF ARTICLES AND MATERIALS FOR THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10339) to authorize the President to requisition certain articles and materials for the use of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "military", to insert "or naval."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next committee amendment was, on page 1, line 9, after the word "thereof", to insert "ordered, manufactured, procured, or possessed for export purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill from either the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee or a member of that committee, particularly in view of the very broad implications which are contained in the language of the bill, as I read it. Last Friday I tried to have these proceedings conducted in such a manner that we could understand what was being done. In order to hold the situation, and for fear that the Presiding Officer, not intending to, of course, might declare the bill passed, as was done a few moments ago without that being the understanding of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN],

I ask for an explanation of the bill, and withhold objection pending the explanation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the passage of the bill is urgently requested by the War Department. One of the worst bottlenecks in the national-defense program is due to the lack of machine tools. A great many machine tools have been sold to foreign countries, but have not left the United States; and under the act of July 2, 1940, the further exportation of such tools is prohibited. These tools are now lying at various United States ports. They are owned by foreign countries, but they cannot be sent to the foreign countries which bought them. They will not be sent because the Government of the United States, under the act just referred to, will not permit their exportation. It is not possible in some instances to induce those connected with these foreign orders to sell the tools in question to the Government of the United States. The tools are simply lying at the various ports. No one is using them. No one today can obtain them. What the bill does is to give the Government of the United States the power to requisition and take these tools, either to be used by the Government itself or to be sold by the Government to manufacturers who need the tools for national-defense production.

The bill provides that when the Government takes over the tools, the President shall determine a fair and reasonable price, without allowing for any speculative profits or anything of that kind, and tender the money to the owners of the tools. If, however, the owners are not satisfied with the price fixed by the Government, then the Government may take the tools, pay 50 percent of the price fixed by the President, and the owners may have the right to go into the Court of Claims and ask for such additional payment as they think they are entitled to.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Does not the bill allow the President to take over any supplies he desires in the United States and sell or dispose of them as he himself desires?

Mr. HILL. No; I should say not. The bill is limited to supplies the exportation of which has been denied in accordance with the provision of section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940, and it applies only to military and naval equipment, such as the President now has the power to prohibit being exported from the United States.

Mr. HOLT. Yes; but assume that certain ships were involved, would this measure affect their sale or disposition?

Mr. HILL. I do not think it would affect ships. The Senator will notice the language of the bill which provides for the talking over of—

> Any military or naval equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools, or materials or supplies necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof * * * the exportation of which has been denied—under the act to which I have referred.

Mr. HOLT. I am very fearful the passage of this measure would repeal that part of the law which deals with the disposition of naval vessels.

Mr. HILL. No; the whole idea and purpose and intent of the bill is to prevent supplies of any sort that may be necessary for the Army and the Navy going out of the United States, and to permit the Army and the Navy to obtain such supplies for the use of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. HOLT. Yes; but does it not give the President the power to sell and dispose of them after they are taken over?

Mr. HILL. Certainly it is intended that the sale or disposition of the tools shall be made only to manufacturers who would use the tools to supply equipment to the Army or the Navy of the United States.

Mr. HOLT. If the Senator does not object, I should like to have the bill go over until I am sure that what I have in mind will not result from the passage of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Let me say to the Senator that if he wants to amend the bill so as to limit its provisions strictly to persons supplying equipment or supplies to the Government of the United States, certainly there could be no objection, because that is its intent and purpose.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator does not object if I ask that the bill go over temporarily?

Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator. Is it not true that the word "vessel" has been used in the various acts, including the act of 1917, section 3, and has it not been construed that the absence of the word "vessel" in this measure would make it impossible for the act to be construed as the Senator from West Virginia fears it might be construed?

Mr. HOLT. I will say to the Senator that I have not had time to go over it thoroughly, and if the Senator from Alabama does not object, I shall ask that the bill be passed over until I have an opportunity further to examine it.

Mr. HILL. Would the Senator object to the bills being passed, and then, if upon examination of the bill he finds reason for objecting to it, he can move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered?

Mr. HOLT. I think it would be better to let it go over temporarily, and call it up for action later.

Mr. HILL. I wish to say that I have no personal interest in the bill at all. My only interest in the bill is that the War Department is urgently requesting its passage on the ground that machine tools, which we need so badly in the United States, are today lying on our docks and wharves, the Government not being able to get them, no one really being able to get them. There they are lying idle, when they are so badly needed for the production of national-defense equipment and material.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I agree thoroughly with respect to the need for the acquirement of tools and materials. The feature to which I object is allowing the President to sell and dispose of them in any manner he desires. What I fear is not the power to requisition them, but the power to dispose of them.

Mr. HILL. The Senator knows, does he not, that the title to the tools and equipment is in the hands of foreign governments?

Mr. HOLT. Would the Senator object to an amendment providing that they shall be sold or disposed of in the United States?

Mr. HILL. Not at all. I should be glad to accept such an amendment. I would not object to it at all.

Mr. HOLT. Let us pass the bill over, so an amendment to that effect may be prepared.

Mr. HILL. Very well, let the bill be passed over, so that an amendment may be prepared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HILL subsequently said: Mr. President, a few minutes ago House bill 10339, Calendar No. 2209, was passed over at the request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT]. I have conferred with the Senator from West Virginia, and he and I have agreed on two amendments. I ask for the consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will recur to the bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10339) to authorize the President to requisition certain articles and materials for the use of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments on page 1 have already been agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 6, after the word "material", to insert "and to sell or otherwise dispose of any such articles or materials, or any portion thereof, whenever he shall determine such action to be in the public interest. Any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale or other disposition of any such articles or materials or any portion thereof shall be deposited to the credit of that appropriation out of which was paid the cost to the Government of the property thus sold or disposed of, and the same shall immediately become available for the purposes named in the original appropriation", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the President determines that it is necessary in the interest of national defense to requisition and take over for the use or operation by the United States or in its interest any military or naval equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools, or materials or supplies necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof, ordered, manufactured, procured, or possessed for export purposes, the exportation of which has been denied in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the act approved July 2, 1940 (Public, No. 703, 76th Congress), he is hereby authorized and empowered to requisition and take over for the said use or operation by the United States, or in its interest, any of the foregoing articles or materials, and to sell or otherwise dispose of any such articles or materials, or any portion thereof, whenever he shall determine such action to be in the public interest. Any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale or other disposition of any such articles or materials or any portion thereof shall be deposited to the credit of that appropriation out of which was paid the cost to the Government of the property thus sold or disposed of, and the same shall immediately become available for the purposes named in the original appropriation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on page 2, line 7, in the amendment of the committee, after the word "thereof", I offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from West Virginia and myself, reading as follows:

to a person or corporation of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I offer another amendment. On page 2, line 15, in the committee amendment, I move to strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and the following words:

Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall modify or repeal section 14 of Public Law 671, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 28, 1940.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 15, after the word "appropriation" and before the period, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall modify or repeal section 14 of Public Law 671, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 28, 1940.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether or not that is in accordance with the construction to be placed on the section by the Attorney General, or the construction that was placed on the act by the Congress when it passed the act.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have preserved section 14 just exactly as it is written, verbatim et literatim, all the a's and the z's, the periods and the commas and the semicolons.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. I was just thinking of a recent opinion by the Attorney General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LETTER DEALING WITH SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have been waiting for an opportunity to bring a letter to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs. I think all Senators ought to be acquainted with it. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter read by the clerk at this juncture, omitting the name of the writer of the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

ROCK HILL, S. C., September 24, 1940.

Senator ELLISON D. SMITH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Apropos the Selective Service Act: In section 1, (b), the act says, "Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should share generally in accordance with a fair and just system * * *" then proceeds to violate the spirit of this section and discriminate against several of the military services.

The act appears to have been written by the Army because, in section 5 (b) (1), it makes a peacetime exemption for men who have served in the Regular Army for 3 years, and later for the National guardsmen who have served the equivalent, or thereabouts, but ignores service time in the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Of course I realize, Senator SMITH, that with the rush and uproar of getting the bill passed, a few points were bound to be overlooked, and it seems to me a few further amendments, as suggested above, will be necessary.

As S. 4164 stands, in this respect, it may be likened, in the above, to the old impressment laws of Great Britain (which partly caused our War of 1812), in which a sailor could be discharged after years of service by impressment, then on the following day be slugged and kidnaped by the press gang and forced to serve years more in the army or the navy, because:

As the law stands, a man could have served 8 or 12 years in the Marine Corps, be discharged on October 15, forced to register on the following day, October 16, then drafted into the Army for a year, plus the subsequent reserve duty 'til 45 years of age.

In reference to myself, I have served in the C. M. T. C. (1 term) and in the naval service for 4 years; then went to college and finally got a start in my profession, and I naturally feel I have covered all the military service that should be required of me by the United States of America during peacetime and should be let alone.

In all probability the Army intends to rectify this oversight by interpreting this exemption for all military and naval services, but the point which I want to make is that the act itself should be amended. It seems to me, Senator SMITH, that because of the number of vague clauses, generalities, ambiguities, ranging in a wide degree of interpretation, some of which I admit are necessary, the act hands the Army's Commander in Chief a virtual military dictatorship of men between 21 and 36 throughout the life of S. 4164. And with it he can harass whom he pleases, as he can vary his interpretation as he sees fit or whenever he sees fit, on any one vague point.

And, therefore, I hold, these generalities and oversights should be cut down as much as possible by specific amendments. As to the discrimination I mentioned, in all Federal laws to my knowledge, besides this act, parity between various branches of military services is recognized; that is, equality of years' service, ratings, rights and privileges granted. (S. 4164 is at least parity-conscious as to pay scale in sec. 12 and in 3 (c) and (d).)

I believe, Senator SMITH, if you inquire at the Veterans' Bureau you will learn that nearly half a million ex-service men from the other branches will be discriminated against by the bill. It seems to me someone not as yet engulfed by the hysteria of the month should be willing to go to bat for half a million men who did not exactly depend on the British Navy to defend our Atlantic coast and other fables. Certainly it will be deeply appreciated by the writer.

The critical examination I have made of the Selective Service and Training Act and my comments here were based on the bill as published in the New York Times, September 15.

Thanking you for the courtesy of your consideration of the foregoing subject, Senator SMITH, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

_____.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to have the letter referred to the Military Affairs Committee. I know the man who wrote it. He has given the matter careful study. If the things he points out are correct, I think the matter ought to be affirmatively stated in the law and not left to the discretion of the military authorities.

I ask that the letter be referred to the Military Affairs Committee, and returned to me for my file when the committee shall have finished with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

WILLFUL INJURY OR DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIALS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4297) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war materials or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war materials and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act approved April 20, 1918, entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes" (40 Stat. 533; U. S. C., title 50, secs. 101–103), be amended as follows:

The first paragraph of section 1 be, and the same is hereby, amended by deleting the word "the" immediately preceding the word "war."

The fourth paragraph of section 1 be, and the same is hereby, amended to read:

"The words 'United States' used in this act in a geographical sense shall include the Philippine Islands, the Panama Canal Zone, and all other territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and this act shall be effective within the United States as thus defined."

Following section 3 of said law, add the following new sections:

"SEC. 4. That the words 'national-defense material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, livestock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, fuel, supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for the use of the United States in connection with the national defense.

"The words 'national-defense premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such national-defense material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States.

"The words 'national-defense utilities,' as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such national-defense material, or any troops of the United States, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas may be furnished to any national-defense premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any national-defense premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That during a period of national emergency declared by Congress or proclaimed by the President, including the period of national emergency proclaimed by the President by proclamation No. 2352, dated September 8, 1939, whoever, within intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any national-defense material, national-defense premises, or national-defense utilities, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"SEC. 6. That during a period of national emergency declared by Congress or proclaimed by the President, including the period of national emergency proclaimed by the President by proclamation No. 2352, dated September 8, 1939, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may insure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any national-defense material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such national-defense material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I call attention to the language on pages 6 and 7 of the bill. To me, it does not make sense. Section 5 says:

That during a period of national emergency declared by Congress or proclaimed by the President, including the period of national emergency proclaimed by the President by proclamation No. 2352, dated September 8, 1939, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, shall willfully injure or destroy—

And so forth. The language to which I direct particular attention is:

Or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense.

If a man does something with intent to injure, or with reason to believe that the act will injure, that means that the act is done with intent. I submit that the language ordinarily used is sufficient. The language to which I refer would only be confusing to any prosecuting attorney in enforcing the law. When we use the language "with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct," we cover the ground as fully as it could be covered by the language "or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct."

Someone might commit an act without intent, and yet he might have in his mind something which no one could figure out; and possibly it might be said that he had reason to believe that his act might injure, interfere with, or obstruct. We cannot prosecute persons unless they have an intent to do something. Therefore I move to strike out, in section 5, on page 6, line 19, after the word "defense", the words "or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense"; and in section 6, on page 7, line 7, after the figures "1939", to strike out "whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, or whoever, wih reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense." My amendment would not change the meaning.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator read the words he intends to strike out?

Mr. WHEELER. The language to which I refer is:

Or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense.

The language would then read:

Whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy—

And so forth.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I suggest that the Senator offer his amendment to the identical House bill now on the Senate calendar in order that the matter may go to conference.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be glad to offer the amendment to the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the committee amendment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the bill is an attempt simply to apply the act of April 20, 1918, which was a wartime measure, to the present emergency. The same words to which the Senator has referred are found in the act of April 20, 1918. That act has been on the statute books ever since.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not care whether it has been on the statute books for 100 years. It does not make good sense to say "or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States." Of course, if a person does something with the intent to do it, he is guilty. If he does it under certain circumstances, he is presumed to have done it with intent. It does not make good sense to say "whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States," does it with intent to injure the United States. The Senator will not find such language in any criminal statute I have ever read.

Mr. MINTON. It is found in the act of April 20, 1918.

Mr. WHEELER. It is not to be found in any other criminal statute.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator ought to insist on the retention of that language. The elimination of the language suggested by the Senator from Montana would require proof of intent. If there is one thing on earth which is difficult to prove in a criminal case, it is intent. Usually, intent must be inferred from acts. We cannot probe into a man's mind with an X-ray and say, "This is his intent." The language "or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct," makes it easier to prove the intent. It may be inferred that any reasonable, sensible man knows that certain results follow certain acts. I think it would be much more easy to secure convictions if that language were retained.

Mr. WHEELER. If a person does an act with reason to believe that he is doing it for the purpose of injuring the Government, he does it with intent to injure the Government. The language to which I object simply does not make any sense. We do not want to convict persons who may do something innocently, and without any intent to injure. Under the language in the bill, if a person does something with intent to injure, he is guilty; but we do not want to go to the point where we say to a man that because he makes an innocent mistake he may be found guilty and sent to the penitentiary for 10 years or be fined $10,000. In times of hysteria and times of war we need to be careful. We should be just as careful to protect the innocent as to convict the guilty. I recall that when John Lord O'Brian had charge of the criminal division in the last war, he said to me, "We have much more difficulty in trying to keep United States attorneys from prosecuting people for treason when they are not guilty than we do in having them prosecute people who are guilty."

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, it seems to me the point the Senator from Texas makes is entitled to some consideration. I can well understand how a man might say, "I did not intend to do this," when the answer might be, "Any reasonable person would know that the thing you did would result in injury." It seems to me that there is a difference between a man who deliberately, knowingly, and intentionally does a thing and a man who does a thing which he ought as a reasonable man to know would lead to a certain result. He might say, "I did not intend to do it."

Mr. WHEELER. It does not make any difference whether or not he intended to do it. If a reasonable man does something, it is a question of fact for the jury to decide. Under this language, if he does it realizing that he is doing it for that purpose, he is guilty. There can be no question about it, and why undertake to change the language that is ordinarily used in every criminal statute? It might have some false construction put upon it by some foolish judge or some foolish district attorney. I think it would be a mistake to enlarge or attempt to enlarge the criminal statutes at this time or at any other time.

Mr. MINTON. I think that the amendment might well be adopted. We can take it to conference and give it further consideration there at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. I now ask that the similar House bill (H. R. 10465) be substituted for the Senate bill and presently considered.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10465) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, all after the enacting clause of the House bill will be stricken out and the Senate bill as amended inserted. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4297 will be indefinitely postponed. There was no objection.

JUNE THOMPSON, A MINOR

The bill (H. R. 3009) for the relief of June Thompson, a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY J. WISE

The bill (H. R. 4815) for the relief of Henry J. Wise, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR JOSEPH REIBER, A MINOR

The bill (H. R. 5040) for the relief of Arthur Joseph Reiber, a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAUL J. KOHANIK

The bill (H. R. 5314) for the relief of Paul J. Kohanik, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHRANIA HOLMES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1284) for the relief of Sophrania Holmes, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment on page 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$179" and insert "$500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sophrania Holmes, of Jasper County, Tex., the sum of $500 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries received as a result of a collision with a Civilian Conservation Corps truck and the private car in which Sophrania Holmes was a passenger on November 28, 1935, on Highway No. 63, in Jasper County, Tex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. E. V. MAKI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1874) for the relief of Mrs. E. V. Maki, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the beginning of line 7, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. E. V. Maki, of Escatawpa, Jackson County, Miss., the sum of $2,500. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Mrs. E. V. Maki on account of the loss of her son, Gaston Maki, who was killed on November 1, 1935, when the truck on which he was riding collided with a truck of the Civilian Conservation Corps bearing United States Department of Agriculture tag numbered 12–171 and operated by an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps named Howard Jones, said collision having occurred approximately 1 mile north of McHenry, Miss., on United States Highway No. 49: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES KLIEWE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5154) for the relief of Charles Kliewe, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$872", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William F. Kliewe, as legal guardian of his son, Charles Kliewe, a minor, of Pearl River, N. Y., the sum of $872.70 in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the personal injury sustained by the said Charles Kliewe, who was injured on March 14, 1938, by a tree felled by the Dutch elm disease eradication crew of the Department of Agriculture: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORGAN PIPE CACTUS NATIONAL MONUMENT, ARIZ.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4083) to permit mining within the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument in Arizona, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument, in the State of Arizona, shall hereafter be called and known as the "Organ Pipe Cactus National Recreational Area," and all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for that area under its previous designation may be used in the area as redesignated.

SEC. 2. That within the Organ Pipe Cactus National Recreational Area all mineral deposits of the classes and kinds now subject to location, entry, and patent under the mining laws of the United States shall be subject to disposal under such laws, with right of occupation and use of so much of the surface of the land as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the minerals and under such general regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national recreational area shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service. Insofar as applicable and not in conflict with this act, the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), as amended and supplemented, shall govern the promotion and regulation of the recreational area and the uses of such area shall be coordinated under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it will be observed that the amendment is one amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause. Inadvertently there were left out three or four words which I should like to have included in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 12, after the word "be", it is proposed to insert "exclusive of the lands containing them."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to change the designation of the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument, in the State of Arizona, and for other purposes."

CORONADO INTERNATIONAL MONUMENT, ARIZONA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4130) to provide for the establishment of the Coronado International Monument, in the State of Arizona, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 9, after the numerals 20, to strike out "all" and insert "west half"; and in line 14, after the word "establishment", to strike out the comma, so as to make the section read:

That for the purpose of permanently commemorating the explorations of Francisco Vásquez de Coronado, the President of the United States is authorized to declare, by proclamation, any lands within the following-described area, subject to all valid existing rights, to be established as the "Coronado International Monument":

GILA AND SALT RIVER MERIDIAN

Township 24 south, range 20 east, section 10, south half southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter; section 11, south half southwest quarter; section 13, southwest quarter northwest quarter, south half; section 14, northwest quarter, south half, northwest quarter northeast quarter, south half northeast quarter; section 15, all; section 22, all; section 23, all; section 24, all; township 24 south, range 21 east, section 17, south half southwest quarter; section 18, southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter; section 19, all; section 20, west half; aggregating approximately 2,880 acres: Provided, That said proclamation shall not be issued until the President of the United States shall have been advised through official channels that the Government of Mexico has established, or provided for the establishment of, an area of similar type and size adjoining the area described herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 24, after the word "monument", to insert:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any recreational or other development by the National Park Service within the 60-foot strip north of the international boundary between the United States and Mexico withdrawn by proclamation of the President dated May 27, 1907 (35 Stat., part II, p. 2136).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 6, after the word "develop", to insert the words "or used", and in line 10, after the word "purposes", to insert:

And provided further, That neither roads nor public campgrounds shall be constructed by the National Park Service within the south half southwest quarter of said section 10.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. In the administration of the monument area the Secretary shall not permit the construction of fences except (a) along the International Boundary, (b) beside monument roads or approach roads, and (c) around monument areas within which improvements have been located by the National Park Service: Provided, That any roads constructed within the monument area by the National Park Service shall include necessary cattle underpasses properly located for the passage of cattle across such roads: And provided further, That the right to the exclusive beneficial consumptive use for stockwatering purposes of any water heretofore developed or used for such purposes within the monument area shall remain in the present holders thereof, their heirs, assigns, successors, and administrators, so long as such water continues to be used exclusively for such purposes: And provided further, That neither roads nor public campgrounds shall be constructed by the National Park Service within the south half southwest quarter of said section 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6813) to accept the cession by the States of North Carolina and Tennessee of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Great Smoky Mountain National Park, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 19, after the word "for", to strike out "by and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior" and insert "and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That all guns, traps, nets, seines, fishing tackle, teams, horses, or means of transportation of every nature or description used by any person or persons within the limits of said park when engaged in killing, trapping, ensnaring, taking, or capturing such wild birds, fish, or animals contrary to the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized by the officers in said park and held pending prosecution of any person or persons arrested under the charge of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction under this act of such person or persons using said guns, traps, nets, seines, fishing tackle, teams, horses, or other means of transportation, such forfeiture shall be adjudicated as a penalty in addition to the other punishment prescribed in this act. Such forfeited property shall be disposed of and accounted for and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the forfeiture of teams, horses, or other means of transportation shall be in the discretion of the court.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am curious to know how the bill affects particularly the status of the national-park system. I do not at this time entertain any objection to the bill, but I should like to have from the Senator from Tennessee a statement and explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be very glad to give an explanation. The bill was prepared by the Department of the Interior and sent to both the House and the Senate. So there were similar bills in both bodies, and I believe the Senate bill has heretofore been passed.

The lands in the park were secured from several sources. The Rockefeller Foundation, in honor of Mrs. Laura Spellman Rockefeller, put up $5,000 to purchase a portion of what is known as the Great Smoky Mountains Park. In addition to that, the States of Tennessee and North Carolina put up, as I recall, between two and three million dollars apiece—I am speaking only from memory—to purchase lands. In addition to that a great many individual subscriptions were made for the purchase of lands. In addition to that, the United States Government, on three occasions, I think, put up other portions of the amount necessary.

By the bill the State of North Carolina and the State of Tennessee are simply deeding to the Federal Government lands in the park. In other words, the bill would place the entire body of land that now constitutes the park under the Government.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that this bill conforms to the status now pertaining to other national parks?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Those parks we have, mainly in the West, where the scenic portion of our country lies.

Mr. McKELLAR. A very large scenic portion lies also in the eastern section.

Mr. McNARY. That is true; there is nothing more beautiful perhaps than the region around the Great Smoky Mountains Park which lies in the States of North Carolina and Tennessee, for which I have a very sentimental feeling. In the case of the parks we have in the scenic portions of the Middle West and beyond the Rocky Mountains, title was taken, of course, and it resides in the Federal Government. The lands were acquired sometimes through grants, but usually by the transfer of jurisdiction from one department to another. For instance, in many cases the national parks have been taken from the National Forest Service, sometimes from the public domain, and in those instances there was a transfer of jurisdiction but not a transfer of title. I understand from this measure that the two States, having acquired lands through donations of funds, and having acquired title, are transferring the title to the National Park system, so that the lands in the Great Smoky Mountains Park will stand on the same footing, and occupy the same status as the land in all the national parks of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the bill at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

The Senator from North Carolina has made a suggestion that I think ought to appear in the RECORD. The Government having acquired title to the lands, the title to the lands is in the Government, but Tennessee and the State of North Carolina are ceding jurisdiction over the lands to the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. The jurisdiction follows the land and the title, just as it does in the case of all public property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was in section 5, page 5, line 24, to strike out "That upon the recommendation and approval of the Secretary of the Interior of a qualified candidate the", and insert "The", so as to make the section read:

The United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina and the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee shall jointly appoint a commissioner, who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any violations of law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes, authorized by this act. Such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn information, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor, or charged with a violation of the rules and regulations, or with a violation of any of the provisions of this act prescribed for the government of said park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in said park, and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to impose punishment and to adjudge the forfeiture prescribed. In all cases of conviction, an appeal shall lie from the judgment of said commissioner to the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina, or the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, respectively, depending upon the district in which the particular land in said park on which the offense shall have taken place is located; and the United States district courts in the afore-mentioned districts shall jointly prescribe the rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for appeal to said United States district courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 6, page 7, after the word "purpose", to strike out "upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior."

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 7, line 8, after the word "purpose", to strike out "upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That such of the United States commissioners for the western judicial district of North Carolina and the eastern judicial district of Tennessee as may be designated for the purpose, by the respective district courts for such districts shall have authority to exercise the same jurisdiction with respect to offenses against law and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, committed within their respective judicial districts, as the park commissioner provided for in this act is authorized to exercise.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Tennessee, if I may have it, to ask whether or not the criminal jurisdiction which is being given to a United States commissioner in accordance with this proposed act is in conformity with similar jurisdiction exercised in all other parts.

Mr. McKELLAR. My understanding is that it is. I was so informed at the time, and I think that it is just the same as it is in all the other national parks of the country; they have a uniform system, according to my understanding.

Mr. DANAHER. Is an accused person given the right of trial by jury before the United States commissioner?

Mr. McKELLAR. He is obliged to be given the right of trial by a jury in the case of any crime committed, of course. He has a constitutional right to have such a trial.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator understand that we are creating some new jurisdiction over this area?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. We could not possibly create a jurisdiction contrary to the terms of the Constitution.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, we are simply ceding the jurisdiction in law to the Federal Government, in view of the fact that the Federal Government has acquired title to an immense acreage of land. All the rights of citizens under the Bill of Rights are preserved. I take it there is an analogy in the case of post-office properties.

The United States Government has jurisdiction over its post-office property. If a crime is committed on the property, the United States Government may take jurisdiction, or the State may take jurisdiction, and the rule is that whichever first takes jurisdiction has it. Here, however, the jurisdiction is ceded to the Federal Government, in view of the fact that it is an immense acreage, about 400,000 acres of land, and it is just in the regular order of things that it should be done. Otherwise, the two States would have jurisdiction over land which is owned in fee simple by the Federal Government.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. Just one moment, please.

Let me say to the Senator that I have no quarrel whatever with the explanation he has submitted. Quite the contrary; I think it is probably a very feasible and proper way to reach this situation; but it was new to me to know that a United States commissioner was being given jurisdiction to conduct a jury trial even as to an offense within the park area. We do not have any such situation in my State.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error in assuming that the United States commissioner would have jurisdiction to impanel a jury and to try a person for a theft or for a misdemeanor with a jury, if a jury were demanded, or if a felony were committed. All that the commissioner may do is to act as a committing magistrate, and he would bind the defendant over to await the action of the Federal grand jury. He would have no authority to try him.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me assure the Senator from Utah that I am certain he has misconstrued the language appearing in section 5 of the bill, because for the offenses described by that section the power to try the cases is expressly conferred. Moreover, the accused, if convicted, is given a right of appeal to the next term of the United States district court in the State in which the offense takes place, and I respectfully commend that particular section to the attention of the Senator from Utah. There is a new jurisdiction in the particular that the crimes or offenses described by that section are triable by the commissioner.

Mr. KING. I should have some doubt as to the validity of a statute which conferred upon a commissioner who exercises merely the functions of a committing magistrate, power to impanel juries and to try persons who, it is alleged, have committed some offense. It is barely possible that the Federal Government would have the authority, although I had not so recognized it, to confer upon a committing magistrate the authority to impanel a jury and to try an individual for the alleged infraction of some Federal statute.

Mr. DANAHER. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it was the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] who said that a jury trial would be provided; but I wish to call attention definitely to the fact that the matter of trying persons accused of violation of the provisions of this statute, if passed, will be given to the United States commissioner who will be appointed pursuant to section 5.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I merely want to ask whether there is any such officer. This man does not seem to be a United States commissioner in the general sense of the term. He is called a park commissioner. He is appointed jointly by the court of Tennessee and the court of North Carolina. I wonder whether or not there is any such officer in existence in any of the other national parks.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know how that is as to other parks; but under section 5 the Senator will see that the district judges of eastern Tennessee and of western North Carolina shall jointly have the right to appoint this commissioner, and that makes him a United States commissioner for Tennessee in the part of the territory which is in Tennessee and also a United States commissioner for North Carolina in the part of the territory which is in North Carolina. A jury trial is provided, but it is in the courts and not by the commissioner.

Mr. DANAHER. On the appeal.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the appeal.

Mr. DANAHER. That is my understanding, too.

There is only one other question which I should like to direct to the Senator from Tennessee. In section 9 the bill provides that the park commissioner must live within certain boundaries. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee if the Mr. Eakin of whom I have heard the Senator from Tennessee speak is the commissioner of this park who would be appointed under section 9?

Mr. McKELLAR. He would have to be appointed by the judge. He is not so appointed now. He is just a park commissioner. I do not know whether or not he would be appointed; but he lives there.

Mr. DANAHER. Then let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that when the words "park commissioner" are used on page 8, line 12, the bill really is referring to this new quasi-judicial officer.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding.

Mr. DANAHER. All right. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLFUL INJURY OR DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIALS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to revert to Calendar No. 2210, Senate bill 4297. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was the House bill passed, or was the Senate bill passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill was passed, striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the text of the Senate bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I find, upon examining the House bill, that the House bill did not contain the objectionable provisions which I had moved to strike out of the Senate bill; and, for the RECORD, I feel that the House bill was all right as it came over from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the House bill was passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if it is to be reconsidered, I should like to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which House bill 10465 was ordered to a third reading and passed is reconsidered. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to interfere with the right to strike.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment is simply to say that the act of striking itself shall not be an offense.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me the preservation of the right to strike would not be sufficient unless the Senator put in the words "by a labor organization," or "by a recognized labor organization," or something of the kind. Otherwise, the right to strike of itself might be considered something entirely different.

Mr. MINTON. I am perfectly willing to accept the modification of my amendment suggested by the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before going any further, may the Chair state the parliamentary situation? The text of the House bill is not under consideration. The bill bears the House number, but the text of the bill is that of the Senate bill with the amendment of the Senator from Montana in it. Does the Senator from Montana desire to reconsider the vote by which his amendment to the House bill was adopted? The measure before the Senate is really the Senate bill, bearing the number of the House bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the Senate bill, and then to pass the House bill, or bring it back for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the language in the Senate bill which was stricken out is not in the House bill, it seems to me the best thing to do is to pass the House bill without striking out all the language after the enacting clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true unless there is to be another amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even so, the measure would go back to the House as a House bill.

The Senator from Indiana proposes to provide that the right to strike shall not be abridged. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has made a suggestion about limiting the right to strike to labor organizations. I do not know, of course, whether or not there are labor organizations in all these institutions. It seems to me that if we are to guarantee the right to strike, we ought to make it apply to all workers, and not simply to those who may belong to an organization. The place where the strike occurs may be one where there is no organization.

Mr. MINTON. I think so. The only purpose of the amendment is to provide that striking itself shall not be considered and construed to constitute willful and intentional injury of the property.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Has it been held anywhere, by any judge, at any time, that the right to strike has been abridged or that striking would be illegal? I had not heard of it. The right to strike is inherent among individual rights.

Mr. MINTON. A court might conceivably hold that striking itself indicated an intent to injure. It is out of an abundance of caution that the amendment is offered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not quite clear as to what is meant by "interfere with the right to strike." The place in the bill where the Senator proposes to put the amendment may make a difference. Where does the Senator from Indiana intend to place that language in the bill?

Mr. MINTON. As a general proviso, that nothing in the act shall be construed so as to interfere with the right to strike.

Mr. AUSTIN. It seems to me that all one would have to do would be to cover a willful act of destruction by some evidence that it was part of a strike and this act would protect him.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no; not if in the striking the workers intentionally and willfully injure the property. The mere act of striking itself should not be construed to be a willful or an intentional injury of property.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Senator has that kind of an amendment, I think I would not be opposed to it. What he is apparently proposing, however, is something which would nullify the effect of the proposed law. I suggest to the Senator that he put the amendment in the form in which he has recently stated it is his intention to provide, rather than in the form in which he has presented it. As it appears, it is a prohibition against giving any effect to the proposed act, if the acts of destruction and sabotage are committed under the name or in the guise of a strike. We do not want that sort of legislation.

Mr. MINTON. Certainly not, and that is not the purpose of the amendment. The purpose of the amendment is merely to provide that the act of striking itself shall not be construed to be a willful or intentional injury.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is another feature suggested to me just now, that this seems on its face to recognize the right to strike against the Government; not only that, but to strike against the Government in time of peril. It seems to me that effect is contrary to all that I know the Senator from Indiana stands for.

Mr. MINTON. There is no purpose in the amendment except to provide that in the construction of the proposed law the mere act of striking itself shall not be construed to be a willful or intentional injury.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Senator will put his amendment in that form, I think there will be no objection.

Mr. MINTON. I offer the amendment in that form. As I propose it, at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, it provides that "the act of striking shall not be construed to be an intentional or willful injury within the meaning of this act."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Suppose a gun were in process of manufacture, and the effect of striking at a particular moment, at a particular point in the process, might result in the destruction of the gun, because the proper time for cooling would not be afforded, or something of that kind. Does the Senator mean that such an act of destroying a gun should not be construed as sabotage, and subject to the provisions of the law?

Mr. MINTON. I mean only that the act of striking itself shall not be construed to be a willful or intentional injury.

Mr. TAFT. But the act of striking itself, under some conditions, might result in the destruction of very valuable war material of the United States, and it seems to me that under those circumstances those contemplating a strike should wait, or make some provision by which such a thing as I have suggested should not occur. It seems to me the amendment is not necessary. It seems to me that if material is willfully destroyed, whether it is by strike or otherwise, there should be responsibility. The act merely prohibits the destruction and injury of war materials; it does not prohibit striking, or the cessation of work, or the failure to go ahead with war material; but under some circumstances striking may be equivalent to the destruction of war material, and in such circumstances I think that kind of a strike, engaged in without taking care of such a situation as I have described, should be covered by the proposed act.

Mr. MINTON. I do not think a strike should be covered, unless the injury was intended, was knowingly done, unless there was an intention to injure the property.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator's amendment does not take into account what the intention is, and if the amendment goes into the law, it merely wipes out the crime altogether.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, as I read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, it would prohibit a court from giving any weight to an act of striking in testing the question of sabotage. I do not think the Senator from Indiana intends it to have that absolute effect, does he?

Mr. MINTON. I do not think it does have it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let us read it. I am afraid it does. It reads:

> The act of striking shall not be construed to be an intentional or willful injury within the meaning of this act.

It might be, but if we pass this type of legislation, although there is in fact a willful injury and an intentional injury within the meaning of the act, we prohibit a court from giving it that effect, do we not?

Mr. MINTON. Though there may be some injury, unless the injury were intended, unless it was knowingly committed, that is, unless the act of striking were committed with the purpose of intentionally injuring the property, I do not think the law should have any such construction.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Indiana that it occurs to me that there is no danger, under the bill as it is drawn, of the mere act of striking, if innocently engaged in, being subject to the law. On the other hand, I think the Senator's amendment goes a little too far. Under the proposed act, if one man should take such action as is described for the purpose of injuring the national defense, he would be guilty and would be sent to the penitentiary, but if all employees in a factory did it, they would be exempt, as I read the Senator's amendment.

Mr. MINTON. I do not think so, unless the one man who acted intended to willfully injure the property.

Mr. CONNALLY. I say, if one man committed an act of sabotage, he would be guilty and would be sent to the penitentiary, but if a majority of the workers did the same thing, because it was a strike they would be exempt, as I see it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator is correct. As a matter of fact, one man may strike or two men may strike. The proposed act does go a long way. It provides:

> Whoever with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the strengthening of its national defense * * * shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any national-defense material * * * as herein defined, shall, upon conviction—

And so forth. Some courts might hold that when a group of union men struck, regardless of their living conditions or anything else, it was with the intent of injuring or interfering with the national defense. Employees might strike without interfering with the national defense, or they might do it with the intention of interfering with the production of materials in the particular factory until the conditions were bettered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The law and the courts have recognized the right of employees to strike. It seems to me the language proposed contemplates some physical injury to the property, some physical act brought to bear upon the property which would result in damage or injury. I am wondering whether the amendment is really necessary in order to safeguard the rights of employees.

Mr. MINTON. It is out of an abundance of caution, at the suggestion of organized labor, that I offer the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I am in sympathy with the object, but I am wondering whether the bill contemplates the sort of injury which might occur if a man or any group of men quit work and walk out. That is not a physical injury brought to bear on the property itself.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator that under the bill, unless the striking was engaged in for the purpose of injury, they could not possibly be guilty.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Because the general law gives them the right to strike. Unless the court and the jury believed that they did it for the purpose of injuring the national defense, they could not be convicted. I hope the Senator will not press his amendment. I am sympathetic with it, but it is a very serious matter, and I hope he will not press it.

Mr. WHEELER. Why not put the bill over until the Senator has a chance to look into it further? I suggest that it go over until we have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

SUSPENSION OF ENFORCEMENT OF CERTAIN CIVIL LIABILITIES

The bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] explain the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that we had under consideration a short while ago the National Guard bill. The Senate, and later the House, adopted an amendment to the bill extending the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of 1918 to the National Guard men. Then when we had under consideration the so-called conscription bill a similar amendment was adopted and is now the law. The amendment that was then proposed in both acts, and now written into the law, left out certain provisions of the 1918 act, because they required revision in order to be brought up to date, namely, the insurance provision, the tax provision, and the provision in reference to public lands. So the amendment that was adopted does not relate to insurance, taxes, or to public lands.

The main purpose of the bill is to include within the civil relief to be granted to the members of the regular staffs of the Army and Navy and the National Guard men, and the draftees, the benefits of the old insurance provisions of the 1918 act and of the tax provisions and of the public-lands provisions, all brought up to date.

The provisions contained in the present bill have been recommended by the War Department, and prepared after consultation with the Department of the Interior and the Treasury Department.

Briefly, if the Senator from Utah desires that I explain those additional provisions, I may observe that, in respect to insurance, the benefits of the act are proposed to be extended to those in the military service who have policies of insurance not in excess of $5,000. If anyone has a policy or policies of insurance in excess of $5,000 the amount is reduced to $5,000 insofar as the provisions of this act are concerned.

Instead of having the War Risk Insurance Board administer the insurance provisions, the Veterans' Administrator administers them. Any person in military service may make application to the Veterans' Administration, stating what policy or policies he has, and that he desires to take advantage of the provisions of this act.

The Veterans' Administrator then passes on the application, and determines whether the applicant is connected with the military service, and in the event that by reason of his military service the beneficiary under the insurance policy is unable to meet his premiums, a certificate is issued by the Veterans' Administrator to the insurance company holding the policy in the amount of the premium that may be defaulted.

The Federal Government has a first lien and privilege upon the policy to reimburse itself in the event that the beneficiary does not within 1 year after termination of his military service make good the defaulted premiums that he was unable to meet by reason of his military service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean from his explanation that we are superimposing upon the present situation all the statutes that were applicable during the World War?

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. KING. The reason I make inquiry is that in the Finance Committee recently, and particularly in the meetings of the conferees of the House and the Senate, the question arose as to what provision should be made with respect to the cases of soldiers and those who come under the Social Security Insurance Act and railroad employees. My recollection is that, aside from dealing with the question of railroad employees, the committee took the position that the subject was so broad that it needed further consideration, and that the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee early in January or February, as soon as Congress meets, would take up the question of a new tax bill, and would then take into consideration the question of social insurance and what disposition should be made of certain cases—in fact, take up the whole subject.

Mr. OVERTON. This measure does not relate to that phase of the problem at all.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that we are now treating of a matter which needs further legislation in the event that we are drawn into war, or even if we are not drawn into war. But under the present national-emergency situation we are superimposing the conditions, and so on, as they existed in the World War, and I was wondering whether it was wise to do that.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me say that as I understand it—I am not a member of the Finance Committee—but what I gather from the newspapers is that the Finance Committee did not have under consideration insurance premiums due on policies by those who might be drafted into the service but what they had under consideration was legislation with respect to social-security benefits and not in reference to insurance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. REED. I have examined the bill, and I am sure the distinguished and able Senator from Louisiana would not insist that a bill of this importance, with such far-reaching implications, which affects contracts and life-insurance policies and even homestead entries, should pass on the Consent Calendar. I am in sympathy with the purposes which the Senator from Louisiana and the authors of the bill are seeking to accomplish. I simply do not think the bill ought to be passed in this way, on the Consent Calendar, with only 5 minutes' consideration. Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest the bill go over.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. In substance, the main provisions of the bill are already law. We adopted them in the Senate and in the House when we passed the National Guard Act and the Draft Act. The matter of suits against those drafted into the military service, stays of proceedings and writs, purchases on installment, rental obligations, and all those things were considered and acted upon and passed, and are now law. They were adopted at the present session of Congress. What the present bill mainly does is to extend the insurance provisions and the tax provisions and the public-lands provisions to what is existing law.

Mr. REED. If it is already in the law there is no occasion to reenact it.

Mr. OVERTON. We are not reenacting the tax provisions. We have not enacted them. We are not reenacting the insurance provisions.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. OVERTON. Before that is done, let me say to the Senator that this is considered to be a very important bill. There is a great deal of public interest in it.

Mr. REED. May I agree with the Senator on that statement?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly. I understand the Senator's attitude, but what I wish now to do is to ask our majority leader that we have an opportunity to take up the bill for consideration before adjournment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator is securing consideration of the bill as soon as possible. We cannot fix the time now.

SALES TAX IN NATIONAL PARKS AND UNITED STATES RESERVATIONS

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 1692, House bill 6687. I wish to make a brief statement before the request is put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar 1692, House bill 6687. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I shall not object at this time, but I think that when bills are passed once, we ought not to go back and keep calling up bills which have been passed over, because some of us are interested in bills appearing later on the calendar, and we may never reach some of the bills toward the end of the calendar. It is a bad procedure. In the future I shall object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 6687, Calendar No. 1692?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the Senator who objected present?

Mr. BROWN. He is present, and I have discussed the bill with him. He has no further objection to it. I refer to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

I shall be glad to make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I objected to this bill originally on behalf of the Navy Department. There is a conflict between the Treasury Department and the Attorney General on one side, and the Army and Navy on the other, as to the wisdom of this proposed legislation. However, I am disposed to let the matter be settled by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and not delay or postpone action at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Let me suggest to the Senator—and I hope it will not inconvenience him—that we pass the bill over until we shall have completed the calendar.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator mean that as soon as we shall have concluded the calendar he will have no objection to considering the bill as a part of the calendar?

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I was unable to hear what the Senator from Michigan said at the conclusion of his remarks, as to when and how the matter will be considered.

Mr. BROWN. I understand the bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. And will be considered under the rule applicable to the calendar?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not want to be in the position of having a large number of bills to be considered, which would consume considerable time, after we shall have finished the calendar.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN DISTRICT POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8846) to provide for the retirement of certain members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, the United States Park Police force, the White House Police force, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 9, after the word "service", to insert "and having reached the age of 55 years", and on the same page, line 16, to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved September 1, 1916, is amended by adding after the fourth paragraph of such section a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Whenever any member of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, or of the United States Park Police force, or of the White House Police force, or the Fire Department of the District of Columbia has served 25 years or more as a member of such department or police force, or the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, or any combination of such service, and having reached the age of 55 years, he may, at his election, be retired from the service of any such police department or police force, or fire department, and shall be entitled to receive retirement compensation from the said policemen and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia, in an amount equal to 50 percent per annum of the salary received by him at the date of retirement: Provided, however, That in any fiscal year any such retirement shall be in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and in no fiscal year shall the amount of all such retirements authorized under the provisions of this paragraph aggregate more than $30,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the word "service" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "or whenever any member of the United States Secret Service who has served 25 years in the service of the United States Government, the duties of whom in whole or in part related to the protection of the life of the President and who has actively performed duties other than clerical for 10 years or more directly related to the protection of the President extended by the Secret Service Division."

On page 2, line 12, after the word "force", it is proposed to insert "or Division."

On page 2, line 22, following the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That when any member of the United States Secret Service Division shall have performed service in connection with the protection of the President for 10 years or more, thereby becoming subject to future retirement after 25 years' service under the provisions of this act, that he shall be authorized to transfer all funds to his credit in the United States Civil Service retirement fund to the policemen and firemen's relief fund of the District of Columbia, and that after the transfer of such funds, the salary of that member shall be subject to the same deductions for credit to the policemen and firemen's relief fund of the District of Columbia as the deductions from salaries of other members contributing to that fund, and he shall be entitled to the same benefits as other members contributing to that fund."

Mr. BARKLEY. Three changes are suggested. I ask that they be considered as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment is to include about 15 White House secret-service men. The provision is that there shall be transferred from the civil-service retirement fund whatever accumulation has been brought about by the contributions from their salaries, and that it shall be added to the policemen and firemen's retirement fund of the District of Columbia, and that thereafter the same contribution shall be made by those men as is now being made by the men taken care of in the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand, the Senator's amendment does not refer to the White House policemen?

Mr. BARKLEY. It refers to the While House Secret Service men.

Mr. OVERTON. Does it interfere at all with the language in the bill which reads: "and having reached the age of 55 years"?

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. OVERTON. They must have attained the age of 55 years?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct; and they must have been in the Service for 25 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I happened to be out of the Chamber. May we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the word "Service" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "or whenever any member of the United States Secret Service who has served 25 years in the service of the United States Government, the duties of whom in whole or in part related to the protection of the life of the President and who has actively performed duties other than clerical for 10 years or more directly related to the protection of the President extended by the Secret Service Division."

On page 2, line 12, after the word "force", it is proposed to insert "or Division."

On page 2, line 22, following the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That when any member of the United States Secret Service Division shall have performed service in connection with the protection of the President for 10 years or more, thereby becoming subject to future retirement after 25 years' service under the provisions of this act, that he shall be authorized to transfer all funds to his credit in the United States Civil Service Retirement Fund to the Policemen and Firemen's Relief Fund of the District of Columbia, and that after the transfer of such funds, the salary of that member shall be subject to the same deductions for credit to the Policemen and Firemen's Relief Fund of the District of Columbia as the deductions from salaries of other members contributing to that fund, and he shall be entitled to the same benefits as other members contributing to that fund.

Mr. DAVIS. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a young man going on the police force at the age of 21 must serve until he is 55 years of age. It might be rather difficult to serve that length of time. I think the committee amendment ought to have been rejected.

Mr. OVERTON. In explanation of the committee amendment, the law as it now exists provides for the retirement of any policeman or fireman in case of physical or mental disability. If for any reason he is unable to serve, he may retire, although he has been in the service only a few months. What the amendment contemplates is that an able-bodied mentally capable policeman or fireman should not retire until he has reached the age of 55. It seems to me that a fireman or policeman who is mentally and physically able to serve at the age of 40, 45, or 48 should serve. That is the reason why the committee amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK H. LUSSE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3489) for the relief of the estate of Frank H. Lusse, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Frank H. Lusse, formerly of the Kentucky National Guard, in the sum of $4,749, representing payments made by him incident to the appointment of George (Richard) James, as caretaker, employed under section 90 of the National Defense Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 32 (Supp.), sec. 42), during the period January 1, 1927, to April 30, 1932, to the extent the payments are otherwise correct, where the services have been performed and the United States has received the full benefits of the payments, notwithstanding the services were actually performed by another than the person appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Frank H. Lusse, formerly of the Kentucky National Guard."

F. W. HEATON

The bill (H. R. 6512) for the relief of F. W. Heaton was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BURIAL AND FUNERAL EXPENSES OF DECEASED VETERANS OF REGULAR ESTABLISHMENT

The bill (H. R. 7731) to provide for the burial and funeral expenses of deceased veterans of the Regular Establishment who were discharged for disability incurred in the service in line of duty, or in receipt of pension for service-connected disability, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER B. M'DOUGALL AND HERBERT MAIER

The bill (H. R. 7276) for the relief of Walter B. McDougall and Herbert Maier was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LILLIAN BROWN AND SILAS YOUNG

The bill (H. R. 7302) for the relief of Lillian Brown and Silas Young was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEN B. BOYER

The bill (H. R. 8301) for the relief of Allen B. Boyer was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEADER OF NAVAL ACADEMY BAND

The bill (S. 1146) for the relief of the leader of the Naval Academy Band was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of enactment of this act the leader of the Naval Academy Band shall have the rank and receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant, United States Navy. In computing the pay and allowances of the said official all service in the Navy of whatever nature rendered by him shall be counted as commissioned service.

AUTHORIZATION FOR PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD TO CROSS NEW YORK AVENUE NE.

The bill (S. 4295) to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., by means of an underpass, to cross New York Avenue NE., to extend, construct, maintain, and operate certain industrial sidetracks, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., operating lessee of all of the railroads and appurtenant properties of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. in the District of Columbia, be, and it is hereby, authorized to establish switch and siding connections with its tracks in parcel 130/9, to cross New York Avenue by means of a suitable underpass, and thence into and through parcel 129/33 and lot 801 in square 3585, as well as into and through the bed of Brentwood Road between New York Avenue and Florida Avenue, if and when said road is officially vacated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, all of said parcels of land being thus known and identified on the plat books of the Surveyor's Office of the District of Columbia, with all switches, crossings, turn-outs, extensions, spurs, and sidings as may be or become necessary for the development of the said squares and parcels of land above indicated for such use as may be permitted in the use district or districts in which said squares and parcels of land are now or may hereafter be included as defined in the zoning regulations of the District of Columbia and shown in the official atlases of the Zoning Commission.

SEC. 2. Before any of the work above authorized shall be begun on the ground a plan or plans thereof shall be prepared and submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their approval, and only to the extent that such plans shall be so approved shall said work or any portion thereof be permitted or undertaken.

SEC. 3. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting or abridging the authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1353), entitled "An act to provide for the elimination of grade crossings of steam railroads in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act.

DR. A. L. RIDINGS

The bill (H. R. 9284) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. A. L. Ridings was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah kindly explain the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of years ago a law was enacted under the terms of which persons were required to take examination within a limited period of time in order to continue their practice in the District of Columbia. A number of persons were away from home or temporarily absent and did not avail themselves of the privilege. We have from time to time passed bills permitting them to take examinations. This is a case in that category.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER BAVISOTTO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5336) for the relief of Peter Bavisotto, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter Bavisotto, the sum of $495.80 representing the amount of premiums paid by him on an invalidated policy of war-risk insurance: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS—COMPLAINTS TO MARITIME COMMISSION

The bill (H. R. 8354) to provide for complaint, assistance to farmers, and intervention by the Secretary of Agriculture in proceedings before the United States Maritime Commission relating to the transportation of farm products was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is not present today. He has sent me an amendment to this measure which he asked me to present. I submitted it to my friend the leader upon the other side who has charge of the bill, and, as I understand his statement, he has no objection to it. I send the amendment to the desk and move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have a letter—it is not now before me and I am not certain that this is the bill to which reference is made—opposing an amendment of the Senator from Virginia offered to some bill. Will the Senator let the bill go over so that I may ascertain whether the letter to which I have referred applies to this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The Chair will have to say that if the amendment is offered he will have to ask that the bill go over. He objects to the present consideration of the bill if the amendment is to be offered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment inserted in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. . Section 13 (a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: "or (11) any employee employed in handling, drying, packing, packaging, processing, storing, canning, freezing, grading, marketing, or delivering to storage or to market, or to a carrier for transportation to market, any fresh fruit or fresh vegetable, or any products consisting wholly or in chief volume of fresh fruits or fresh vegetables, including dried fruits, or any employment in connection with or incidental to any of the foregoing; when such operations are performed prior to the delivery to a terminal market for distribution for consumption."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Agricultural Adjustment Act contains a wise provision that in respect to the adjustment of freight rates on farm products jurisdiction is conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture to make complaint. This bill merely carries that idea forward to include the United States Maritime Commission. That is the bill as originally introduced, and I think no one could have objection to it.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia through the instrumentality of the Senator from Utah seems to bear down upon the Labor Relations Act. It has its application, but I am not particularly familiar with the reaction that the House might have to such an amendment. Therefore, in view of the amendment to which objection is directed, I make no objection to the bill going over for further consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a statement to accompany the proposed amendment. I am not very familiar with the matter, but I have offered the amendment at the request of the Senator from Virginia. In view of the attitude and position taken by the junior Senator from Utah, I shall not object to the bill going over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Utah will be printed in the RECORD, and the bill will be passed over.

The statement presented by Mr. KING is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON AMENDMENT TO FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938, TO BE PROPOSED BY SENATOR GLASS TO H. R. 8354 OR H. R. 9654

1. The amendment effectuates the intent of Congress in the passage of the Biermann amendment to the wage and hour law (sec. 13a (10)). See RECORD of May 24, 1938. The purpose being to give a complete exemption to agricultural activities.

2. The exemption has been denied to everyone by the administrator's definition of "area of production" which states that the exemption does not apply to anybody if he employs more than 10 people. There is no conceivable relationship between the number of employees and an area in which farm products are grown. There is no practical way to have any case litigated in the courts until actual violation.

3. The amendment only exempts those activities handling fresh fruits and vegetables. It does not exempt the handling of nonseasonal fruits and vegetables such as soups, pork and beans, hominy, etc.

4. It will not exempt the packers in the large cities. Aside from union contracts, conditions of skilled labor, etc., less than 4 percent of the packing of fresh fruits and vegetables is done in cities of 100,000 population, less than 7 percent in cities of 50,000, and less than 10 percent in cities of 25,000. This shows that activities handling fresh products are located out in the country—in the area of production where there is no reservoir of labor and where the labor is unskilled, most of them coming from the adjoining farms.

5. In such activities, the cost of a unit of production is the criterion and not the hourly wage. Those employing unskilled labor are required to employ two to three times as many persons and their total labor cost is more than that of employers of skilled labor. Consequently, if present regulations apply, all such activities will be concentrated in the large cities and these industries will be lost to the farmers and country labor.

6. Any increased cost of production comes out of the farmer in the form of a decrease in price for the raw product. The farmer is unable to pay the wages prescribed by the law and consequently will be unable to harvest his own crops.

7. These agricultural activities should not be subject to any such law, as they are governed entirely by the elements and weather. The crops must be handled when ready regardless of hours or they spoil and are lost.

8. The substance of the amendment was twice adopted by the House in May 1940 when the Barden and Norton bills were debated, although both bills were finally recommitted. See Bland amendment—RECORD of May 2, 1940, page 5450, and WADSWORTH'S remarks in RECORD of April 26, 1940, at page 5139.

ADDITIONS TO UINTAH AND OURAY RESERVATIONS, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 9705) to make more effective use of certain parts of the public domain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire first to call attention to the title of the bill. Its title reads:

An act to make more effective use of certain parts of the public domain, and for other purposes.

The bill provides first for the transfer of numerous tracts of lands to two Indian reservations in Utah. It affects the Uintah and Ouray Tribes of Indians and their reservations, respectively. So the bill provides for adding of public domain to those reservations in the first instance. In the second instance it provides for the transfer of certain lands from the State to the reservations, the State to receive land in lieu of the land thus transferred.

The bill then follows that up by providing that these tribes may go into the Court of Claims and assert their rights against the United States because of a claim of unfulfilled treaties.

The bill went to the Public Lands Committee. It had public-land features which made it possible and proper for it to go to that committee.

Inasmuch as this bill carries three or four different items of different character—the addition of land to reservations, the transfer of lands, the exchange of lands, and also authorizes the tribes to go into the Court of Claims—the Senate committee thought it would be proper to add to the bill some additional sections, embodying provisions which have heretofore passed the Senate. For example, on former occasions the Senate has passed bills empowering the Eastern Cherokee Indians residing in North Carolina to go into the Court of Claims and assert their rights against the Government, if they have any.

Heretofore this body passed a bill providing that the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians might go into the Court of Claims. Those bills have not gotten through the other body. I am not criticizing the other body; I am only stating the fact that presents itself to the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to offer an objection to this bill because of the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma. It appears there have been added to it separate and related items.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is well within his rights to make objection, but so long as conditions exist as they are now, proposed legislation of this character is at a standstill. So, if the objection is made we have no option but to accept the objection and wait for some future time to take these bills up on their merits.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret very much that objection is made because this bill has much merit and certain features of it have been deferred for a long time. It seems to me that we ought to take action, and I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will in the near future seek an opportunity to have this bill considered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to appeal to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Kansas has left the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state for the RECORD then that the Senator from Kansas seems to believe that an amendment cannot be offered——

Mr. REED entered the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was saying that I wanted to appeal to the Senator to withdraw his objection. He seems to think that under the parliamentary practice, an amendment that is not germane cannot be offered to any bill. That is undoubtedly true with regard to appropriation bills, because it is so expressly provided by the rules; but in the case of a piece of general legislation that goes to the House, if it is not an appropriation bill or a revenue bill, any amendment may be added which the House wants to add or the Senate can add anything it desires when a House bill comes over here.

These matters are not so unrelated anyway. The original bill coming from the House deals with Indian lands, adding certain lands to Indian reservations; and the bill now does that. It also includes matters with regard to tribes of Indians which have treaties with the United States Government and which they claim the Government has violated. There is no way that question can be determined unless they are permitted to go into the Court of Claims and try their case against the United States Government. No one can sue the United States Government without consent of the Government expressed through Congress. There is no amount set out in the bill, but it provides that about five large tribes of Indians may bring suit in the Court of Claims. It is all left to them, after they sue, as to what the court will allow them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, even before the distinguished Senator from Nevada delivered his admonition, I fully understood the legislative situation. The objection still stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHEROKEE INDIAN NATION OR TRIBE

The bill (S. 3133) for the relief of the Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,185.72 with interest at 5 percent from June 30, 1919, to the date of the appropriation of the said sum herein authorized, which sum was appropriated by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat., pp. 21, 22), and by the terms of said act was required to be "credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund," a trust fund bearing interest at 5 percent, but which said sum was erroneously deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipt, by miscellaneous receipt covering warrant No. 122, as of August 14, 1919.

When appropriated said money shall be credited to the Cherokee school fund and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said money to the surviving attorneys of the Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe selected by them in pursuance to the act of March 19, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 27), to reimburse in part said attorneys for expenses heretofore incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the claims of the said Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe, brought under said act of March 19, 1924, in the name of "The Cherokee Nation against the United States."

CONTRACTS WITH POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 3485) to amend section 226 of the act of March 4, 1909, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 226 of the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1134; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 356), is amended to read as follows:

"Whoever, being a person employed in the Postal Service, shall become interested in any contract for carrying the mails or in any contract or agreement with or any bid before the Post Office Department, or shall act as agent, with or without compensation, for any contractor or person offering to become a contractor in any business before the Department, shall be immediately dismissed from office, and shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

CUSTODIAL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 892) to extend to custodial-service employees employed by the Post Office Department certain benefits applicable to postal employees, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "reached", to insert "Provided, That no individual employee shall receive an increase in excess of $60 per year"; and on page 2, line 5, after "July 1", to strike out "1939" and insert "1941", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That every custodial-service employee (other than charmen and charwomen working part time) employed by the Post Office Department shall, at the end of each year's satisfactory service, be promoted to the compensation rate next higher than that of which he is then in receipt until the maximum rate of compensation for the grade to which his position is allocated is reached: Provided, That no individual employee shall receive an increase in excess of $60 per year.

This act shall not be applied so as to reduce the compensation of any custodial-service employee employed by the Post Office Department or so as to result in the dismissal of any such employee.

This act shall take effect July 1, 1941.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SELLWOOD STATION OF PORTLAND (OREG.) POST OFFICE

The bill (H. R. 8069) to reform the lease for the Sellwood Station of the Portland (Oreg.) post office was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8171) to require the filling of all vacancies in the position of assistant postmasters in first- and second-class post offices was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is there any necessity for instructing the proper officials to fill these vacancies? It would seem to me that if the law provides for the office, when a vacancy occurs there certainly is an authorization to some agency or person to fill the office—either the President, or some official of the Department. I was wondering what the necessity of this legislation is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill has been before the Post Office Committee for quite a while. The committee has considered the bill a number of times. The last time it was considered, the committee by a very large majority reported it favorably, and it is on the calendar. The bill will cost, of course, some additional money. It merely directs the Postmaster General to fill the positions of assistant postmasters in various post offices of the first and second class.

Mr. KING. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection. There seems to me to be particularly good reasons why the bill should pass at this time.

On numerous occasions the Post Office Department officials have testified to the Committee on Appropriations that the Department fills as many as possible of these assistant postmaster vacancies with the funds which have been appropriated. In the past, the Budget Bureau has not been willing to approve funds for all of the offices; but since the passage of the Selective Service Act and the calling out of the National Guard the Department anticipates that in many instances postmasters will be called to the service, and in some cases in which the vacancies have not been filled there will be a serious condition.

I assure the Senator that the Post Office Committee has given the matter very careful consideration, and feels that the bill is a meritorious one; and I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that my understanding is that the Department has repeatedly reported adversely on the proposed legislation, and is not in favor of it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Department has filed an adverse report because the legislation is not in accordance with the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget. That was the only basis of the report. From the point of view of the actual administration of the office, the Department officials favor it.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator to let the bill go over, and I will make further inquiry of the Department regarding it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EIGHT-HOUR WORKDAY FOR CERTAIN POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 9670) to provide an 8-hour workday and payment for overtime for dispatchers and mechanics-in-charge in the motor-vehicle service of the Postal Service was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL AGENCIES AT FOREIGN SEAPORTS AND AIRPORTS

The bill (H. R. 9991) to amend section 4021 of the Revised Statutes and to repeal section 4023 of the Revised Statutes relating to establishment of postal agencies was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPOINTMENT OF GRADUATES OF NAVAL RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

The bill (H. R. 10406) to authorize the appointment of graduates of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps to the line of the Regular Navy, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 296) to define common carriers by water engaged in certain commerce with the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to have from some member of the committee an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. I would rather have it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL WITHIN TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9851) authorizing special arrangements in the transportation of mail within the Territory of Alaska, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, in section 1, page 3, line 3, after the word "contract", to insert:

That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may fix the postage for the mails carried, or any part thereof, by aircraft to, from, or within Alaska, at rates not exceeding in any case 30 cents per ounce or 15 cents per half ounce, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever required by the Postmaster General, any air carrier authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Authority under title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to engage in the transportation of mail in the Territory of Alaska shall, within the limits of such authorization, transport, in addition to mail on which postage shall have been paid at the rate provided by the act of June 12, 1934 (48 Stat. 933), as amended, any other classes of mail bearing the appropriate postage for its respective class, and the Postmaster General is authorized to require such transportation. The rates of compensation to be paid such carrier for the transportation of all mail shall be fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 973). When in the opinion of the Postmaster General the needs of the Postal Service require the transportation of mail by aircraft in the Territory of Alaska, where no transportation of mail by aircraft has been authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Authority under title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, the Postmaster General, notwithstanding any other provision of law, is authorized to contract for the carriage of all classes of mail bearing the appropriate postage for its respective class by aircraft after advertisement in accordance with law. The transportation of mail under contracts entered into under this Act shall not, except for sections 401 (1) and 416 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, be deemed to be "air transportation" as that term is defined in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and the rates of compensation for such transportation of mail shall not be fixed under that Act. The Postmaster General shall transmit a copy of each contract made pursuant to this act to the Civil Aeronautics Authority at the time it is let. Any such contract shall be canceled upon the issuance by the Civil Aeronautics Authority of an authorization under said title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to any air carrier to engage in the transportation of mail by aircraft between any of the points named in such contract. That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may fix the postage for the mails carried, or any part thereof, by aircraft to, from, or within Alaska, at rates not exceeding in any case 30 cents per ounce or 15 cents per half ounce, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

SEC. 2. Payment for services pursuant to contracts entered into by the Postmaster General under authority of this Act shall be made from the appropriation for star-route service in Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATION OF EXCEPTIONS TO SECTION 3709, REVISED STATUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10061) to consolidate certain exceptions to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and to improve the United States Code, which had been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] to give some little explanation of this bill. It seems to be a very extensive bill. It may be more simple than it looks; but it contains the repeal of a large number of sections of the statutes which are listed, without much information in reference to them.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, the bill is simple. It provides no new legislation. As the title will indicate, it collates in one bill all the exceptions to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for advertising in the departments, with exceptions. As I say, the exceptions have all been collated in this bill, and the corresponding sections of the respective statutes have therefore been repealed.

The sponsor of this bill was Mr. KEOGH, chairman of the House Committee on Revision of the Laws, who is responsible for the preparation of the code of laws of the United States. He introduced this bill to make more uniform the classification in the code of exceptions to section 3709. No new legislation is involved in the bill; but Mr. KEOGH has taken from all of the numerous departmental acts and appropriations the exceptions to section 3709, Revised Statutes, and placed them in one bill for the convenience of the different departments, the auditors, the bar, and contractors in general.

Mr. ADAMS. So there is no change in the limitations imposed upon contracting in any of these cases?

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is correct. The exceptions have merely been collated into one place in the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was in section 1, page 2, after line 22, to insert:

(18) The Veterans' Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 3, after line 10, to strike out:

(1) The Bureau of Mines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 3, at the beginning of line 12, to strike out "(2)" and insert "(1)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, page 5, after line 18, to insert:

(m) Bureau of Mines—to any purchase or service rendered in the investigation of domestic sources of mineral supply, when the amount involved does not exceed $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 5, after line 21, to insert:

(n) Bureau of Reclamation—to the purchase of supplies and equipment or the procurement of services for the Bureau at the seat of government and elsewhere made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen, when the aggregate payment for the purchase or the service does not exceed $300 in any instance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the beginning of section 3, page 6, line 4, to insert "(a)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, page 6, after line 13, to insert:

(b) When the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $300, section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any purchase or service for which expenditures are incurred from funds allocated to Government agencies for obligation under the act of June 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 319), relating to the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, page 6, after line 19, to insert—

(c) All contracts for labor or supplies necessary for the carrying on of operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation pursuant to the act of March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. 51), as amended, shall be exempt from the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the schedule beginning on page 7, to insert on page 8, after line 4, the following:

Act of June 28, 1937, chapter 383, section 11, second proviso, 50 Statutes 321, 16, 584].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 3, after "54 Statutes", to insert "189."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 4, after "54 Statutes", to insert "211."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 5, after "54 Statutes", to insert "290."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 5, to insert—

Act of August 4, 1939, chapter 418, section 13, 53 Statutes 1197, 43, 380a.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on page 2, I move to strike out the provision as to the District of Columbia on line 2, and to insert it on page 3 after line 8. It is merely a transposition of the District of Columbia from one place to the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, it is proposed to strike out, in line 2, "(4) The District of Columbia" and to insert on page 3, after line 8, "(9) The District of Columbia."

Mr. VAN NUYS. This is a simple amendment. It is to strike out the words "(4) The District of Columbia" on page 2, line 2, and insert the same words between lines 8 and 9 on page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BARRING OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I have in mind what the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said a while ago, but I should like to revert to Calendar No. 1392, House bill 8150, which was laid aside until we could draw an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8150) providing for the barring of claims against the United States.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "demand" it is proposed to insert "(except a claim or demand by any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia)."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What effect would this amendment and the bill, if enacted, have upon Indian claims which are now pending before the Court of Claims, and those which may hereafter be brought before the Court of Claims?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Objection was made by the senior Senator from Vermont on account of the fact that a claim for the State of Vermont had been pending. I took the matter up with the departments, and they assured me it would have no effect on that sort of claim.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is referring now to a claim of the State of Vermont. Is the Senator sure that if the bill as amended were enacted it would have no effect on claims which are pending on account of Indian tribes and Indian groups?

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is the interpretation of the departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER PUBLIC CONTRACTS

The bill (S. 4340) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is an identical House bill on the calendar, No. 2293, and I suggest that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10464) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding at the end of each such section the following new paragraph:

"The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not apply in any case in which the moneys due or to become due from the United States or from any agency or department thereof, under a contract providing for payments aggregating $3,000 or more, are assigned to a bank, trust company, or other financing institution, including any Federal lending agency: Provided,

"1. That in the case of any contract entered into prior to the date of approval of this act, no claim shall be assigned without the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned;

"2. That in the case of any contract entered into after the date of approval of this act, no claim shall be assigned if it arises under a contract which forbids such assignment;

"3. That unless otherwise expressly permitted by such contract any such assignment shall cover all amounts payable under such contract and not already paid, shall not be made to more than one party, and shall not be subject to further assignment, except that any such assignment may be made to one party as agent or trustee for two or more parties participating in such financing;

"4. That in the event of any such assignment, the assignee thereof shall file written notice of the assignment together with a true copy of the instrument of assignment with—

"(a) the General Accounting Office,

"(b) the contracting officer or the head of his department or agency,

"(c) the surety or sureties upon the bond or bonds, if any, in connection with such contract, and

"(d) the disbursing officer, if any, designated in such contract to make payment.

Notwithstanding any law to the contrary governing the validity of assignments, any assignment pursuant to this act shall constitute a valid assignment for all purposes."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senate bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but it contained an amendment changing "$3,000" at the bottom of the first page to "$1,000." I offer that amendment to the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I offer another amendment, to be inserted at the place indicated.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, is the House bill identical with the Senate bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Now that the amendment has been made?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. This is a bill authorizing the assignment of contracts with the Government to banks and trust companies in order to enable contractors to obtain the money with which to proceed with their contracts. The reduction from $3,000 to $1,000 is made in order to accommodate smaller contractors and small corporations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 5, it is proposed to add the following paragraph:

Any contract entered into by the War Department or the Navy Department may provide that payments to an assignee of such contract shall not be subject to reduction or set-off and if so provided such payments shall not be subject to reduction or set-off for any indebtedness of the assignor to the United States arising independently of the contract designated in the assignment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment merely provides that when a contractor, in order to obtain money so that he may perform his contract with the Government under the defense program, assigns his contract to a bank or trust company in order to get money with which to proceed with the work, it shall not be permissible to offset against the claim or contract later an indebtedness which the contractor may owe the Government on account of some other contract or some other situation. In other words, it is an effort to make it possible for contractors to go to private lending institutions of the United States and, by assigning their contracts with the Government, obtain private funds in order to carry out the work, instead of coming to some public-lending agency.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Government in negotiating the principal contract desired to prohibit the operation of the statute, it could do so by writing that provision into the primary contract, could it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the present law contractors cannot even assign their contracts to anyone else, but in the event of the enactment of the bill without amendment, they could provide in the contract, probably, although that is not quite certain, that there should be no set-off or counterclaim against the contract price or the award after the assignment had been made. This merely provides that there may be such a provision in the contract, and in a case where it is put into the contract, later on there shall be no off-set or counterclaim put up against it.

Mr. AUSTIN. My point is that there is nothing in the bill which would deprive the Government of the power of prohibiting assignments of contracts.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; there is nothing to prohibit that; it merely authorizes that it may be done.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Government could make any specific contract nonassignable?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky as to whether or not the amendment which he has offered would not afford to a contractor who was not overscrupulous and who owed money to the Government, or was liable to the Government upon other contracts, an opportunity to evade. I can understand the desirability of permitting assignments in order that the contractor may procure money with which to pursue his contract, but I am wondering whether in any case the contractor could take advantage of the amendment to assign his contract, get his money, and evade his liability to the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it would be possible, I suppose, in some case, for a contractor who owed the Government something on some other account to evade payment under the amendment, if the Government could not collect otherwise. But the Government would be in no worse position with the amendment on the bill than it is now under the obligation of the contract out of which the obligation arose.

The situation is that this bill and the amendment are urgently endorsed and recommended, by the War and Navy Departments and by the Defense Council. The object of the proposed legislation is to make it possible for smaller contractors to go to a bank or trust company and put up their contract as collateral security and borrow the money necessary to enable them to go on with the work. A bank would not lend money on such a contract, even though it were assigned to it, if it were laboring under the fear that when the work was over and they got ready to collect their money from the contractor the Government could come in and assert a claim against the contractor on account of something else which had no relationship whatever to the contract and the defense program.

I think the benefits conferred by the amendment outweigh very largely any possible loss the Government might sustain because some isolated contractor who might owe the Government something would take advantage of this provision in order to escape liability.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4340 will be indefinitely postponed.

HOUSING AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provisions of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "activities" to insert "and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed (but such finding shall not be made until notice shall be given to the Federal Housing Administrator of the proposed construction, stating the number of units proposed and the areas in which they are to be located, and a report received thereon from the Federal Housing Administrator).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was on page 2, line 4, after the parenthesis, to strike out "acting through the Public Buildings Administration," so as to make the paragraph read:

SECTION 1. In order to provide housing for persons engaged in national-defense activities, and their families, in those areas or localities in which the President shall find that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national-defense activites and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed (but such finding shall not be made until notice shall be given to the Federal Housing Administrator of the proposed construction, stating the number of units proposed and the areas in which they are to be located, and a report received thereon from the Federal Housing Administrator), the Federal Works Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") is authorized:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have been requested to inquire the reason why the committee struck out the words "acting through the Public Buildings Administration." Will the Senator from Texas give us that information?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the purpose the committee had in mind was to leave the matter to the discretion of Mr. Carmody, who heads all these agencies, to employ such agency as he might choose, any one of the agencies under his jurisdiction, either the Public Buildings Administration, or the Housing Administration, or any other agency over which he has control.

Mr. WALSH. It was to prevent any one agency acting, such as the Public Buildings Administration?

Mr. CONNALLY. He could designate that, and if he did, they could proceed. It is conceivable that one agency might build one project and some other agency another.

Mr. WALSH. That answers the inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 2, line 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in subdivision (b), page 3, line 15, to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$3,500"; on line 16 to strike out "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,500"; on line 17, after the word "no", to insert the word "family"; on line 18 to strike out "$3,950" and insert "$4,450"; on page 19, to strike out "$4,750" and insert "$5,250"; on line 20, after the word "administration", to insert "but including"; on line 21, after the word "facilities", to strike out "and the aggregate cost of community facilities shall not exceed 3 percent of the total cost of all projects," so as to make the subdivision read:

(b) By contract or otherwise (without regard to secs. 355, as amended, 1136, as amended, and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, sec. 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), or any Federal, State, or municipal laws, ordinances, rules, or regulations relating to plans and specifications or forms of contract, the approval thereof or the submission of estimates therefor) to make surveys and investigations, plan, design, construct, remodel, extend, repair, or demolish structures, buildings, improvements, and community facilities, on lands or interests in lands acquired under the provisions of subsection (a) hereof or on other lands of the United States which may be available (transfers of which for this purpose by the Federal agency having jurisdiction thereof are hereby authorized notwithstanding any other provisions of law), provide proper approaches thereto, utilities, and transportation facilities, and procure necessary materials, supplies, articles, equipment, machinery, and do all things necessary in connection therewith to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used, but this proviso shall not be construed to prevent the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract: Provided, That the cost per family dwelling unit shall not exceed an average of $3,500 for those units located within the continental United States nor an average of $4,500 for those located elsewhere, and the cost of no family dwelling unit shall exceed $4,450 within the continental United States or $5,250 elsewhere, exclusive of expenses of administration, but including land acquisition, public utilities, and community facilities.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 6, page 6, line 2, before the word "balance" to strike out "unexpended" and to insert "unobligated" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. Moneys derived from rental or operation of property acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act shall be returned to the appropriation authorized by this act and shall be available for expenses of operation and maintenance including administrative expenses in connection therewith, and the unobligated balance of the moneys so deposited shall be covered into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 7, page 6, line 9, after "Administrator," to strike out "acting through Public Buildings Administration", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, whether relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real or other property by the United States or to other matters, the Administrator, with respect to any property acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act, is authorized by means of Government personnel, selected qualified private agencies, or public agencies (a) to deal with, maintain, operate, administer, and insure; (b) to pursue to final collection by way of compromise or otherwise, all claims arising therefrom; (c) to rent, lease, exchange, sell for cash or credit, and convey the whole or any part of such property and to convey without cost portions thereof to local municipalities for street or other public use: Provided, That any such transaction shall be upon such terms, including the period of any lease, as may be deemed by the Administrator to be in the public interest: Provided further, That the Administrator shall fix fair rentals, on projects developed pursuant to this act, which shall be within the financial reach of persons engaged in national defense: Provided further, That any lease authorized hereunder shall not be subject to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 7, line 6, after the word "utilize", to strike out "employees and facilities of" and to insert "and act through", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. In carrying out the provisions of this act the Administrator is authorized to utilize and act through the Federal Works Agency and other Federal agencies and any local public agency, with the consent of such agency, and any funds appropriated pursuant to this act shall be available for transfer to any such agency in reimbursement therefor. Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the Administrator from employing or utilizing the professional services of private persons, firms, or corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment proposed at the request of the Department of Justice, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "355, as amended" and to strike out the same words from line 18, page 2; to insert, on page 2, line 6, after the word "acquire", the words "prior to the approval of title by the Attorney General" and to insert the same words after the parentheses on page 2, line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I have received from the Hartford Central Labor Union a letter dated September 19,

1940, concerning the bill, and one paragraph of the letter I should like to read for the information of the Senate:

Knowing that prevailing wages and satisfactory labor standards have been incorporated under this set-up—

Meaning the United States Housing Authority and the Hartford Housing Authority—and that labor has had every consideration from the Hartford and United States Housing Authorities, we fear that this radical change in the method of administering public housing may mean a breaking down of these labor standards and the unfair treatment of local labor groups. We know little about the agency authorized in the Lanham bill to construct defense housing in the Hartford area, but we do have complete confidence in the methods of the local housing authority.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the letter from the Hartford Central Labor Union printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARTFORD CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
Hartford, Conn., September 19, 1940.

DEAR SENATOR DANAHER: At a meeting of the Hartford Central Labor Union, comprising 42 locals, discussion arose concerning the merits of the so-called Lanham bill recently passed by the House. Our understanding of this piece of legislation is that it places control of the defense housing in agencies other than the Hartford Housing Authority and the United States Housing Authority. In the opinion of the union delegates, the Hartford Housing Authority has demonstrated its ability to construct with the cooperation of local labor unions public housing on a large scale in this area.

Knowing that prevailing wages and satisfactory labor standards have been incorporated under this set-up, and that labor has had every consideration from the Hartford and United States Housing Authorities, we fear that this radical change in the method of administering public housing may mean a breaking down of these labor standards, and the unfair treatment of local labor groups. We know little about the agency authorized in the Lanham bill to construct defense housing in the Hartford area, but we do have complete confidence in the methods of the local housing authority.

The Hartford Housing Authority is now constructing a 1,000-unit housing project for defense workers of greater Hartford. Does the new bill mean that 5,000 more units are to be built by another agency in Hartford, possibly in competition with the program of the authority? Inasmuch as the authority has carefully studied local housing needs, and has planned its defense program accordingly, it does not seem logical that another agency should enter the local field.

From a civic standpoint, we are interested in the provision of housing in Hartford and believe that this city has the ability to service a large number of additional housing units far more satisfactory than the small surrounding towns.

We have found from our experience in working with the local authority and representatives from the United States Housing Authority that the present decentralized program for providing public housing works to the best interests of labor, and therefore we question the value of transferring control to a Federal agency in Washington. There seems to be a feeling among the Members that we may become the victims of political antagonisms in Washington.

As the result of this discussion an amendment was passed providing that "the administration of defense housing in greater Hartford should be under the Hartford Housing Authority which knows the local needs, has proved its efficiency, and has the confidence of not only the labor unions but also of the citizens of Hartford and under which we are sure that there will be no breaking down of labor standards.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES A. HELLYAR, Secretary.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, under date of September 25, 1940, the Hartford Civic and Economic Welfare Council, an excellent organization, definitely interested in the welfare of the people and in the housing program and problem generally, wrote me a letter, from which I read an excerpt as follows:

Furthermore, I should like to emphasize to you that the local housing authority and the United States Housing Authority have, by their considerate policies, earned the cooperation of labor. They have enjoyed splendid labor relations as the efficiency of their building programs indicates. To work through them in providing defense housing would be to take advantage of this situation, whereas the establishment of a new agency for providing defense housing would probably involve a considerable amount of adjustment to arrive at satisfactory labor relations.

Mr. President, that letter from the secretary of the council, Mr. Abrams, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE HARTFORD CIVIC AND ECONOMIC WELFARE COUNCIL,
Hartford, Conn., September 25, 1940.

Hon. JOHN A. DANAHER,
Senator, United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DANAHER: Because I wish to impress upon you the fact that there is a strong local opinion that public housing for defense may be placed in inexperienced hands as a result of recent legislation, I am writing this letter and am expanding some of the ideas previously stated in a letter to you. I have studied the so-called Lanham bill as passed by the House and as amended and approved by the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the bill obviously does not definitely provide for the use of the Hartford Housing Authority and the United States Housing Authority. Both of these agencies have demonstrated their ability to provide public housing rapidly and efficiently in this area. The Hartford Housing Authority has the confidence of the people of Greater Hartford because it has proceeded on its course on the basis of accurate statistical surveys and with a willingness to cooperate with public and private agencies. I cannot see why it is not good business for the Federal Government, if it is honestly anxious to provide housing for defense workers, to use the services and experience and the personnel of the Hartford Housing Authority working in cooperation with the United States Housing Authority. If a Government department wanted printing work done, would it set up an office of its own or would it use the established Government Printing Office?

Furthermore, I should like to emphasize to you that the local housing authority and the United States Housing Authority have, by their considerate policies, earned the cooperation of labor. They have enjoyed splendid labor relations as the efficiency of their building programs indicates. To work through them in providing defense housing would be to take advantage of this situation, whereas the establishment of a new agency for providing defense housing would probably involve a considerable amount of adjustment to arrive at satisfactory labor relationships.

I trust that you will give this matter your consideration, for local resentment against the establishment of a defense housing program under the control of any agency than the Hartford Housing Authority is strong. This is one case, I believe, in which legislation has been set forth in Washington with no realization there of local desires.

Most sincerely yours,

BEN ABRAMS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, with those thoughts in mind, I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to section 8, page 7, of the bill, from which I read:

SEC. 8. In carrying out the provisions of this act the Administrator is authorized to utilize and act through the Federal Works Agency and other Federal agencies and any local public agency, with the consent of such agency.

Is it merely permissive, or is it mandatory that the program contemplated by the bill shall proceed through locally established housing authorities?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that it is purely within the discretion of the Public Works Administrator. He may employ these agencies if he desires, or he may not.

Mr. DANAHER. So that conceivably outside capital may come into a city like Hartford, Conn., and, utilizing the law there, create a corporation, and then undertake, with the assistance and cooperation of the Federal Works Agency, portions of the program contemplated by this bill; is that correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not go quite that far with the Senator. Under the bill I do not think there would be any commingling of the Federal funds and the local funds, but if the Administrator should desire he can, under the bill, make arrangements with some local housing authority to construct the facilities.

Mr. DANAHER. Whatever question I now make perhaps will be completely dissolved if the Senator will explain why section 8 is in the bill, giving this permissive feature, as I have just read it. I have explained it as I understand it, anyway.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that it was in the bill as originally considered in the House, and the Senate committee did not seek to change it. Since this is an emergency measure, I presume it was desired that the Federal Works Administrator should have the widest possible latitude and discretion so as to speed up these housing projects, and to use any instrumentality or agency he may designate. That is the only reason I can give to the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me conditions are different in different places. In a city such as Hartford, where a local agency exists, the Federal Works Administrator may wish to use that agency. If a powder plant is built in the middle of the country where a local agency may not exist, the Federal Government itself would undertake to build it, and in doing so the Administrator may use the U. S. H. A., or the Federal Building Administration, or the P. W. A., which built some of these buildings originally, or any other agency of the Government concerned in housing. I think the Administrator is free to do just what the letters submitted by the Senator from Connecticut wish to have done. Instead of tying the work up in the Public Buildings Administration only, it was desired to have it open, so the Federal Administrator could use the local agencies.

The Senator referred to private capital. There is no private capital involved in the bill. If private capital can undertake this work, then the Government is not going to build at all under the general purposes of the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Texas for his answer to me. I agree with what the Senator from Ohio stated concerning private capital. I myself think the situation is as he has now explained it. I thank the Senator from Ohio for making that explanation. But is there any objection, let me ask the Senator from Texas, to providing that existing Federal agencies, such as the United States Housing Authority, or existing local agencies, such as the Hartford Housing Authority, be required to do the work in the event they are already on the ground?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I should very seriously object to that. I think the Administrator should be left free. He can be trusted to protect the interests of the Government. I would not want to make it mandatory, for then we would always have a difficult situation. In some localities, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, it might be desirable to employ the U. S. H. A. In others it might not. We cannot determine those situations here. All we can do is to give the Administrator discretion in the matter. I certainly should oppose his utilization of the U. S. H. A. in all places or in all cases.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. The so-called crises arising from time to time are utilized as arguments for tapping the public Treasury and using money collected from the taxpayers of the United States. I was wondering if the situation is now such as to justify an appropriation of $150,000,000 at this particular period of so-called crisis? Is the proposed expenditure necessary by reason of military preparations? Was there evidence before the committee to justify such an enormous appropriation?

Mr. CONNALLY. There was, I will say to the Senator from Utah. A recent appropriation bill carried certain items for the Army and the Navy, but the Army and the Navy utilized the funds which were allocated to them principally for the construction of buildings on their own reservations. The primary purpose of this measure is to provide housing near or adjacent to manufacturing plants or other military defense plants for those who may be employed in them. For instance, a new aviation air field has been located in my State. It is located in a growing town which is already crowded, and it is practically impossible to secure housing facilities. I merely cite that as an example. It is contemplated that all this money will not be necessary at once. The bill merely makes an authorization, not an appropriation, and the purpose is to make such authorizations from time to time, as the facilities are required or are necessary.

I will say that we had before the committee practically unanimous requests from all the Government agencies involved, the Army, the Navy, and the Housing Authority, as well as the Council of National Defense, which was very active in bringing the matter aggressively before the committee, I will say to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does it not assume that private capital for one reason or another may not be employed in the construction of these houses?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Are we not taking a course in respect to this, and many other matters in connection with the so-called national defense, which is really an obstacle to private capital, and which is a deterrent to private capital and private initiative in taking the steps necessary to be taken for national defense?

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to point out to the Senator from Utah that on page 1 the bill provides:

> In order to provide housing for persons engaged in national-defense activities, and their families, in those areas or localities in which the President shall find that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national-defense activities and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed (but such finding shall not be made until notice shall be given to the Federal Housing Administrator—

And so forth. It is the purpose of those who are urging the bill that whenever possible private capital shall be employed to provide the housing; and before Federal funds may be expended there must be a finding in each instance that private capital will not provide the facilities.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The point I do not understand is this: If we have a housing authority such as that to which I have already referred, namely, the Hartford Housing Authority, and the United States Housing Authority, both of which agencies are providing satisfactory services in the housing field, why should we bring in a third agency, which has had no experience in the building of houses?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is in error. For many years the Public Buildings Commission has built post offices and courthouses all over the United States, and thoroughly understands the matter. The trouble is that the organization of the United States Housing Administration is upon a wholly different theory and plan. What the local housing authorities want is to borrow money from the Government and then build the structures and owe the Government the money. I do not think that is the right way to approach this question. The projects under consideration are purely for national defense. The local agencies wish to erect more buildings, regardless of whether or not they are required for national defense. That may not be true of the Hartford Housing Authority, but I know it is true of some of the local authorities.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator forgot to state that the Army and Navy carry on very extensive building programs for their officers and enlisted men.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. The Senator from Massachusetts very properly and pertinently observes that the Army and Navy have had wide experience in building barracks and other structures, and have been doing so for years. Under the terms of the bill the Public Works Administrator might designate the Army to do the work in some particular locality, where the project might be contiguous to an Army camp; or it might designate the Navy to do the work under the general supervision and direction of the Public Works Administration.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 8, page 7, line 11, it is proposed to substitute a comma for the period and insert "or for loans on such terms as the Administrator shall prescribe."

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the primary purpose of the amendment is to permit construction of some of the defense-housing projects by the local housing authorities with borrowed funds. It makes available certain machinery that fits into the existing framework of housing construction in this country. Obviously, what is needed in the construction of these defense-housing projects is speed. It cannot be denied that the proper method by which to insure speed is through the utilization of construction and management agencies which over the past few years have developed experience, staffs, and practices in construction and operation of housing projects. Those local housing agencies are already set up, they are running smoothly, and they are geared for rapid action. Manifestly they can do the job in much less time than would be required by a new and untried agency.

Mr. President, as we all know, the Congress established the United States Housing Authority some years ago, and it operates in building projects of this nature on borrowed funds. My amendment seeks to permit the local housing agencies throughout the United States to borrow from the Administrator some of the funds provided by the pending bill, on such terms and conditions as he may designate. Under my amendment, the funds that we are now appropriating would go much further toward alleviating the housing shortage. It would be possible for the Federal Works Administrator to lend some of the funds, at his discretion, instead of requiring all the funds to be granted outright. Another important point to be borne in mind is that the ownership of the buildings would be centered in an agency which would be able to handle the houses after the emergency had passed. It was my privilege to serve as a member of a subcommittee of the Senate Claims Committee with respect to a number of housing projects which were built during the World War at New Brunswick, N. J. Those buildings were constructed under the same conditions and terms as are provided in the pending bill. After the war was over, the Federal Government was left with many buildings on hand which it did not know what to do with. There were some in Philadelphia and in other sections of the country. The Government had to bear a considerable loss. If we should adopt my amendment it would permit the Federal Administrator to lend money to the local housing authorities throughout the States. All of them have the machinery with which to go to work immediately. They have trained forces which can be used to construct the projects at once. They are experienced in the construction of low rent housing units. As was pointed out by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], we can make immediate use of those organizations by the adoption of my amendment. I hope the Senator from Texas will accept the amendment and take it to conference, at any rate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it the purpose of the amendment to resurrect what some believe to be a defunct—and properly defunct—housing organization?

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no resurrection contemplated, since the Authority is by no means defunct.

Mr. KING. I refer to the one with which Mr. Straus is connected.

Mr. ELLENDER. The United States Housing Authority is still building low rent housing projects. They have facilities established throughout the country similar to the one at Hartford, to which the Senator from Connecticut has referred. We have such facilities in Louisiana and in various other parts of the country. Those agencies are now equipped to build housing units for the national-defense program.

Mr. KING. So far as I have been advised—and I do not speak with the knowledge possessed by the Senator from Louisiana—they are agencies which have not been very successful, and the costs to the Federal Government have been tremendous. The losses will be very great.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator must be misinformed. I do not know where he obtains this information. I know that the Housing Authority is now in process of building homes for persons of low income, and I know its program has been successful. This amendment, of course, would permit the Housing Authority to build some of the homes for national-defense workers provided by this bill at the discretion of the Federal Works Administrator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in fairness to the Senate I think I ought to say that I am not in favor of the amendment. I sympathize with the Senator from Louisiana. I had a conference with him earlier in the day, in which I indicated that I might agree to let the matter go to conference. If I should be on the conference committee, letting the matter go to conference might imply that I should support the amendment. Upon reflection, I must say that I am not in favor of the amendment, and I hope the Senate will not agree to it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. Carmody, the Federal Works Administrator who would have charge of the funds, is in agreement with the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot help that. His name is not on the Senate roll when we vote. He does not count here. So far as I am concerned, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The housing authorities have had their opportunity. They have already obtained $800,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. Wherever there is a local authority, it means that already in that community a great amount of Federal money has been spent on housing facilities. Now they want more. I want this program to be a Federal program, under the direct control of the Federal Government. When the houses are no longer needed, I want them to belong to the United States, so that we may dispose of them, rather than to have a debt against some local authority which probably never would be paid.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the Senator well knows, as I pointed out awhile ago, that during the World War hundreds of houses were built under a law along the same lines as that which the Senator is now proposing. The Federal Government lost millions of dollars. In New Brunswick, N. J., many thousands of dollars were spent by the Government, and the loss was very great. Permitting an existing housing authority to build the houses would mean that we would have an agency which could handle the houses after the emergency shall have passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can only say that I hope the Senate will defeat the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 5. A joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives is hereby established to consist of five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate. It shall be the duty of such committee to make a comprehensive study of the activities of the Federal Government in the field of housing, particularly as administered by the United States Housing Authority, the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Works Agency, and other agencies of a temporary or emergency nature. Such committee shall particularly consider—

(1) The need for housing in connection with the national-defense program;

(2) The formation of a long-range plan for stimulating slum-clearance and the construction of new housing for the lower and middle income groups with a minimum of Government subsidy;

(3) The coordination of all Government housing activity and the consolidation or elimination of agencies where such consolidation or elimination will promote greater economy and efficiency in administration; and

(4) The stimulation of private investment and private industry in the housing field.

Such committee shall report its findings to the Congress not later than March 30, 1941, and shall recommend such legislation as it may deem necessary to carry out the objectives set forth in this section.

For the purposes of this section, such joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth Congress; to employ such clerical and other assistants; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman. The appropriation of such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of this section is hereby authorized.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is need for defense housing. When this bill was presented to our committee the committee provided it must be undertaken by the Public Buildings Administration. We have a United States Housing Authority which probably has more information on the subject than anybody else. I somewhat doubt the wisdom of the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, because the U. S. H. A. is not actually building any houses; it is simply loaning money to loaning agencies. I think, as far as they could go under this bill would be to give the Administrator of the Public Works Agency a right to use a local agency as his agent to construct these buildings because they know how to do it, the buildings to be owned by the United States and administered by him.

I have some doubt about the amount that is necessary in this program. We have already appropriated $100,000,000 for the Army and Navy for this kind of housing, not for barracks, but in addition to all appropriations for barracks. Now we are adding an authorization of $150,000,000 more, or a total of $250,000,000. I question whether we need so much, and I hope it will not be used.

We are putting in a provision that the Federal Works Administrator must make a report, but the mistake, in my judgment, is that we have a U. S. H. A. with one policy, we have an F. H. A. with another policy; that is, the loaning of money for insuring mortgages to provide private capital for housing. We have, in addition to that, the Home Loan Bank Board which is loaning money to building and loan associations, which then loan to private individuals. We are adding now another Government agency. If the Federal Works Administrator should use the Public Buildings Administration, as he may—it is made permissive, instead of compulsory—then we will have another agency that has never built any residences, and we will set up a new force of architects and many employees to build this kind of buildings. In addition to that, the Army has such a force and the Navy has such a force today. I understand from a gentleman on the National Defense Board who appeared before us that the President is directing the Army and Navy to turn over that $100,000,000, and all buildings which are not on Government reservations to the Federal Works Agency, so that it will be administered under this bill. If we go ahead and appropriate this proposed $150,000,000 it will make $250,000,000 available. It seems to me the time has come when we ought to try to consolidate the housing policy, when we ought to have one agency of the Government concerned with housing decide how far the Federal Government itself shall build any housing, how far it shall go in building housing for low-income groups and subsidize such housing.

One reason for putting this in the Public Buildings Administration is that the House of Representatives today absolutely refuses to expand any further the program of the U. S. H. A., because they are opposed to it, and, practically, because it involves a subsidy of about $150 a family a year, which is a very expensive method. Yet the U. S. H. A. has done a great work. Some policy, perhaps with a loan or subsidy, may be worked out satisfactory to the House of Representatives. It is because of their objection to that program that we have had to stop the U. S. H. A. program, although the Senate voted additional funds.

I thought the type of joint committee proposed by my amendment would enable the House objections to be heard so that there could be provided some kind of housing program and there could be presented a single, unified Government program to take care of one of the real needs of the country, which is housing for the lower-income groups.

It seems to me that my amendment would do no harm, but would add to the strength of the bill and would enable someone to straighten out such difficulties as are suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, and would make possible a single and reasonable policy.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I could not quite understand the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, but, as I understood it, it provided an appropriation out of the contingent fund of the Senate and House for the proposed joint committee; is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. It did not follow that course, but followed the form of the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I do not know whether or not it is so, but I think it is customary for resolutions of this kind to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate before they are acted upon by the Senate. I should like to inquire about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the amendment the appropriation authorized is to come out of the Treasury of the United States, and not out of the contingent fund.

Mr. TAFT. An appropriation is merely authorized. There is no appropriation provided.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Then, no appropriation is made by the amendment?

Mr. TAFT. No; no appropriation is made.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I have no objection to a study being made of this question, but a long study would necessarily be involved of any long-range program. This is an emergency amendment we are urging. We want these houses now, not next year, and I think the amendment of the Senator from Ohio would delay the matter.

Mr. TAFT. I will say to the Senator I have no desire whatever to delay the bill; I am for the bill, and I have no desire to block its progress, but it seems to me this is an appropriate time to suggest to the House that this be done. I think the Senator will find a willingness to accept a joint committee of this kind.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think if the Senator wants to approach this matter he had better do it by resolution and not by an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. TAFT. Except that if a resolution were adopted it would not be likely to make any progress. The subject of the amendment is germane to the pending bill, because by the bill we are adding to all the confusion which already exists an additional confusion by providing another Federal bureau that is to undertake a study of the problem of housing. It is a little different problem, I agree, but it still is the same general question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio knows how investigating committees work. Some of them now still in existence have been in existence for 3 or 4 or 5 years. I have no objection if the Senator wants to have a thorough investigation of the housing situation. I suggest to him that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction over all these housing matters.

Mr. TAFT. No. If the Senator will yield, I may suggest that I am on three committees of the Senate which all deal with housing. I am on the Banking and Currency Committee, which handles all F. H. A. matters; I am on the Education and Labor Committee, which handles all U. S. H. A. matters; and I am on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which handles this kind of housing. So there are three committees of the Senate itself dealing with the housing subject today.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly on this subject. If this were a meritorious proposition on its own account, it ought not to go on this bill, it seems to me. We have had some experience with joint committees. With rare exception, if anybody wants to have something not done, the method to be pursued in producing that result is to appoint a joint committee of the two Houses. We tried that on reorganization. The joint committee had one meeting and never again met. So the two Houses went about it separately.

Mr. TAFT. Would the Senator be willing to state his view as to a resolution to create a Senate committee on this subject, if this amendment should not be adopted?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has already testified to the fact that we have three standing committees dealing with this subject. Of course, another one would be four.

Mr. TAFT. But those three committees have three policies, and we should have one instead of three.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would rather think the matter over before committing myself to it. I am willing to consider it. We all know that the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses have exclusively dealt with public buildings such as post offices, Treasury Department buildings, and so on. They have had no jurisdiction whatever over low-cost housing in cities, or Federal loans to provide individuals or corporations the money for the purpose of building houses. The Banking and Currency Committee has for a number of years gone into the whole question of home ownership in connection with the Home Owners' Loan Act, which has been amended frequently, the Building and Loan Act, which came out of that committee, and the Federal Housing Administration Act, which came out of that committee. I have never investigated to see just how the United States Housing Authority got into the Committee on Education and Labor, but it is all right. It dealt with the labor situation and we have no very tight rules here with reference to the assignment of bills. Any Senator who wants to have a bill referred to a committee of which he is a member merely writes the name of the committee on the bill and it goes to that committee. I certainly am not at this time prepared to commit myself to a joint committee of the two Houses to look into this subject. If the amendment has any merit on its own account, it certainly ought not to go upon this bill, but I am willing, so far as I am concerned individually, to give consideration to the matter if the Senator wants to try it in another way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, it is proposed to amend section 12 by striking out the remainder of line 16, after the period, all of lines 17 and 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Laborers and mechanics employed in the construction, repair, or demolition work authorized by this act shall be paid not less than the wages prevailing in the locality in which the work was performed for the corresponding classes of laborers and mechanics employed on construction of a similar character, as determined under the procedure prescribed by the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1011; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 276 (a)).

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I may say this amendment was suggested by the American Federation of Labor. The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] was going to offer it but, because of being called away to New York on important business, he was unable to do so and I am now offering it for the Senator from New York. I understand the Senator from Kentucky is willing to take the amendment to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, just a moment. I have not promised to take the amendment to conference. I do not think it is necessary, because the bill itself provides the identical thing which is the subject of the amendment, and I do not see any use in fighting over nothing. The trouble about it is that this particular amendment seeks to take away from the public administrator the authority to determine what is the prevailing wage and put it over in some other department. That, I do not favor. It would tend to delay, impede, and hold up this work. Personally, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that I am only offering the amendment on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], because he is away. In the letter he states that he talked with the Senator from Texas——

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; he did.

Mr. WHEELER. And that the Senator agreed to take the amendment to conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. I told the Senator from New York that if he offered the amendment I should not make any particular objection to it; but I am not committed to it, and I told the Senator from New York that I was not in favor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 11, after the word "therefor", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That in localities where the Federal Works Administrator shall find that the United States Housing Authority or any local public agency is capable of meeting the requirements for the housing program, the Administrator shall utilize and act through the United States Housing Authority or such local public agency.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, we have all known just what the difficulty is that this amendment seeks to reach. It has been fully discussed by various Senators. There are local public agencies which are more than qualified to carry on the particular defense program and housing needs of the particular community. There is the United States Housing Authority, through which Housing Authority projects may be developed. There is a third agency which has been building post offices if you like, bridges if you choose, but housing, no. To this particular confused situation it is perfectly apparent that we are going to have to add a whole new set of bureaucratic services in order to achieve what is said to be the need for haste, and yet we already have agencies which are capable of doing the job.

If we really want to have the work done, it seems to me that when the Administrator himself finds that the local needs can be and will be met through existing agencies he should so find, and thereupon work through those agencies. That is all the amendment seeks to accomplish, and that is specifically what it will accomplish.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be rejected. These local housing authorities are not Federal agencies at all. They are incorporated under State law, and their officers are appointed by the State. For the same reasons that I suggested in opposing the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], I hope the Senate will vote down this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have had quite a number of letters upon this particular subject. I have let this debate run along, so far as I was personally concerned, before interjecting myself into it, to see whether the interests were as important and the implications as far reaching as I feared they were. In the 25 or 30 minutes which Senators have taken in discussing the bill they have pointed out many important differences of opinion.

This bill contains an authorization of $150,000,000. We have already provided money for the Army and the Navy and for buildings under their supervision and jurisdiction. I grant that there may be some occasion for hurry with this work; but certainly there is no occasion for hurry which is sufficient to justify this body in considering a bill of this size and character, with the wide differences of opinion which have developed here, under the 5-minute rule on the Consent Calendar. I am sure the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY] can find a time at an early date for the consideration of the bill in a more adequate way.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator from Kansas that this matter was thoroughly examined in the committee. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], a member of the committee, went over it thoroughly, and the bill was unanimously reported. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not arbitrarily delay and impede the passage of this measure because of the fact that one objection can stop the bill. I assure him that a number of the minority members of the committee were present, including the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who took a deep interest in the bill and was for it; and after hearings and consultations the bill was unanimously reported by both Republicans and Democrats.

Mr. REED. I am sure the Senator from Texas, with the aid of the majority leader, can find a place for the consideration of the bill when it may have a fuller discussion than under the 5-minute rule on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I gladly yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill has been under discussion now for an hour. That probably is as much time as it would have if it were taken up separately. Nobody has been shut off. Of course we have a 5-minute rule that we operate under, or are supposed to operate under; but it is very rarely invoked or observed. After an hour has been spent on the bill, I do not see what we would gain by putting it over to try to take it up separately.

I hope the Senator from Kansas will not object to the consideration of the bill. It certainly is important. It is an emergency matter. I do not think anything would be gained by taking it up later and threshing the whole matter over again. We shall have practically wasted the time which has been devoted to it if it goes over now.

Mr. REED. I beg to remind the majority leader that three or four times I have tried to get the floor for this purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator could have objected when the bill was first called. I suppose the debate has been of some value. I would not discount it. It has brought out the terms of the bill and the necessity for it. Various amendments have been offered. Some have been agreed to, and some have been rejected; but, in view of the nature of the bill and the desire for it on all sides, it seems to me it ought not to go over now, after discussion.

Mr. REED. I do not think a delay of 2 or 3 days is of great importance in the consideration of a bill of this kind.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is chairman, held elaborate hearings on this bill. It was amended, and nearly every one of the amendments that have been presented here were considered by the committee. I do not think any further consideration of the bill beyond the hour during which it has been considered and beyond the consideration which the committee gave—and the committee reported it unanimously—would help the situation at all.

This is an emergency measure. I think it is absolutely essential that the bill be passed and sent to conference and an agreement reached if it is at all possible; and I hope the Senator from Kansas will not persist in his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kansas has expired.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas asks that the bill go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the Senator from Kansas be extended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator; but I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I very much regret that after this matter has been thoroughly debated, after every Senator who desired to speak has had an opportunity to speak, and after the bill has been discussed for more than an hour, the Senator from Kansas then arbitrarily objects and will not have the bill considered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas is old-fashioned enough to think that a bill carrying an authorization of $150,000,000 is a bill dealing with a substantial amount of money; and when an authorization of that amount is contained in a bill which has shown such a great diversity of opinion in the short time it has been debated, it should have fuller consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not yield for a speech. I have only 5 minutes.

The Senator from Kansas says he is old-fashioned. He sat here when he could have objected to the consideration of the bill when it was first called; but after everybody on the floor who wants to debate the bill has talked about it, after the Senate has considered half a dozen or more amendments, the Senator from Kansas says the bill has had no consideration.

If the Senator from Kansas wants to talk again, I am in favor of staying here and hearing him talk. I would even be willing to listen to him for another hour; but this is an imperative matter. If the national defense is of no more concern to the Senator from Kansas than arbitrarily to object when everybody else has heard the bill discussed, and when the Senate has expressed itself upon every amendment that has been offered——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It has been my understanding in connection with the consideration of bills on the calendar, that any Senator has a right to object to the consideration of a bill, and that that is the point at which objection must be made. After a bill has gone beyond that point, and there has been no objection to its consideration, is not the Senator from Texas entitled now to ask for a vote upon the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules of the Senate the objection can be raised at any time. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his objection?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I had unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes, and my time is not up, is it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Texas to ask for unanimous consent to permit the Senator from Kansas to speak for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I then asked for 5 minutes for myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas asked for 5 minutes for himself, and I think that he should be permitted to proceed. I do not like the practice of granting unanimous consents of that kind, but I did not object. I think the Senator is entitled to 5 minutes, and I think he has already occupied about 4½ minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am willing to subside, but I hope that the Senator from Kansas will be old-fashioned enough tonight to go home and retire upon his downy pillow, and be old-fashioned enough to think about the situation that is confronting the American people, and the emergency which this country now faces; that he will be old-fashioned enough to look across the ocean and see the accumulating enemies of our country on both oceans and both fronts, and then will be old-fashioned enough to withdraw his objection, after everyone else in the Senate is ready to vote on the bill, with this lone statesman from Kansas objecting. I say that in all affection and regard. If the Senator had been a Member of the Senate a little longer he would not make that kind of an objection after we had debated a bill for an hour or more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the next resolution on the Calendar.

ENLARGEMENT OF ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK, COLO.—CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION

Senate resolution 312 (submitted by Mr. HATCH on the 12th instant) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 147, agreed to on January 8, 1940, authorizing the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, to make a thorough investigation of all questions relating to the proposed enlargement of Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, is hereby continued in full force and effect for the same purposes during the Seventy-seventh Congress.

DAY OF PRAYER

The resolution (S. Res. 293) requesting the President to appoint a day for national prayer and supplication was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, is the Senator from Iowa prepared to speak on the resolution at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is not present.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to have the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. DANAHER. My reason for asking that the resolution go over is that originally I asked the Senator from Iowa to strike out the preamble. Then I should have no objection to the resolution. I certainly am in favor of the resolution.

TRANSFER OF LAND TO THE SPRING PARK CLUB

The Senate proposed to consider the bill (S. 4319) authorizing the transfer of land owned by the United States back to the Springs Park Club of Richfield Springs, N. Y., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to correct the description of the land conveyed to the United States for a post-office site at Richfield Springs, N. Y., which included a 1-foot strip of land along the easterly side thereof for which a deduction was made in the contract price paid by the United States, the Federal Works Administrator be, and is hereby, authorized to convey by the usual quitclaim deed all right, title, and interest of the Government to the owners of the land abutting the easterly side of the post-office site at Richfield Springs, N. Y., the following-described piece or parcel of land forming a part of said post-office site:

Lying and being in Richfield Springs, county of Otsego, State of New York, and described as follows:

Beginning at a point in the southerly side of Main Street, said point being the northeast corner of the premises conveyed by the Spring Park Club, Inc., to the United States by deed dated May 31, 1939, recorded June 1, 1939, among the land records of Otsego County, in Liber 388 of Deeds, at page 265; running thence in a westwardly direction along the southerly side of Main Street a distance of 1 foot to a point; thence in a southwardly direction a distance of 172 feet to a point in the northerly side of land now or formerly of the Spring Park Club, Inc.; thence in an eastwardly direction a distance of 1 foot to a point being the southeast corner of lands conveyed to the United States by the aforesaid deed from the Spring Park Club,. Inc.; thence in a northwardly direction a distance of 172 feet to the point or place of beginning, as shown on "Topographical Survey of Post Office site at Richfield Springs, N. Y., made by William Oehrle, dated March 5, 1938, corrected April 23, 1938," the original of which is on file in the Public Buildings Administration of the Federal Works Agency.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. This is a bill introduced by the Senator from New York (Mr. MEAD). It provides for the transfer of a strip of land about a foot wide adjoining some Federal property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION PROJECTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4167) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation were, on page 3, line 2, after the word "the", to strike out "Farm Security Administration" and insert "Department of Agriculture"; on page 4, line 14, after the word "and", to strike out "which can probably be returned by the Office of Indian Affairs" and insert "be repayable in accordance with existing law relating to Indian lands"; in line 25, after the word "report", to insert "by the Secretary of Agriculture to the President"; on page 5, line 1, after the word "any", to strike out "which the Secretary" and insert "proposed by the Department"; in line 2, after the word "Agriculture", to strike out "may wish to provide"; on page 6, line 9, after the word "law", to insert "and any applicable interstate agreements"; in line 12, after the word "law", to insert "and any applicable interstate agreements"; on page 9, line 1, after the word "costs", to insert "except as to Indian lands which shall be repayable in accordance with existing law relating to Indian lands,"; on page 10, line 13, after the word "this", to strike out "section" and insert "subsection"; in line 18, after the word "President", to insert "and within three years from the time water becomes available,"; on page 12, line 21, after the word "the", to strike out "Farm Security Administration" and insert "Department of Agriculture"; on page 13, line 3, after the word "materials", to insert "easements,"; in line 13, after the word "as", to strike out "he deems" and insert "the President may deem"; on page 15, line 4, after the word "both" and the period, to strike out "Under said act, no project which involves the storage or utilization of water for the irrigation of more than 500 acres of land or which involves the surface storage of more than 500 acre-feet of water or which involves a total cost exceeding $5,000 shall be undertaken unless and until the Secretary of the Interior has found and certified to the President that the proposed project cannot feasibly or practicably be undertaken pursuant to the Federal reclamation laws or the Act of August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), as amended"; on page 16, line 2, after the word "be", to strike out "made"; in the same line, after the word "available", to strike out "for appropriation by Congress", and in line 4, after the word "project", to insert "in like manner as if said funds had been specifically appropriated for said purposes"; on page 17, line 4, after the name "United States", to strike out "Contracts for such municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or for such surplus power shall be for such periods, not to exceed 40 years, and at such rates as in the Secretary's judgment will produce revenues at least sufficient to cover the appropriate share of the annual operation and maintenance cost of the project and such fixed charges, including interest, as the Secretary deems proper," and insert "Contracts for such municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or for such surplus power shall be at such rates as, in the Secretary's judgment, will produce revenues at least sufficient to cover the appropriate share of the annual operation and maintenance cost of the project and such fixed charges, including interest, as the Secretary deems proper. Contracts for the sale of surplus power shall be for periods not to exceed 40 years and contracts for water supply for municipal or miscellaneous purposes shall be for such periods as the Secretary may determine and may include such renewal options as the Secretary deems desirable," on on page 18, line 6, after the name "United States", to insert a comma and "other than lands acquired under section 5"; in line 21, after the word "Secretary", to strike out "is" and insert "of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are" and in line 24, after the word "carrying", to strike out "the"

and insert "out their respective functions under this Act and for the purpose of carrying", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. For the purpose of stabilizing water supply and thereby rehabilitating farmers on the land and providing opportunities for permanent settlement of farm families, the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as 'the Secretary') is hereby authorized to investigate and, upon compliance with the provisions of this act, to construct water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States, and to operate and maintain each such project in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the United States shall retain title to the dams, reservoirs, irrigation, and other project works until Congres otherwise provides: And provided further, That expenditures, from appropriations made directly pursuant to the authority contained in section 12 (1), to meet reimbursable construction costs allocated to irrigation as defined in section 4 (b) shall not exceed $1,000,000 for dams and reservoirs in any one project.

"SEC. 2. In connection with the investigation, construction, or operation and maintenance of a project, pursuant to the authority of this act, the Secretary is authorized to utilize (1) in such manner as the President may direct, services, labor, materials, or other property, including money, supplied by the Work Projects Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Office of Indian Affairs, the Department of Agriculture, or any other Federal agency, for which the United States shall be reimbursed in such amounts as the President may fix for each project, within the limits of the water users' ability to repay costs as found by the Secretary under subsection 3 (a) (iv); and (2) such services, labor, materials, easements, or property, including money, as may be contributed by any State or political subdivision thereof, State agency, municipal corporation, or other organization, or individuals, if, in the judgment of the Secretary, the acceptance thereof will not impair the title of the United States to the project works and will not reduce the probability that the project water users can meet the obligations to the United States entered into pursuant to this act. Moneys received and accepted under (2) of this section shall be and remain available for expenditure for the purposes for which contributed in like manner as if said sums had been specifically appropriated for said purposes.

"SEC. 3. (a) No construction of a project may be undertaken pursuant to the authority of this act unless and until the Secretary has made an investigation thereof and has submitted to the President his report and findings on—

"(i) the engineering feasibility of the proposed construction;

"(ii) the estimated cost of the proposed construction;

"(iii) the part of the estimated cost which properly can be allocated to irrigation;

"(iv) the part of the estimated cost which probably can be repaid by the water users in accordance with the requirements of section 4;

"(v) the part of the estimated cost which can properly be allocated to municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or power and probably be returned to the United States in revenues therefrom;

"(vi) the part of the estimated cost which can properly be allocated to the irrigation of Indian trust and tribal lands, and be repayable in accordance with existing law relating to Indian lands; and

"(vii) the part of the estimated cost which can properly be allocated to flood control as recommended by the Chief of Engineers, War Department.

In connection with each such investigation, report, and finding, the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture regarding participation in the proposed project by the Department of Agriculture under the authority of sections 5 and 6; and the Secretary shall also transmit to the President a report by the Secretary of Agriculture to the President on the participation, if any, proposed by the Department of Agriculture. The project shall be deemed authorized and may be undertaken pursuant to this act of (1) the Secretary finds and certifies to the President that the project has engineering feasibility and that the water users probably can repay, in accordance with the requirements of section 4, an amount equal to or in excess of that part of the estimated cost allocated by him to irrigation to be met by expenditures of moneys appropriated pursuant to section 12 (1); and (2) the President has approved said report and findings and has found that services, labor, materials, easements, and other property, including money, for the construction of the project, should be made available to the Department of the Interior by the Work Projects Administration or other Federal agencies, to the extent found necessary by the Secretary to make up the differences between the estimated cost of the project construction and (i) the part thereof to be met by expenditure of moneys appropriated pursuant to section 12 (1), together with (ii) such services, materials, money, easements, and other property as non-Federal agencies or parties have agreed to contribute and the Secretary has found acceptable under section 2.

"(b) No actual construction of the physical features of a project which meets the requirements of subsection (a) shall be undertaken unless and until (1) rights-of-way and other interests in land deemed by the Secretary to be necessary for the construction and operation of the major features of the project works have been secured, with titles or easements and at prices satisfactory to the Secretary; and (2) the Secretary has found (i) that water rights adequate for the purposes of the project have been acquired with titles and at prices satisfactory to him, or have been initiated and can be perfected in conformity with State law and any applicable interstate agreements and in a manner satisfactory to him; and (ii) that such water rights can be utilized for the purposes of the project in conformity with State law and any applicable interstate agreements and in a manner satisfactory to him.

"SEC. 4. (a) No water for irrigation may be delivered from the works of any project constructed under the authority of this act until after the repayment contract or contracts required by this section have been executed. Where practicable in the judgment of the Secretary, the repayment contract shall be with a water users' organization or organizations satisfactory in form and powers to the Secretary; and otherwise the repayment contract shall be with the individual landowners. The contract or contracts shall contain such provisions as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to protect the interests of the United States.

"(b) The term 'reimbursable construction costs' as used in this act means that part of the costs of investigating, constructing, and operating and maintaining the project, which are allocated by the Secretary to irrigation, and which are met by expenditures of moneys therefor appropriated under the authority of section 12 (1), plus such amounts as the President, under section 2 (1), may determine to be reimbursable: Provided, That administrative expenses incurred in the District of Columbia in connection with the investigation, construction, or operation and maintenance of a project shall not be included in the reimbursable construction costs nor shall they be charged to the water users in any way.

"(c) The repayment contract or contracts for a project shall, in their aggregate, provide for repayment to the United States of the total amount of the reimbursable construction costs of the project allocated to irrigation. Each such contract shall provide, among other things, that—

"(1) The Secretary shall fix a development period for each project of not to exceed 10 years from and including the first calendar year in which water is delivered for the lands in said project; and during the development period water shall be delivered to the lands in the project involved at a charge per acre-foot, or other charge, to be fixed by the Secretary each year and to be paid in advance of delivery of water. Such charges shall be fixed with a view of returning such amounts as in the Secretary's judgment are justified by the rate of project development, including as a minimum the return over the full development period of that part of the cost of operating and maintaining the project, during said period, allocated by the Secretary to irrigation; and collections of such charges in excess of the cost of the operation and maintenance during the development period, as thereafter determined by the Secretary, shall be credited to the reimbursable construction costs of the project in the manner determined by the Secretary.

"(2) The United States shall operate and maintain the project during the development period fixed for it. After the development period, the United States shall operate and maintain the project or any part thereof as long as is deemed necessary by the Secretary, and shall be paid in advance for each year that part of the estimated cost of operating and maintaining the project for such year allocated by the Secretary to irrigation. In the event charges due the United States are not paid when due, the United States may, at its election, suspend operations in whole or in part.

"(3) The repayment of the reimbursable construction costs, except as to Indian lands which shall be repayable in accordance with existing law relating to Indian lands, shall be spread in not to exceed 40 annual installments, of the number and amounts fixed by the Secretary; and the first annual installment under each contract shall become due and payable on the date fixed by the Secretary, in the year next following the last year of the development period fixed under subsection (c) (1).

"(4) The water users or their organization will take such measures as the Secretary deems proper to secure the adoption of proper accounting, to protect the condition of project works and to provide for the proper use thereof, and to protect project lands against deterioration due to improper use of water. Delinquencies in any payments due to the United States shall be penalized by a penalty of not less than one-half of 1 percent per month. No water shall be delivered to or for any land or party while either said land or the organization in which it is located or said party is in arrears in the advance payment of operation and maintenance charges or development period charges under subsection (c) (1), or in arrears for more than 12 months in the payment of an installment of the reimbursable construction costs.

"(5) The Secretary shall establish the size of farm units of irrigable lands on each project in accordance with his findings of the area sufficient in size for the support of a family on the lands to be irrigated, but the farm units of irrigable lands shall be of not more than 160 acres. No water may be delivered to or for more than the farm unit area of irrigable lands in the project owned by a single landowner; and after the third year in which water is made available from a project's works, no water may be delivered to or for any land of a landowner owning more than the farm-unit area of irrigable land in the project: Provided, That 3 years shall be allowed for the disposal of any excess holding acquired at any time in good faith by descent, will, foreclosure of any lien, or by other judicial process: Provided further, That this subsection shall not apply to the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, corporate or otherwise. No water shall be delivered to or for any land, in a project area, transferred or disposed of subsequent to approval of the project by the President, and within 3 years from the time water becomes available, unless and until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary or his duly authorized representative that the land has been transferred or disposed of at a price not exceeding the appraised value as determined by the Secretary or his duly authorized representatives, and upon proof of fraudulent representation as to the true consideration involved the Secretary is authorized to cancel the water right attaching to the land involved: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to create authority to interfere with the delivery of water under prior rights.

"SEC. 5. (a) In connection with the construction or operation and maintenance of projects undertaken pursuant to the authority of this act, and in order to further in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States an effective rehabilitation program, stabilization of the agricultural economy and maximum utilization of funds spent for relief purposes, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, pursuant to cooperative agreement with the Secretary of the Interior, (1) to arrange for the settlement of the projects on a sound agricultural basis, and, insofar as practicable, the location thereon of persons in need; (2) to extend guidance and advice to settlers thereon in matters of farm practice, soil conservation, and efficient land use; (3) to acquire agricultural lands within the boundaries of such projects, with titles and at prices satisfactory to him; and (4) to arrange for the improvement of lands within the project boundaries, including clearing, leveling, and preparing them for distribution of irrigation water. Contracts between the United States and water users or water users' organizations for the lease or purchase of, or the improvement of, lands within such projects shall provide for annual or semiannual payments to the United States, of the number and amounts fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The lease, purchase, or improvement contracts for each tract of land shall provide in the aggregate for the return, in not to exceed 50 years from the date the land is first settled upon, of the costs incurred by the United States in acquiring and improving such tract of land with funds appropriated under authority of section 12 (2), except administrative expenses incurred in the District of Columbia, together with interest on unpaid balances of said costs at not less than 3 percent per annum. Such lease, purchase, or improvement contracts shall also provide for the fulfillment of such obligations related to reimbursable construction costs and operation and maintenance charges as may be applicable to such lands in accordance with the repayment contract or contracts required by section 4.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture may utilize (1) in such manner as the President may direct, services, labor, materials, or other property, including money, supplied by the Work Projects Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Office of Indian Affairs, the Department of Agriculture, or any other Federal agency to the extent that the President, upon the report and recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture, finds that the same should be supplied in assistance of such improvement work, and for which the United States shall be reimbursed in such amounts as the President may fix for each project; and (2) such services, labor, materials, easements, or other property, including money, as may be contributed by any State or political subdivision thereof, State agency, municipal corporation, or other organization, or individuals. Moneys received and accepted under (2) of this subsection shall remain available for expenditure for the purposes for which contributed in like manner as if said sums had been specifically appropriated for said purposes.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary, by cooperative agreements, may arrange with the Department of Agriculture or with such other Federal or State agencies, as the President may deem desirable, for cooperation in the investigations and surveys of projects proposed under the authority of this Act; and in connection with any such project which is undertaken the Secretary by such cooperative agreements may arrange for such cooperation in the construction or operation and maintenance of the project as he deems desirable. Any such cooperative agreement with the Department of Agriculture may provide, among other things (1) that the Secretary of Agriculture shall enter into the repayment contracts, required by section 4, and shall handle the collections of repayments and shall take over the other administrative duties connected with the project after the Secretary of the Interior announces that the project is ready for operation; (2) if such agreement be entered into after construction of the project has been undertaken by the Secretary of the Interior and after he has entered into the repayment contracts required by section 4, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall take over the collection of repayments and other administrative duties connected with the project; (3) that no water shall be delivered to or for any land or party while the owner of said land or said party is in arrears for more than 12 months in the payment to the United States of money due and payable under a land contract entered into pursuant to section 5 (a); and (4) that any repayment contract with a water user or water users' organization entered into pursuant to section 4 and any land contract with the same water user or organization entered into pursuant to section 5 (a), if said contracts involve the same land, may be combined in a single instrument. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to carry out the provision of any such cooperative agreements.

"SEC. 7. On any one project undertaken pursuant to the act of August 28, 1937, entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes" (50 Stat. 869), as amended and supplemented, expenditures for the construction, maintenance, operation, rehabilitation, or financial assistance of any one project, shall not exceed $50,000 of Federal funds, whether appropriated or allotted or both. All project facilities and appurtenances which depend for their utility in whole or in part upon each other or upon any common facility shall be deemed one project within the meaning of this section.

"SEC. 8. All payments made to the United States under repayment contracts on account of reimbursable construction costs, including penalties collected for delinquencies in such payments, and all other receipts from project operations pursuant to sections 4 and 9 shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. Charges collected during the development period of a project under section 4 (c) (1), excepting such amounts thereof as may be credited to reimbursable construction costs, and charges collected for the operation and maintenance of a project under section 4 (c) (2) shall be available for operation and maintenance of said project in like manner as if said funds had been specifically appropriated for said purposes.

"SEC. 9. In connection with any project undertaken pursuant to this act, provisions, including contracts of sale, may be made for furnishing municipal or miscellaneous water supplies, or for developing and furnishing power in addition to the power requirements of irrigation: Provided, That expenditures, from appropriations made directly pursuant to the authority contained in section 12 (1), to meet costs allocated to municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or surplus power shall not exceed $500,000 for any one project: Provided further, That no contract relating to a water supply for municipal or miscellaneous purposes or to electric power shall be made unless, in the judgment of the Secretary, it will not impair the efficiency of the project for irrigation purposes. On any project where such provisions are made, the Secretary shall allocate to municipal or miscellaneous water purposes or to surplus power the part of the estimated construction costs of the project which he deems properly so allocable; and such allocations shall not be included in the reimbursable construction costs covered by the repayment contract or contracts required under section 4. All right, title, and interest in the facilities provided for such municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or surplus power and the revenues derived therefrom shall be and remain in the United States. Contracts for such municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or for such surplus power shall be at such rates as, in the Secretary's judgment, will produce revenues at least sufficient to cover the appropriate share of the annual operation and maintenance cost of the project and such fixed charges, including interest, as the Secretary deems proper. Contracts for the sale of surplus power shall be for periods not to exceed 40 years and contracts for water supply for municipal or miscellaneous purposes shall be for such periods as the Secretary may determine and may include such renewal options as the Secretary deems desirable: And provided further, That in sales or leases of such power, preference shall be given to municipalities and other public corporations or agencies; and also to cooperatives and other nonprofit organizations financed in whole or in part by loans made pursuant to the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 and any amendments thereof.

"SEC. 10. (a) In connection with any project constructed pursuant to the provisions of this act, the Secretary shall have the same authority, with regard to the utilization of lands owned by the United States, other than lands acquired under section 5 as he has in connection with projects undertaken pursuant to the Federal reclamation laws, act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

"(b) In connection with the construction or operation and maintenance of a project undertaken pursuant to the authority of this act, the Secretary shall have with respect to construction and supply contracts, and with respect to the acquisition, exchange, and disposition of lands, interest in lands, water rights, and other property and the relocation thereof, the same authority, including authority to acquire lands and interests in land and water rights with titles and at prices satisfactory to him, which he has in connection with projects under the Federal reclamation laws.

"SEC. 11. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying out their respective functions under this act and for the purpose of carrying provisions of this act into full force and effect.

"SEC. 12. To carry out the purposes of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated (1) for the Department of the Interior such sums as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this act, and (2) for the Department of Agriculture such sums as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 10, line 2, to strike out the phrase "but the farm units of irrigable lands shall be of not more than 160 acres."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. I understand a similar bill has just been passed in the House containing that amendment. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let the amendment be reported.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If I may interrupt, I will explain the purpose of the amendment.

Subparagraph (5) of section 4 begins on page 9, and reads:

The Secretary shall establish the size of farm units of irrigable lands on each project in accordance with his findings of the area sufficient in size for the support of a family on the lands to be irrigated—

Then comes the clause which I ask to have stricken out:

but the farm units of irrigable lands shall be of not more than 160 acres.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator removes the limitation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Because in States such as New Mexico and Wyoming it is desirable to have the limitation removed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana, or some other Senator familiar with the bill, what changes, if any, the bill makes in the agreement for repayments to the Government under existing law?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, under existing law there is no provision, in some instances, for repayment. This bill provides that the projects shall be placed under the regular reclamation law, and the moneys repaid. This is an amendment to the Wheeler-Case bill which passed at the last session of Congress, and the department found that there was an overlapping.

The Wheeler-Case bill originally provided, and the law does now provide, that small dams which are built shall be placed under the Reclamation Service, and that in their construction relief labor may be used in order to cut down the cost.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is, as to a project of a certain size. As I understand, provision is made as to larger projects under the pending bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I think it would extend to larger projects in particular cases in which the President found it to be necessary. He did make provision that such labor should be used on a project in eastern Montana, which could not have been built unless relief or W. P. A. labor had been used. It was found that instead of having many W. P. A. workers, and other workers like them doing work that was not of any benefit to anyone, they could be used on this reclamation project to the great benefit of the community. The bill provides that all these projects shall be under the Reclamation Bureau, and that the moneys shall be repaid in the same way in which moneys are repaid at the present time under the Reclamation Act.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether the bill provides that all projects which might be constructed under the provisions shall be self-liquidating.

Mr. WHEELER. That is provided.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I was compelled to leave the committee room when the bill was being considered by the committee. I understood, and I judge by the amendments which have been offered today, that the recommendations made by the Secretary of Agriculture as to amendments to the bill have all been met.

Mr. WHEELER. That is my understanding. A young man came from the Department and made suggestions, and my understanding was that the suggestions made by the Department of Agriculture were adopted. I may say further that the Department of Agriculture and the Interior Department both have recommended the enactment of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. With the amendment the Senator has offered?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was wondering to what extent the Department of Agriculture may interfere. I do not wish to be critical, but I have more confidence in the Department of the Interior than in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. I can explain to the Senator exactly why the Department of Agriculture went so far out of its way as to make an adverse report on the bill. As a matter of fact, it did not go out of its way at all. Under a law passed by the Congress, the Water Facilities Act was completely under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture was going ahead with that work; so it was not only very necessary but very proper to have the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he did make his recommendations, coordinating some differences which did exist between the two Departments. As the Senator from Montana said, both Departments now fully agree upon the bill. That was the point I wanted to make.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the Department of the Interior has discharged with ability and efficiency the responsibilities resting upon it under the Reclamation Act, and under the administration of that act many arid and sterile lands have been brought under cultivation, and reservoirs have been built. I think it is a great mistake to divide the authority and let the Department of Agriculture intervene. I should rather have all the authority vested in the Department of the Interior than to have any part of the authority lodged in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what we are trying to do under this measure.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I dislike to take up further time of the Senate, but I wish to say that whatever authority was exercised, was exercised pursuant to statutes and laws enacted by the Congress of the United States. I agree with the Senator from Utah as to the excellent work done for the Western States by the Department of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, but it would be unfair to the Department of Agriculture not to say that it has not also done very fine work under the Water Facilities Act, for it has. I think it is fair to the Department of Agriculture that that explanation be made.

Mr. KING. Under the bill which is now before the Senate, as I understand, the authority will be lodged in the Department of the Interior, not divided with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WHEELER. The purpose of the bill is to try to work it out so it will come under the Bureau of Reclamation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SACO DIVIDE UNIT, MILK RIVER PROJECT, MONTANA

The bill (H. R. 9734) authorizing allocation of funds for the construction of Saco Divide unit, Milk River project, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VESSELS FOR CERTAIN STATE NAUTICAL SCHOOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4299) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish suitable vessels for the benefit of certain State nautical schools, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments on page 2, line 3, after paragraph (b) to strike out "The Secretary of the Navy," and to insert "Any department or independent agency of the Government"; and in line 6, after the word "vessels" to strike out "of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to supply suitable vessels of the Coast Guard," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Maritime Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission) is authorized and empowered, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, to furnish suitable vessels, together with all their apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation, one to each of the States of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and California, for the benefit of their respective nautical schools.

(b) Any department or independent agency of the Government is hereby authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to supply suitable vessels for such use by the Commission: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the services to which such vessels have been assigned.

SEC. 2. (a) The Commission is authorized and directed to provide for the construction of four suitable vessels to replace vessels furnished under section 1 hereof of the act of March 4, 1911, as amended, entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes."

(b) The Commission is authorized to secure bids for the construction of such vessels in accordance with approved plans and specifications and to enter into a contract with the successful bidder for the construction, outfitting, and equipment of such vessels.

(c) Such vessels shall be (1) equipped with modern engines for propulsion and modern instruments of navigation, (2) of adequate size to enable them to be used for the purpose of giving instruction in nautical science, and (3) constructed in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared by the Commission and approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. All vessels furnished to States under this act shall be and remain the property of the United States and shall be maintained in good repair by the Commission.

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1911, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. A sum not exceeding the amount annually appropriated by any State or municipality for the purpose of maintaining such a marine school or schools or the nautical branch thereof is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of aiding in the maintenance and support of such school or schools: Provided, however, That appropriations shall be made for one school in any port heretofore named in the preceding section and that the appropriation for any one year shall not exceed $50,000 for any one school."

SEC. 5. (a) Each marine school or nautical branch thereof, as a condition to receiving any portion of the monetary aid authorized by section 2 of the act of March 4, 1911, as amended, entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," or the use of any vessel authorized under this act, shall, under appropriate authority, agree to conform to such standards in regard to students' entrance requirements, the staff of instructors, and courses of and facilities for training, as the Commission shall, by rules and regulations, prescribe.

(b) Each marine school or nautical branch thereof, as a condition to receiving any portion of such monetary aid, in excess of $25,000, shall, under appropriate authority, agree to admit to such school students resident in other States upon such terms and in such numbers as the Commission shall, by rules and regulations prescribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY FUNDS FOR HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3610) to authorize the use of Tennessee Valley Authority funds for alteration, reconstruction, or relocation of certain highway and railroad bridges, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

The first committee amendment was on page 1, after the enacting clause, to strike out lines 3 to 8, as follows:

That any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the use of the Tennessee Valley Authority shall be available for the alteration, reconstruction, or relocation of any highway or railroad bridge, the alteration, reconstruction, or relocation of which is necessitated as a result of the construction of any dam by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, are we now considering Senate bill 3610?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I did want at least a meager explanation of the bill. Does it in any way conflict with the highway acts?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all.

Mr. McNARY. Or with any of the bridge acts?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that in building the dams, especially at Gilbertsville, Ky., it was necessary to change the grades of certain roads. In order to bring that about, before any legislation was introduced at all, conference after conference was held between the attorneys of the T. V. A. and the attorneys of the various railroad companies which were interested, as well as with the highway commission, and an agreement was worked out. The Senator will notice that the bill has been amended. After the matter had been worked out in such a manner as was thought to make the legislation satisfactory, it was then ascertained that there were some other amendments, and those amendments have been adopted by the committee, and the bill is here as the result of compromise and adjustment all along the line. I hope the Senator will be satisfied with that explanation, and consider the measure satisfactory.

Mr. McNARY. I am interested in the project, and have been since I have been in the Senate. I was simply curious to know how the measure fits in with general legislation. The Senator has made the explanation I desired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with this measure, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point, as part of my remarks, a telegram from J. Lyter Donaldson, of Carrolton, Ky., urging the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CARROLTON, KY., September 29, 1940.

Senator ALBEN W. BARKLEY:

I am informed that Senate bill 3610 Tennessee Valley bridge bill will be up for passage tomorrow. As you know the passage of this bill is of vital interest to the highway department of Kentucky. I solicit your efforts in behalf of its passage.

J. LYTER DONALDSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next committee amendment was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "Section 2. Whenever" and to insert "That whenever"; on page 2, line 4, after the word "tributaries", to insert "including approaches, fenders, and appurtenances thereto"; on the same page, line 8, after the word "reconstruction", to insert "relocation"; in line 12, after the words "compensated by the", to insert "Tennessee Valley"; in line 14, after the word "reconstruction", to insert "relocation"; in line 15 after "Provided", to strike out "That there shall be deducted from such cost and compensation a sum which shall equal the value of any direct and special benefits accruing to the owner from any improvement or addition or betterment of the altered, reconstructed, or replaced bridge, trestle, or structure" and to insert, "That in arriving at the amount of such compensation the bridge owner shall be charged with a sum which shall equal the net value to the owner of any direct and special benefits accruing to the owner from any improvement or addition or betterment of the altered, reconstructed, relocated, or replaced bridge, trestle, or structure." On the same page, line 25, after "The", to insert "Tennessee Valley"; on page 3, line 2, after "reconstruction", to insert "relocation"; in line 6, after "Authority", to insert a colon and a proviso, so as to make the paragraph read:

That whenever, as the result of the construction of any dam, reservoir, or other improvement under the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, or amendments thereto, any bridge, trestle, or other highway or railroad structure located over, upon, or across the Tennessee River or any of its navigable tributaries, including approaches, fenders, and appurtenances thereto, is endangered or otherwise adversely affected and damaged, including any interference with or impairment of its use, to the extent that protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement is necessary or proper to preserve its safety or utility or to meet the requirements of navigation or flood control, or both, the owner or owners of such bridge, trestle, or structure shall be compensated by the Tennessee Valley Authority in the sum of the reasonable actual cost of such protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement: Provided, That in arriving at the amount of such compensation the bridge owner shall be charged with a sum which shall equal the net value to the owner of any direct and special benefits accruing to the owner from any improvement or addition or betterment of the altered, reconstructed, relocated, or replaced bridge, trestle, or structure. The Tennessee Valley Authority is empowered to contract with such owner with respect to any such protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement, the payment of the cost thereof and its proper division, which contract may provide either for money compensation or for the performance of all or any part of the work by the Tennessee Valley Authority: Provided, further, That the payments herein provided for shall be made only out of appropriations available for the major project which requires the protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I ask what reason there is for this bill? Why is it necessary by an act of Congress to confer jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear and determine a claim of one person?

Mr. BARKLEY. The reason is that individuals cannot bring suits against the Government of the United States in the district courts without the consent of Congress. The bill was passed by the Senate and the House unanimously earlier in the session. The President vetoed it, and the present bill is a rewriting of the measure to comply with the President's objections. The claimant in this case is an old man. The claim has been pending for many years. It is a matter of convenience to allow him to bring his action, and to try it in the district court of western Kentucky rather than to have him come here and go before the Court of Claims.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does this claimant live in Kentucky?

Mr. BARKLEY. He does. He lives in that district.

Mr. AUSTIN. It amounts, then, in effect, to a consent to sue the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. It amounts to the consent of the United States that he may bring suit to determine whether he is entitled to anything growing out of the contract to build a veterans' hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I think both the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Vermont are talking about a bill which is not now before the Senate. The Senate is now considering Calendar No. 2259, Senate bill 3610.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought that bill had been passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Chair is correct. I was talking about Calendar No. 2261, Senate bill 4360.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought Senate bill 3610 had already been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have not all been stated and agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator from Kentucky and I were both talking about the same thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. We both were what rarely ever happens—out of order.

Mr. WILEY. At the same time. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next committee amendment was, on page 3, line 14, before "Authority", to insert "Tennessee Valley"; in line 15, after the word "rights", to insert "or for a declaration of its rights"; in line 18, after "located.", to insert "In any such proceeding the court shall apportion the total cost of the work between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the owner in accord with the provisions contained in this section. Any judgment, award, or decree rendered against the Tennessee Valley Authority under this section may be satisfied out of appropriations available for the major project which requires the protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement," so as to read:

In the event of a failure to agree upon the terms and conditions of any such contract, or upon any default in the performance of any contract entered into pursuant to this act, the bridge owner or the Tennessee Valley Authority shall have the right to bring suit to enforce its rights or for a declaration of its rights under this act, or under any such contract, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the property in question is located. In any such proceeding the court shall apportion the total cost of the work between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the owner in accord with the provisions contained in this section. Any judgment, award, or decree rendered against the Tennessee Valley Authority under this section may be satisfied out of appropriations available for the major project which requires the protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, to strike out all of section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. In any case where Tennessee Valley Authority has heretofore contracted with any railroad company or companies for the relocation, reconstruction, or for other alteration or change of any railroad across the Tennessee River or any of its navigable tributaries, and, under the terms of such contract, the railroad company or companies have agreed to pay a portion of the cost of such relocation on account of the legal inability of Tennessee Valley Authority (by reason of the location of the railroad property on or across a navigable waterway) to relieve the railroad or railroads of such payment, and where the railroad or railroads have reserved the right under the terms of the contract, to be relieved of such payment by future legislation, the Tennessee Valley Authority is hereby empowered and directed to relieve such railroad or railroads of such payment, and, in case the owner or owners of such railroad shall have made payment to Tennessee Valley Authority of any sum provided in such contract to be so paid, on account of any such relocation, reconstruction, or change, it is hereby made the duty of Tennessee Valley Authority to refund to such owner or owners all sums so paid, with interest at 3 percent from the date of such payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the alteration, reconstruction, or relocation of certain highway and railroad bridges by the Tennessee Valley Authority."

THEODORE R. TROENDLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4360) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, sole stockholder of the Dawson Springs Construction Co.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I should like to say a word or two about this bill. The Dawson Springs Construction Co. had a contract to erect certain buildings. Under the terms of the contract the United States Government was to supply the lumber that was to be used in the buildings. Old lumber was secured from old Army cantonments and buildings which were torn down. The contention of the claimant is that the number of feet required by the contract was actually provided, and within the proper time, and while it was supposed to be rough lumber, the lumber furnished was so very rough that it could not be used at all, and that he was obliged to spend approximately $7,000 in the purchase of additional lumber. So he has that claim; whether valid or not, we do not know. He wants to assert that claim.

There are two reasons why this proposed legislation is necessary. The statute of limitations was running against the claim to begin with, so we had to waive that. In addition, the Committee on Claims did not feel that it was in a position to pass on the merits of the case, and so, sometime ago, both Houses of Congress passed a measure conferring jurisdiction upon the United States district court. There was a veto of the bill, and the chief point of the veto was that the measure, as passed, provided that a writ of certiorari could be taken directly from the district court to the Supreme Court of the United States. The President objected to that. He did not see why, if an appeal was taken in this case, it should not go to the circuit court of appeals.

We made the necessary change in this bill. Some other objections with respect to procedure were made by the President, which were corrected. All the bill does now is to give the claimant the right to go into the United States district court, regardless of the fact that the statute of limitations may have run, and it also does the other necessary things to provide that a suit may be brought against the Government. No defenses which the Government may have against the claim are waived in the measure at all, other than the statute of limitations.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. At the top of page 2 of the bill, the first line, the date "February 22, 1940," appears. Is that an error? The reason I ask is that the Senator from Nebraska has stated that the claim was about to be outlawed. Apparently the claim arose under a contract, and by virtue of a breach of a contract dated February 22, 1940.

Mr. BURKE. If that date is given, of course, it is in error.

Mr. AUSTIN. It seems to me it ought to be corrected.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the date should be 1920.

Mr. BURKE. The date of the contract is 1920, instead of 1940.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the date given in the bill is correct, I think the proviso with which the bill ends ought to be changed in order that the claimant may have the benefit of at least the same tolerance with respect to the running of the statute as have other claimants. However, with the change now suggested from 1940 to 1920, I think the proviso is all right.

Mr. BURKE. I move that the date "1940", on page 2, line 1, be changed to "1920."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Theodore R. Troendle, the sole owner of the capital stock of the Dawson Springs Construction Co., a Delaware corporation, which heretofore forfeited its charter, is hereby authorized to bring suit or suits as he may respectfully desire to so do against the United States of America, to recover damages, if any, for loss or losses suffered or sustained by said Dawson Springs Construction Co. by reason of any breach on the part of the United States of a contract dated February 22, 1920, or any modification thereof, for the construction of eight buildings for the United States Public Health Service Sanatorium at Dawson Springs, Ky. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, consider, determine, and render judgment for the respective amounts of such damages, if any, in favor of said Theodore R. Troendle, as may be found to have been sustained or suffered by the said Dawson Springs Construction Co., with the same right of appeal as in other cases and notwithstanding any lapse of time or statute of limitations and notwithstanding the provisions of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That such action will be brought within 1 year from the date this act shall become effective.

AMENDMENT OF CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS ACT

The bill (S. 4338) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 319), as amended by the act of May 12, 1938 (52 Stat. 349), is further amended by adding after the words "War veterans" in the second proviso of said section the following: "and Indians."

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF NATIONALITY LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive Nationality Code, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Immigration was under the heading "Chapter II—Nationality at birth," in section 205, on page 8, line 6, after the word "child", to insert "whether born before or after the effective date of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Former citizens of the United States," in section 317, at the top of page 28, to insert:

SUBSECTION (c). A person who shall have been a citizen of the United States and also a national of a foreign state, and who shall have lost his citizenship of the United States under the provisions of section 401 (c) of this act, shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, except that contained in subdivision (2) thereof. Such person, if abroad, may enter the United States as a nonquota immigrant, for the purpose of recovering his citizenship, upon compliance with the provisions of the Immigration Acts of 1917 and 1924.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter IV—Loss of nationality", in section 401, page 86, line 13, after the name "United States", to strike out "or" and to insert "if he has or acquires the nationality of such foreign state; or", so as to read:

(c) Entering, or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state unless expressly authorized by the laws of the United States; if he has or acquires the nationality of such foreign state; or

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, there is an error in the printing. As the language is printed, there is a semicolon after the name "United States." Before the amendment is agreed to, I should like to offer an amendment to strike out the semicolon. It is present through a printing error.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 401, on page 87, after line 3, to insert:

(h) Committing any act of treason against, or attempting by force to overthrow or bearing arms against the United States, provided he is convicted thereof by a court martial or by a court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 403, on page 88, line 3, after the words "as provided in", to strike out "subsection (g)" and insert "subsections (g) and (h)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 406, on page 89, line 20, after the word "religious", to strike out "commercial or financial organization" and insert "commercial, financial, or business organization", and on page 90, after line 4, to strike out:

(e) Who is the wife, husband, or child under 21 years of age, and is residing abroad for the purpose of being with a naturalized spouse or parent who comes within the scope of section 405 or subsections (a), (b), (c), or (d) hereof.

And insert in lieu thereof:

(e) Who is the wife, husband, or child under 21 years of age of, and is residing abroad for the purpose of being with, an American citizen spouse or parent who is residing abroad for one of the objects or causes specified in section 405 or subsections (a), (b), (c), or (d) hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite the attention of my friend from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to an amendment which I have suggested.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, if there be no objection, I shall be glad to accept the amendment, with the understanding that it will go to conference. The Senator, as the ranking member of the committee, will undoubtedly be one of the conferees. As I have examined the amendment which he suggests, it seems to me that he suggests inserting it in the wrong place. However, let it go in that place; and if we find that it is the wrong place, we can change it in conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 2, after the words "naturalization of", it is proposed to insert "Filipinos, with full civil-service ranking, who have been in the service for at least 3 years, nor of."

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has very kindly consented to accept the amendment and let it go to conference. I wish to explain the amendment briefly. A considerable number of Filipinos have been serving under civil service in the United States for a number of years, and there certainly can be no objection to considering the validity of their claims for nationality.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have no objection to the amendment, with the understanding previously stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I offer three amendments which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, it is proposed to add the following: "It does not include an alien."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

If any person who claims a right or privilege as a national of the United States is denied such right or privilege by an executive official or department upon the ground that he is not a national of the United States, such person, regardless of whether he is in United States territory or abroad, may petition a district court of the United States for a judgment declaring him to be a national of the United States: Provided, That if such person is beyond the jurisdiction of the United States and shall have filed such petition in court, he may upon submission of a sworn application, obtain from a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in the foreign country in which he is residing, a certificate of identity, showing that his nationality status is pending before the court and may be admitted to the United States with such certificate upon the condition that he shall be subject to deportation in case it shall be decided by the court that he is not a national of the United States: Provided further, That such certificate of identity shall not be denied solely on the ground that such person is not a national of the United States.

The Secretary of State, with approval of the Attorney General, shall prescribe rules and regulations for the issuance of certificates of identity as above provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 4, after the word "hair", it is proposed to insert a comma and strike out the words "and eyes" and insert the words "eyes and fingerprints."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. KING, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

RELIEF OF EASTERN CHEROKEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4232) for the relief of the Eastern Cherokees, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to insert: "The warrants representing this unpaid balance are hereby canceled upon the approval of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,997.85, with interest at 5 percent per annum from March 15, 1910, the same being the amount of the unpaid interest-bearing principal found due the Eastern Cherokees by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1906 (202 U. S. 101); and when appropriated shall be placed to the credit of the Eastern Cherokees and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to their attorney of record. The warrants representing this unpaid balance are hereby canceled upon the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to look into the bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF EASTERN AND WESTERN CHEROKEES

The bill (S. 4233) for the relief of the Eastern and Western Cherokees was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the last two bills seek to clear up some odds and ends of funds credited to the Cherokees. Under the terms of the bill the money will go to the credit of the tribes and thereafter be paid out to attorneys of record. The attorneys claim that they have been to great expense in times past in protecting the interests of the Indians. So, if the bill should pass, the funds would go for that purpose.

Mr. KING. They would go to the attorneys?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The funds would go to the attorneys of record as attorneys' fees, for services in behalf of the Indians. That is all the force and effect of the proposed legislation.

Mr. KING. I am always interested in attorneys, being one myself; but I am more interested in seeing justice done to the Indians. I shall look into these two measures, and if I find that the attorneys' fees are proper, at an early date I shall join my friend in asking consideration of the bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS FOR AIRPORT USE IN PALM SPRINGS RESERVATION, CALIF.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7738) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease or sell certain lands of the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Reservation, Calif., for public airport use, and for other purposes," which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That a lease bearing date of December 8, 1939, between the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians of California and the city of Palm Springs, Calif., in the following words, is hereby ratified and confirmed:

"This indenture of lease executed at Palm Springs, Calif., as of the 4th day of December, 1939, by and between the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians of California, the party of the first part hereinafter referred to as lessor and the city of Palm Springs, a municipal corporation of the State of California, the party of the second part, hereinafter referred to as lessee, both of said parties being within the county of Riverside, State of California.

"Witnesseth, that the lessor hereby leases to the lessee the land and premises in the city of Palm Springs, county of Riverside, State of California, described as section 18, township 4 south, range 5 east of the San Bernardino base and meridian, for a term of 25 years beginning on the 1st day of January 1941, and ending on the 31st day of December 1965, for the rental for said premises for said term which the lessee agrees to pay to the lessor which shall be 10 percent of the gross receipts of the lessee for the use of said premises during said term, it being agreed, however, that the minimum rental which the lessee shall pay the lessor shall be the sum of $640 per annum, payable in advance on or before the 31st day of January of each year of the term of this lease, and that during the month of January 1942 and the month of January of each year thereafter of said term, the lessee shall furnish to the lessor a sworn statement of the gross receipts received by the lessee for the use of said premises for the preceding year, and on or before the 31st day of said month of January in each said year of the term of this lease the lessee shall pay to the lessor in addition to said sum of $640 an amount equal to 10 percent of the excess, if any, of said gross receipts over and above the sum of $6,400.

"The term 'gross receipts' as used herein for the purpose of calculating the amount of said rental is herein defined as being all sums of money received by the lessee for the use of said premises for the purposes herein specified during each annual period of the term of this lease.

"Said demised premises shall be used by the lessee and its sublessees for public airport and other uses and purposes.

"Upon the termination of this lease by surrender by the lessee or by dispossession of the lessee by the lessor or by any authority superior to the lessor, all rent and liabilities of the lessee accruing thereafter shall cease and the lessee may within a period of 60 days remove any and all improvements placed upon said premises during the term of said lease save and except buildings permanently affixed to the land, but, upon failure to remove same within that period, any improvements remaining thereon shall become the property of the Agua Caliente Band of Indians.

"It is expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that the lessor does not assume any responsibility for damage caused, either directly or indirectly, by any operations of the lessee under this contract, and the lessee hereby agrees to hold the lessor harmless for any damage which may result from the operations of the lessee, or of its employees or agents under this lease, whether the acts causing such damage be negligent or otherwise.

"The lessee must comply with all State sanitary, health, and housing regulations.

"The lessee agrees that it will not use, or permit to be used any part of the premises for the manufacture, sale, gift, storage, or drinking of intoxicating liquor or beverages, so long as these are prohibited by law upon the demised premises.

"This lease may be canceled by the lessor at the discretion of and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior for failure of the lessee to comply with any of the terms thereof.

"The rental herein required to be paid by the lessee to the lessor for the use of said premises during said term shall be paid to the legally authorized agent of the lessor entitled by law to receive the same and receipt therefor, and such payment shall be a full discharge of the lessee therefor.

"It is agreed that the lessee may enter upon said premises immediately upon the lawful ratification and approval hereof, and prior to the beginning of said term for the purpose of improving and preparing said premises for use as an airport.

"In witness whereof the parties hereunto have subscribed their names and affixed their seals as of the day first hereinabove mentioned.

"GUY PINNEY, City Clerk.

"I, Clemente Segundo, hereby certify that all the persons named as signers on the lease of the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians for section 18, township 4 south, range 5 east, Riverside County, Calif., are all duly enrolled and qualified members of said band; that they have read or had read to them and interpreted to them said lease, made to the city of Palm Springs, Calif. That they have expressed their understanding of the same and desire to have the same approved and put into effect for the mutual benefit of all, both the Indians and white residents of the said city. That the terms were explained and approved by all signers.

"Witness my hand this 6th day of December 1939.

"CLEMENTE SEGUNDO.

"I, Lena Welmas, hereby certify that I am the acting secretary for the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians of California, and secretary of the acting council. That I certify that all the persons named as signers of the foregoing described lease are Indians qualified to sign the same, and that the said lease has been thoroughly discussed and read and explained, particularly to those who could not read or understand the English language. Particular care has been exercised to give a thorough explanation to those not understanding the English language. That I have personally seen to giving full explanations as to the same.

"Witness my hand and seal this 6th day of December 1939, at Palm Springs, Calif.

"LENA C. WELMAS.

"Approved:

"WILLIE MARCUS BELARDO, Chairman."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in explanation of the bill, let me say that the city of Palm Springs, Calif., is located in the midst of numerous tracts of land belonging to certain Mission Indians of California. Heretofore the city has leased a small corner of one section of land for an airport. The airport is entirely inadequate, and the Indians have no authority to lease more land than they have already leased. The bill authorizes or approves a lease already made between the Indians and the city of Palm Springs. It covers a section of land, and the annual rent is $1 an acre for 640 acres. The land in its present state is worthless, but it is close to Palm Springs, and may be converted into an airport, which would be of great value.

That is the whole force and effect of the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to ratify a lease entered into by certain Mission Indians of California."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9603), to amend the Canal Zone Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ERNEST LYLE GREENWOOD AND PHYLLIS JOY GREENWOOD

The bill (H. R. 8744) for the relief of Ernest Lyle Greenwood and Phyllis Joy Greenwood was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANTONIO SABATINI

The bill (H. R. 8163) for the relief of Antonio Sabatini was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEFINA ALVARADO

The bill (H. R. 4066) for the relief of Josefina Alvarado was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HAMA TORII EMERSON

The bill (H. R. 6820) for the relief of Mrs. Hama Torii Emerson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IDA VALERI

The bill (S. 4236) for the relief of Ida Valeri was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order that Ida Valeri, an alien who has resided in the United States most of the time since 1911, may be permitted to remain in this country with her citizen husband and citizen children, the warrant of deportation against the said alien is hereby canceled and it is further directed that she shall not again be made the subject of deportation proceedings on the grounds contained in the existing warrant.

MAX VON DER PORTEN AND WIFE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4085) for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife Charlotte von der Porten, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of Max von der Porten and his wife Charlotte von der Porten, as of February 5, 1940, the date on which they were admitted temporarily to the United States. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the German quota for the first year the said German quota is available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

BELA KARLOVITZ

The bill (H. R. 9840) for the relief of Bela Karlovitz was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD immediately following the passage of House bill 9840 a report submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] for the Committee on Immigration, and a statement by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the report and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9840) for the relief of Bela Karlovitz, having considered the same, report it back to the Senate without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The bill would authorize the recording of the alien as having been admitted for permanent residence. The amendment adopted by the House would deduct one number from the quota of Hungary.

GENERAL INFORMATION

The bill passed the House of Representatives on June 21, 1940, and there is made a part of this report copy of the Committee Report filed by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization which explains the bill in detail.

Your committee after carefully considering all the facts and evidence in this case recommended that the bill be favorably reported to the Senate.

"The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9840) for the relief of Bela Karlovitz, having considered the same, report it back with an amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

"Committee amendment is as follows:

"After line 8 add a paragraph containing the following language:

" 'Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the Hungarian quota for the first year that the said Hungarian quota is available.'

"PURPOSE OF THE BILL

"The bill would authorize the recording of the alien as having been admitted for permanent residence. The amendment would deduct from the quota of Hungary.

"GENERAL INFORMATION

"There is no fraud in this case.

"This alien is a native and citizen of Hungary and he has a wife and three children residing in that country. He is an electrical engineer and is working on the development of an invention for the generation of power. A large electrical-manufacturing company, having received information with reference to his work, sent a representative to Budapest, Hungary, and purchased from this alien the rights to the patent when it is perfected. They persuaded this alien to come to the United States and to their plant for the purpose of completing his invention. This company has already expended in the neighborhood of $50,000 in experiments and there was testimony to the effect that they are quite certain that this invention will prove successful.

"The bill was introduced by Congressman McDOWELL, of Pennsylvania. The Congressman appeared and stated the facts in relation to the invention and urged the favorable report of his bill as it is felt that if this invention is completed under the supervision of this alien that the new method involved of generating electrical power from coal will attain efficiencies far in excess of those obtained by other methods. This is particularly adaptable to marine propulsion and will save approximately half the fuel customarily used. The weight of the equipment is also much less than that of the usual equipment.

"If successful it would permit a larger cruising range for vessels with the same fuel load. That is important for battleships because of the saving of weight and fuel. This weight can be translated into increased armor plate. The author of the bill introduced correspondence with the Navy Department which indicated their interest in this invention. It was urged by the Congressman that it would be an important factor in the national defense. A representative of the manufacturing company also appeared testifying as to the desire of the company to have this bill enacted into law.

"This is briefly some of the evidence produced and the committee felt that such an invention, if successfully completed, would be an important improvement in the present methods used in battleships. The committee recommend favorable action.

"There is attached a letter from the Department of Labor."

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 5, 1940.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman, House Committee on Immigration, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN DICKSTEIN: I refer to your letter of May 31, 1940 enclosing for my comment and recommendation H. R. 9840, for the relief of Bela Karlovitz, the bill providing as follows:

"That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws Bela Karlovitz, of Wilkinsburg, Pa., a research engineer temporarily in the United States as a visitor, shall be considered to have been lawfully admitted, at New York, N. Y., on September 1, 1938, to the United States for permanent residence."

This is the case of a 35-year-old, married, native and citizen of Hungary, who was admitted at the port of New York on September 8, 1938, temporarily under waiver of the contract labor provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, upon petition of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

It appears that the subject of this letter is employed by the firm above named as a consultant and was brought to this country primarily by reason of the fact that he had particular knowledge of an electronic invention which was important to his employer. In an application addressed to the Immigration Service by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. under date of February 14, 1940, it was set forth that Mr. Karlovitz was carrying on extended research and development of a new process which he had invented and patented in Hungary, his native country; and due to the extreme importance of his work, it was requested that he be granted a further extension of time within which to depart from this country. In pursuance of this request Karlovitz was granted an extension of his temporary admission to August 29, 1940. His wife and three minor children are now residing in Budapest.

The records disclose that Karlovitz has, throughout the time he has been in the United States, acted in good faith, and the primary reason for having him remain in this country for permanent residence appears to be due to his value to this Government.

The bill provides that he shall be considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States on September 1, 1938, for permanent residence.

On the facts of record it is my recommendation tha tthe bill receive favorable consideration. However, I believe that the pending bill should be amended so as to provide "Upon enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year." The bill should be further amended to show admission for permanent residence on September 8, 1938, as this is the date the subject was admitted to this country.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DAVIS

There has been reported a bill (H. R. 9840) to lawfully admit Bela Karlovitz to permanent residence in this country.

In 1938 the Westinghouse Co. brought Mr. Karlovitz from Budapest to this country to work in their research laboratories to continue work on his very valuable invention.

It was thought when he was brought here on a visitor's visa that he would have time to complete his invention. The visa expired July 1940 and he has not yet completed his invention. He wishes to become a citizen. Under the normal procedure for coming into this country as an immigrant, Mr. Karlovitz would need to return to Budapest and make application on regular quota. The quota, however, is exhausted for many years to come so that if this procedure was followed his work would be interrupted for a good many years. Of course, there would also be the hazard that he might not be able to come to the United States at that time.

The invention upon which Mr. Karlovitz is working is of very great significance from the standpoint of national defense. It involves a new method of generating electrical power from fuel which will attain efficiencies far in excess of those obtained by other methods. The method seems particularly adaptable to marine propulsion and in that application would save approximately half the fuel customarily used. The weight of the equipment used in the Karlovitz invention is also considerably less than that of the usual equipment. This invention will permit a larger cruising range for vessels for the same fuel load. This is very important for battleships, because any saving in weight of fuel carried can at once be translated into an increased amount of armor plate. It is hoped that this will be completed in the next 6 months.

Not only for this particular invention but also for his great mechanical ability, I feel that Mr. Karlovitz would make a very fine contribution to us as a citizen of this country—especially in view of our many needs in connection with national defense.

ESTHER KLEIN

The bill (H. R. 4656) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Esther Klein was considered, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

PER CAPITA PAYMENT TO RED LAKE BAND, CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 8369) authorizing a per capita payment of $10 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, from any funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to their credit, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNDARIES OF SAGUARO NATIONAL MONUMENT

The bill (S. 7) to revise the boundaries of the Saguaro National Monument was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the exterior boundaries of the Saguaro National Monument, Ariz., established by proclamation of the President, dated March 1, 1933 (47 Stat., pt. 2, 2557), are hereby revised and amended so as to include within said monument all lands in section 8, the northwest quarter, the south half of the northeast quarter, and the south half of section 9, the southwest quarter of section 10, the west half of section 15, sections 11, 14, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, and the north half of section 34, township 14 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered on behalf of the United States, to purchase at an appraised value of $25 per acre, all privately owned lands and rights thereto within section 8, the south half of the southeast quarter of section 9, the north half of section 17, and section 29, township 14 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $42,000 for the purposes of this section.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered, on behalf of the United States, to purchase, at the appraised value of $1,300, a certain well and pumping machinery in place, together with the following-described land surrounding and including said well:

Beginning at a point 1,007 feet south of the north boundary of section 31, township 14 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, and 30 feet east of the west boundary of said section 31, thence due east 468 feet, thence due south 186 feet, thence due west 468 feet, thence due north 186 feet to the point of beginning, a total of 2 acres more or less, all located within the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 31: Provided, That such purchase shall include easements of way for power lines and water lines to be forever vested in the United States through the north half of said section 31 between the above-described land and the dedicated county highway land on the north boundary of said section 31: And provided further, That said purchase shall vest in the United States absolute title to all water rights in the west half of the northwest quarter of said section 31. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,300 for the purposes of this section.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, on behalf of the United States, to acquire title from the University of Arizona to the southwest quarter of section 10, and the west half of section 15, and from the State of Arizona to all of sections 11, 14, 22, 28, and the east half of section 21, all in township 14 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to said university as partial reimbursement for the value of the southwest quarter of said section 10, the west half of said section 15, and in consideration of the expenditures of said university in protecting and acquiring for the benefit of the United States the cactus forest growth on all of the lands described in this section, the sum of $55,000.

SEC. 5. With the exception of the lands described in section 4 of this act, the State of Arizona may relinquish in favor of the United States such portions as it may see fit of all other State lands described in section 1 of this act, and shall have the right on such relinquishments to select in lieu thereof other unreserved and nonmineral public lands within the State of Arizona equal in value to those relinquished, said lieu selections to be made in the same manner as is provided for in the enabling act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. 558), or, in the discretion of the State of Arizona, under the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), as amended and supplemented by the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 842). The payment of fees or commissions is hereby waived in all lieu selections made pursuant to this section.

SEC. 6. The provisions of the proclamation of the President dated March 1, 1933 (47 Stat., pt. 2, 2557), creating the Saguaro National Monument, are hereby repealed insofar as they affect the north half of the northeast quarter of section 9, the north half and the southeast quarter of section 10, and the east half of section 15, township 14 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, and section 5, township 15 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian.

SEC. 7. Jurisdiction over all lands within the boundaries of the Saguaro National Monument as described in section 1 of this act is hereby vested in the Secretary of the Interior acting through the National Park Service. Except for the areas described in sections 1 and 6 of this act, all lands within the Saguaro National Monument as established by said proclamation of the President dated March 1, 1933, are hereby restored to the Coronado National Forest, to be administered in accordance with existing law by the Secretary of Agriculture acting through the United States Forest Service, subject to all valid existing rights which may have accrued in favor of private individuals.

PROTECTION WORKS, EAST HARTFORD, CONN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4362) to provide for the completion of certain local protection works at East Hartford, Conn., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the word "hereby", to insert the words "authorized to be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the comprehensive plan for flood control in the Connecticut River Basin provided for in the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1938, is hereby modified to include the local protection works at East Hartford, Conn., recommended by the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 653, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the completion of the said works the sum of $1,640,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

The bill (H. R. 9581) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, in view of the fact that there has been some little question concerning House bill 9581 and in order that the RECORD may make proper elucidation of the facts in connection with the bill, will the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who reported the bill, explain the measure briefly? I ask permission to return to it for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will return to the consideration of House bill 9581.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the bill referred to is entitled "To amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended."

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 exempts from Federal income tax of every nature and description all subsidized vessels. Unsubsidized vessels are subject to the tax. This bill, in order further to encourage the building up of the merchant marine, provides that a reserve fund may be created for the purpose of building new vessels in our merchant marine. The reserve fund is created through the proceeds of the sale of old vessels. When applied to the construction of new vessels the fund is exempt from immediate taxation, but the owner of the vessel is not relieved from taxation, but taxation is merely deferred because under the terms of the bill, the value of a vessel on the basis of its depreciated value will be increased by the amount actually realized from its sale.

I will give the Senator from Utah an illustration: If a vessel carried at a depreciated value of $100,000 is sold for $400,000, and the cost of the new vessel, we will say, is three times as much, then the value of the new vessel in determining the income-tax returns will be the cost less the proceeds derived from the sale of the vessel, or, in figures, $1,200,000 less $400,000 instead of minus $100,000. Therefore the owner will pay a larger tax on it, because depreciation will be calculated on the smaller instead of the larger value. The tax will be paid back over a period of years instead of being paid at once. I think that is about all that need be said in explanation of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill seems rather formidable in its provisions, and I am not very well advised concerning it. A Senator who is absent asked to request that it go over. I was not in the Chamber when it was called. I shall not ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, but I shall interpose a motion to reconsider, and if, upon consulting with the Senator tomorrow, there are no valid objections, I will withdraw the motion. That is only fair, it seems to me.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I inquire the number of the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. It is House bill 9581.

Mr. WHEELER. I may say to the Senator from Utah I have a letter written by persons in whom I have a good deal of confidence who tell me that this proposed legislation is very desirable.

Mr. OVERTON. The bill is approved by the Treasury Department. It has been gone into very thoroughly by the United States Maritime Commission. We are doing everything we can to encourage the building of the merchant marine, especially at this time. The immediate purpose of this bill is simply to defer the payment of income taxes and excess-profits taxes. It would not relieve the ship owner of the payment of them ultimately. The purpose is to encourage the building of the merchant marine.

Mr. KING. I sympathize entirely with that view, but when a Senator is absent, particularly when it is not his fault, and he asks that a measure go over, I have always been disposed to aid him in every way. The bill was passed during my absence; I will merely enter a motion to reconsider, and if, upon consulting with the Senator tomorrow, he has no objection, I shall withdraw the motion.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I was going to say to the Senator from Utah that I have just had a telephone request from the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], who could not be here today, that he would like to be heard on this matter.

Mr. KING. It was at his instance that I was interposing my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to reconsider will be entered.

SAFE CARRIAGE BY WATER OF EXPLOSIVES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 7357) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes to provide for the safe carriage of explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board vessels was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9982) to amend sec. 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 3, line 2, after the word "them", to insert:

This subsection shall not apply to any ferry or any tug used in connection with a ferry operation, if such ferry or tug is employed exclusively in trade on the Great Lakes, lakes (other than the Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, canals, and harbors, and is not engaged on an international voyage.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 46, sec. 643), is amended by the addition of a new subsection lettered (l), reading as follows:

"(l) The master of every vessel subject to the provisions of this section shall submit, over his signature, reports to the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the employment, discharge, or termination of services of every seaman not shipped or discharged before a shipping commissioner, which reports shall contain such of the following information as may be required by regulation of the Secretary of Commerce: (1) name of vessel, official number, voyage number, port, date, description of voyage, name in full of each seaman, number of continuous discharge book or certificate of identification and of license, certificate of registry, or service, and efficiency for rating in which employed, age, citizenship, capacity in which engaged, date and place of engagement, date and place of discharge or separation from service of vessel, the percentage of citizens of the United States in the crew, and name in full of the master and the serial number of his license; (2) a statement showing (a) that the master has entered into an agreement with each seaman on board such vessel as required by law; (b) that at least 65 percent of the deck crew (exclusive of licensed officers) are of a rating not less than able seamen; (c) that at least 75 percent of the crew in each department are able to understand orders given by the officers; (d) that the vessel has in her service the number of lifeboatmen required by her certificate of inspection; (e) that each member of the cress possesses a license, certificate of registry, or certificate of service for the rating in which he is engaged; and (f) that each lifeboatman possesses a certificate of efficiency. The Secretary of Commerce shall by regulation prescribe the form and content of such reports and time of submitting them. This subsection shall not apply to any ferry or any tug used in connection with a ferry operation if such ferry or tug is employed exclusively in trade on the Great Lakes, lakes (other than the Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, canals, and harbors, and is not engaged on an international voyage. Any master who shall violate any provision of this subsection or regulations established hereunder shall be subject to a penalty of $500."

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized whenever, in his judgment, the national interest requires to extend the provisions of subsection (l) of section 4551, Revised Statutes, as amended, to such additional class or classes of vessels and to such waters as he may designate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

In order to secure the maximum efficiency of transportation agencies, it is hereby provided that the exemptions contained in section 13 (b) (2) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 applicable to railroads, express companies, and pipe lines subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act shall likewise be applicable to common and contract carriers subject to parts II and III of the Interstate Commerce Act, irrespective of differences in the manner in which employees and exemptions have been defined in the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, since we passed the last transportation act, known as Senate bill 2009, the water carriers have come under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. So now the railroads, the motor carriers, and the water carriers are under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. All the employees of the railroads as to the regulation of their hours are under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under the Motor Carrier Act we provided that the employees of the motor carriers should likewise be under the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Supreme Court by a 5-to-4 decision confined employees to those connected only with the safety operations of the motor carriers. The definition of seamen has been so confined as to restrict it only to a limited number of seamen. So the only purpose of this amendment is to bring the employees of the water carriers and employees of the motor carriers as to their hours under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission just as the employees of the railroads now are.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have been told that the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana would take out certain classes of employees from the Fair Labor Standards Act. Some of the labor people are very much opposed to it, I am told. I wonder if the Senator would not let the bill go over until I have an opportunity to look into the matter, because word came to me that they are very much opposed to it, and I would have to ask that the bill go over?

Mr. MINTON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

NAUTICAL SCHOOL VESSEL FOR STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 299) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish to the State of Pennsylvania a vessel suitable for the use of the Pennsylvania State Nautical School, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives which is identical in title with Senate Joint Resolution 299. Without objection, the House joint resolution will be substituted for the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that we have already passed legislation today—Senate bill 4299—making provision for a ship for the State of Pennsylvania. It seems to me this joint resolution ought to be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I will state that I made the same suggestion to the author of the joint resolution, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]; but he stated that there was a very immediate necessity for the enactment of this joint resolution. It is possible that the other measure may not be approved by the House. This measure has already been approved by the House. The vessel which is now assigned for use by the nautical school in Pennsylvania is so old and unseaworthy that it cannot even be used on the Delaware River. It is laid up; and while, in a sense, this measure is a duplication of one feature of the bill which has just been passed by the Senate, that bill may not receive the approval of the House.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the situation if Senate bill 4299, which we have also passed today, should be passed by the House? Would the State of Pennsylvania get two of these ships?

Mr. OVERTON. No; in no event would Pennsylvania get two ships. Only one vessel is provided to be furnished. Whether it will be furnished under this particular joint resolution or whether it will be furnished under the general bill, there will be only one; but I assume that if both measures are passed this joint resolution probably will be vetoed by the President, because it is already covered by the bill that he will approve if the legislation commends itself to his judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, House Joint Resolution 603 will be substituted for Senate Joint Resolution 299.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 603) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish to the State of Pennsylvania a vessel suitable for the use of the Pennsylvania State Nautical School, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 299 will be indefinitely postponed.

SUSPENSION OF 8-HOUR-DAY LIMITATION ON CONTRACTS OF MARITIME COMMISSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4341) to expedite national defense by suspending during the national emergency provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the national emergency, declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by United States Maritime Commission contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels shall be suspended: Provided, That the wages of every laborer and mechanic employed by any contractor or subcontractor engaged in the performance of any such contract shall be computed on a basic rate of 8 hours per day and 40 hours per week and work in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week shall be permitted upon compensation for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week at not less than one and one-half times the basic rate of pay.

SEC. 2. The United States Maritime Commission is hereby authorized to modify its existing contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels as it may deem necessary to expedite national defense, and to otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. Nothing in this act shall be construed to modify any contracts between management and labor in shipyards which provide for conditions more favorable to labor than the minimum provisions as to hours per day and hours per week and for overtime provided in this act.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the bill meets with departmental approval, and it is the understanding of the Commerce Committee that it meets with the approval of organized labor. There is no objection to it. Labor may be worked more than the regular 8 hours a day upon condition that for overtime work it be paid one and a half times the usual rate. With that stipulation in the bill, I understand it is not objectionable to organized labor, and it meets with the approval of the Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4364) to provide for necessary facilities for the District of Columbia National Guard Air Corps Squadron was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill. I am not sure whether provision is made as to who is to meet these expenditures, whether the District of Columbia or the Federal Government. My attention has just been called to the bill. I am not familiar with its terms, and have not ascertained its sponsorship—whether it is a bill which emanates from the War Department, the Navy Department, or the District of Columbia, and whether the purpose is to impose upon the District of Columbia an obligation which ought to rest upon the Federal Government, or vice versa.

Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under objection.

PAN AMERICAN AVIATION DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 295) authorizing the participation of the United States in the celebration of a Pan American Aviation Day, to be observed on December 17 of each year, the anniversary of the first successful flight of a heavier-than-air machine, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to designate December 17 of each year as Pan American Aviation Day and to issue a proclamation calling upon all officials of the Government, Governors of the 48 States, our possessions, and all citizens to participate in the observance of this day to further and stimulate interest in aviation in the American countries as an important stimulus to the further development of more rapid communications and a cultural development between the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

The preamble was stricken out.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN COMMERCE AFFECTING NATIONAL DEFENSE

The resolution (S. Res. 309) to investigate conditions of interstate and foreign commerce which may or do delay, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am about to object to the consideration of the resolution, and I desire to make a brief statement of the reasons why I desire to have it go over. I have just barely had an opportunity to read the resolution. On its face, it appears to be favorable to national defense, but it seems to me it has internal evidence of being of directly the opposite effect. It is my impression that the mere adoption of the resolution would very much damage the unity of this country and the spirit of national defense.

The recitation, on the first page, of one paragraph of the preamble, as follows—

Whereas information has come to hand that some large concerns important to national defense have deferred national interests to monetary considerations by giving preference to foreign munitions orders—

Sounds to me like an argument I heard when we were discussing the Neutrality Act of 1939, and afterward, when we were taking every step which, as a Congress of the United States, we have taken toward national defense. That recitation has a familiar ring, and it does not seem consistent with other matters stated in the preamble.

Ostensibly, it would look as if this were a resolution aimed against German nationals, and a resolution to ascertain whether American nationals, perhaps of German stock, had conspired with German nationals against the interests of national defense. This is a matter of such grave import that I think it ought not to be considered on the calendar under an agreement to take up unobjected-to measures.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont withhold his objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I was the author of the resolution. We held hearings on the subject before the Interstate Commerce Committee, of which the Senator from Vermont is a member. A representative of the Department of Justice appeared before the committee urging the adoption of the resolution. The resolution was submitted to the Attorney General of the United States, and he said that some of the matters which were stated had been called to his attention, and that he thought the adoption of the resolution would be very helpful. In addition to that, let me say to the Senator that Raymond Clapper and many of the leading newspaper editors of the country have written articles and editorials favorable to the resolution, because they felt that it was in the interest of national defense.

I do not care to take up the time of the Senate to go into some of the things which have been called to my attention with reference to contracts which have been made, and which are pending at the present time, with reference to German concerns and Japanese concerns, because I feel that a great deal of injury might result if that were done; but the fact has been called to my attention that certain legislation was needed. I desire to say to the Senator that unless the resolution is agreed to I shall take up on the floor of the Senate and refer to some of the things which have been called to my attention in the way of contracts and patent-pooling arrangements between American concerns and German concerns. I shall call attention to the methods by which, by subterfuge and in one way or another, they are evading or trying to evade the law, and it is being done by some American concerns. The information which comes to me from governmental sources is that the things which are being done are detrimental to the national defense because they tip off to German concerns and also to Japanese concerns everything that is being done in this country by some of the American concerns engaged in work on matters pertaining to the national defense.

The only reason why I submitted the resolution was because I felt that it would be a constructive thing to do in the interest of national defense. If I had not felt that way I would not have submitted the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to reiterate what the Senator from Montana has stated. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which considered this resolution. I heard the testimony given before the committee which resulted in the unanimous report of the resolution.

I do not feel it appropriate to go into it here, but certainly information was revealed to the committee which indicates that there are certain contracts and connections between some concerns in this country with foreign interests which may very vitally affect our national defense. The resolution is limited in its authority to matters which affect the national defense. The committee amended it so as to limit it to that. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not object to the resolution, because I believe it to be of considerable importance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the resolution does appear to be of importance, of so great importance that I think it should not be agreed to on a call of the calendar. If these matters of international import are too delicate to be discussed on the floor of the Senate, then let us know about them secretly and privately.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, nothing that I said indicated that I thought they were too delicate. I think the American people should know about any of these connections. What I meant was that I did not want to go into the matter now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have not indicated by the position I take that I am opposed to the investigation. I am for it as strongly as anyone. I have not met anyone yet who felt a sense of danger for our country more than I feel it. I have never seen anyone yet who was more ready to do everything within his power, suitable to our own safety, to aid Britain to defeat Hitler, than I. So there is no doubt about my earnestness to do all that is necessary for national defense. But I do not desire to agree to this investigation until I know some of the reasons for it. I know of events which have occurred in Congress as the result of what I personally regard to have been a very unfortunate investigation. So I object, until I know more about it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he says certain things should not be brought out, perhaps are too delicate to be brought out, on the floor of the Senate. I do not think they are too delicate to be brought out on the floor of the Senate if they are true. But let me say to the Senator that very responsible manufacturers of this country have come to me recently and given me some information; have said that this was so or that was so. Some of the newspapers have carried stories and articles, and so forth. I do not wish to act upon gossip, and I think some of the contracts which were entered into, about which complaints are made, were contracts entered into in peacetimes, and which were perfectly proper and probably all right. But by reason of the condition in which we happen to find ourselves at the present time, they do very materially affect some of the industries essential to our national defense.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was any record made of the representations about which the Senator now speaks?

Mr. WHEELER. No; because the testimony came before us in executive session. I may say to the Senator that my sole desire in this connection is to see to it that some statement which may not go out to the press about this concern or that concern or some other concern before a committee goes into the matter very carefully, and analyzes it, so that some great injustice may not be done to some manufacturing concern or some industry. Rumors are floating around. We cannot go anywhere without someone coming to us and telling us there is a rumor about this, that, or something else. It is much better, it seems to me, to have some responsible committee of the Senate look into the matter, and either say that the concerns are reprehensible or are not, and if legislation is needed to correct the situation, then such legislation should be presented.

I may say that Great Britain has passed some legislation to correct some of the very evils which are complained about at this time. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and while we have not asked for any money because we expect to cooperate with the departments themselves with reference to this matter, if the resolution shall be adopted, I know of no one, so far as I am concerned, I would sooner have as a member of the committee to investigate than the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator for his kind thought, but let me tell him that the Senator from Vermont is not an investigator, and he is the last man in the world to be put on a committee of this character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired under the rule. Objection is heard, and the resolution goes over.

JUDICIAL REVIEW IN CASES INVOLVING DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3943) providing for judicial review in certain cases involving the disposition of public lands, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law any party aggrieved by any final determination, decision, or order of the Secretary of the Interior relating to the validity or existence of any placer-mining claim for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain initiated prior to the enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), and involving the proprietary rights or other direct and actual interests of the United States adverse to those of the party aggrieved, may, within 30 days after receiving notice of such determination, decision, or order, institute proceedings for the review thereof by filing a written petition in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon the Secretary of the Interior by the petitioner, and thereupon the Secretary shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record and evidence upon which the determination, decision, or order complained of was made. Upon such review the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceedings and of the questions of law and fact determined therein; shall have power to affirm, modify, or reverse, in whole or in part, the determination, decision, or order complained of, as justice may require; may remand the same for further proceedings below; and shall have power to issue such ancillary or executory process as may be just and proper in the circumstances. No objection not urged in the proceedings below shall be considered by the court unless the failure to urge such objection is excused by the court for good cause shown. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings below, the court may order the taking of such additional evidence before the Secretary of the Interior, or some person designated by him, upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The Secretary of the Interior may make new or modified findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and shall certify and file in the court a transcript of such evidence and findings, together with his recommendations, if any, for the affirmance, modification, or reversal of the determination, decision, or order formerly made by him. Whenever it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court in any proceeding under this act that the determination, decision, or order complained of is contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, or against the preponderance of the evidence, the court shall set aside such determination, decision, or order. Subject to any recommendations made by the Secretary of the Interior, as hereinabove provided for, the determination, decision, or order made in the proceedings below shall be affirmed unless found by the court to be contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary, or against the preponderance of the evidence. The judgment of the court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certification or certiorari as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, secs. 346 and 347). If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be printed at length in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report (No. 2171) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3943) providing for judicial review in certain cases involving the disposition of the public lands, having considered the same, recommend that the bill be amended as hereinafter indicated, and that as amended it be passed.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following amendment:

"That notwithstanding any other provision of law, any party aggrieved by any final determination, decision, or order of the Secretary of the Interior relating to the validity or existence of any placer-mining claim for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain initiated prior to the enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), and involving the proprietary rights or other direct and actual interest of the United States adverse to those of the party aggrieved, may, within 30 days after receiving notice of such determination, decision, or order, institute proceedings for the review thereof by filing a written petition in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon the Secretary of the Interior by the petitioner, and thereupon the Secretary shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record and evidence upon which the determination, decision, or order complained of was made. Upon such review, the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceedings and of the questions of law and fact determined therein; shall have power to affirm, modify, or reverse, in whole or in part, the determination, decision, or order complained of, as justice may require; may remand the same for further proceedings below; and shall have power to issue such ancillary or executory process as may be just and proper in the circumstances. No objection not urged in the proceedings below shall be considered by the court unless the failure to urge such objection is excused by the court for good cause shown. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings below, the court may order the taking of such additional evidence before the Secretary of the Interior, or some person designated by him, upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The Secretary of the Interior may make new or modified findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and shall certify and file in the court a transcript of such evidence and findings, together with his recommendations, if any, for the affirmance, modification, or reversal of the determination, decision, or order formerly made by him. Whenever it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court in any proceeding under this act that the determination, decision, or order complained of is contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, or against the preponderance of the evidence, the court shall set aside such determination, decision, or order. Subject to any recommendations made by the Secretary of the Interior, as hereinabove provided for, the determination, decision, or order made in the proceedings below shall be affirmed unless found by the court to be contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary, or against the preponderance of the evidence. The judgment of the court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certification or certiorari as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, secs. 346 and 347). If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

The historic policy of the Government with respect to the disposition of the public domain was to distribute it among the people. Congress by special enactment provided methods by which title could be obtained. The various homestead laws and the laws governing the acquisition of mineral rights all were designed to facilitate the transfer of title from the Government to the citizen.

Early in the present century, however, with the withdrawal of large areas for the creation of the national forests a new policy came into existence, and instead of facilitating the transfer of title Congress began to authorize the retention of title by the Government. The movement in this direction became more positive when, during the administration of President Taft, Executive orders were issued withdrawing oil lands from entry under the placer-mining law. Many years passed before a new policy with respect to such lands was agreed upon, but finally in 1920 the General Leasing Act was enacted. Under this law oil lands upon the public domain may no longer be alienated. They are operated under lease and the Government retains a royalty, a small part of which goes to the Treasury of the United States, while the remainder is divided between the reclamation fund and the States within the boundaries of which the leased deposits lie.

Under the old policy the Land Department acted in a judicial capacity in determining the validity of claims to the public lands and in the event of controversy between two claimants it adjudicated the dispute. In these circumstances when any claimant was dissatisfied and resorted to the courts for review of the administrative procedure the courts confined themselves to questions of law. The long line of precedents which were established uniformly held that the courts would not review the facts, but would confine themselves to a determination as to whether or not the administrative decision was contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary, or without the support of substantial evidence.

These precedents still control although under the new procedure the Government is not now always in the position of the impartial arbitrator. Where, for example, a conflict arises as to whether a particular tract of public domain should be alienated under the placer-mining law or retained by the Government for disposition under the General Leasing Act, the citizen and the Government are in fact conflicting claimants and the land department in such a case occupies the dual capacity of advocate for one of the claimants and judge of the controversy.

The bill under consideration was introduced for the purpose of providing judicial review as to facts as well as to law in cases of this character. The Department of the Interior, to which it was referred for consideration, has submitted a report hereinafter set forth. This report recommends the adoption of the amendment which has been approved by the committee.

Although the Secretary of the Interior in his report has approved the principle of the bill, as will be later pointed out, he recommended a revision for the principal purpose of confining the right of review as to facts to controversies involving the operation of the placer-mining laws and the leasing act. In addition to the foregoing, he recommended a limitation of the review jurisdiction to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, as well as clarification of the provisions dealing with procedure and the power of the court.

The Secretary's report clearly recognizes the desirability of a guaranty that in a controversy between the citizen and his government the right of the citizen to an impartial hearing should be preserved. In his report to the committee the Secretary of the Interior says:

"The peculiar dual capacity in which the Department is required to act when adjudicating placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, and gas initiated prior to the Mineral Leasing Act may, with reason, be deemed to warrant the establishment of a special statutory procedure for the judicial review of these adjudications in a more direct and ample manner than is possible within the framework of the existing system."

Again the Secretary says:

"The fact that the United States has a substantial pecuniary interest in the outcome of the controversy adverse to the alleged rights of the claimant makes it desirable that the fullest possible opportunity be accorded the claimant to maintain the validity of his claim and to contest the correctness of the findings of the Department, in order that no ground may be left for the assertion of a charge of prejudice or bias in connection with the adjudication."

The full report of the Secretary is hereto attached.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington.

Hon. ALVA B. ADAMS,
Chairman, Committee on Public Lands and Surveys,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ADAMS: Your letter of May 14 requests a report on the bill, S. 3943, "providing for judicial review in certain cases involving the disposition of the public lands."

This proposed legislation authorizes direct appellate court review of decisions of the Secretary of the Interior relating to the disposition of the public domain in situations where the United States has an actual interest in the outcome of the controversy adverse to the alleged rights of the claimant. Under its terms review would be in the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the claimant resides, the testimony taken and record made in the administrative proceedings would be certified to the court by the Secretary, and the court would be empowered to redecide all issues of law and fact pertinent to the controversy and to render judgment accordingly.

At the present time no express statutory authority exists for judicial review of adjudications of the Secretary of the Interior relating to the disposition of the public domain. For many years, however, the courts have, in fact, exercised jurisdiction to review these determinations in instances where legally recognized property rights are alleged to have been invaded thereby. This jurisdiction has been exercised through the medium of, and subject to the limitations inherent in, the several common-law and equitable procedures available for the protection of property rights against illegal action by Government officials, and, in the absence of statutory authority for the initiation of review proceedings in the appellate courts, has necessarily involved the bringing of suit in a court of first instance. In the course of deciding the many and varied actions which have been instituted, the courts have developed a large body of precedent concerning the extent to which administrative determinations upon public-land matters may properly be revised by them. Subject to the requirements that a justiciable controversy based upon an alleged violation of a legally protected interest of the claimant must be presented, that the relief sought must conform to the limitations inherent in the form of action through which review is prosecuted, and that jurisdiction will not be entertained while the subject matter of the controversy remains within the legal control of the Department of the Interior as the agency established by law to administer the disposition of the public demain, the courts have consistently held that the administrative decisions should and would be set aside if found to be contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary, or unsupported by substantial evidence, but not otherwise. The principles so established do not differ widely from those applied by the courts to others fields of administrative action.

The existing system of judicial review in public-land matters affords, on the whole, a high degree of protection to private rights, which is testified to by the relatively small degree of criticism to which it has been subjected. The basic principles employed in determining the finality or nonfinality of particular adjudications have been formulated by the courts in the light of long years of practical experience, during which the disposition of the public domain has bulked far larger in the national life than at present, and have been the subject of more extended judicial consideration than perhaps any other aspect of Federal administrative law. These considerations strongly suggest that modifications of the present system of judicial review in public-land matters should be predicated upon a critical comparative study of their operation and effect, and should be restricted to those changes the merits of which have been clearly demonstrated.

So far as possible within the limits of the time available a careful study has been made of the provisions of S. 3943, with a view to determining the extent to which they embody desirable improvements in the law. This study indicates that the bill contains certain distinctly meritorious features. By authorizing the commencement of review proceedings in the appellate courts instead of in the courts of first instance, it would tend to shorten the reviewing process. By creating a statutory procedure for effecting review, it would make possible the elimination of purely technical qualifications derived from the procedural exigencies of common law and equitable forms of action. On the other hand, the study made has revealed that serious objections exist to the enactment of the bill in its present form. For the purpose of removing the latter, a suggested redraft of the entire measure has been prepared and is attached. This redraft contains the revisions which, in my opinion, should be made if S. 3943 is to receive favorable consideration.

The first major revision recommended is the limitation of the applicability of the bill so as to bring within its purview only those adjudications which relate to the validity or existence of placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, and gas initiated prior to the enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920. That act represented a radical change in the policy of the United States with respect to the disposition of public lands containing deposits of the foregoing minerals. Prior to its enactment any citizen who complied with the placer-mining laws, the chief requirements of which were that a claim be physically located on the land, that its boundaries be distinctly marked, that a valuable deposit of minerals be discovered on the claim, that the location be recorded in the appropriate local recording office if required by State law or mining regulations, and that the sum of $100 be expended annually on the development or improvement of the claim, was granted by law the exclusive right to exploit the unreserved and unappropriated mineral deposits within all claims initiated and maintained by him in accordance with the requirements of these laws, free of any rental, royalty, or other payment to the United States. Upon the enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act the right to exploit deposits of the minerals in question was restricted to those persons who were granted permits or leases for this purpose by the Secretary of the Interior upon the basis of competitive bidding or other appropriate selective procedures, and was made subject to the payment of substantial rentals, royalties, and bonuses to the United States. In the case of oil and gas leases, for example, a minimum royalty of 12½ percent of the production, and a minimum annual rental of 25 cents per acre for lands not in production, is required by the law, plus such additional royalties, bonuses, or other charges as may be prescribed by the Secretary when opening the land to lease, or as may be offered and accepted in the course of the competitive bidding which is made a statutory prerequisite to the granting of all oil and gas leases, except those founded on preference applications for lands not within the known geologic structure of a producing field.

Under section 37 of the Mineral Leasing Act placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, and gas are valid only if initiated prior to the enactment of that act and thereafter maintained in strict conformity with the placer-mining laws. Furthermore, if a placer-mining claim for such deposits is found to be invalid because of a failure to comply with these laws in the initiation or maintenance of the claim, the land will become subject to disposition only through the permit and leasing system provided for in the Mineral Leasing Act.

Because of the substantial revenues which may accrue to the United States if an outstanding placer-mining claim is determined to be invalid and the land within its boundaries thereby made subject to leasing on a royalty basis, the United States necessarily has a direct pecuniary interest in the outcome of every adjudication upon the validity of a placer-mining claim for deposits of the minerals covered by the Mineral Leasing Act adverse to the interest of the claimant. The Department of the Interior is charged by law with the duty of protecting this pecuniary interest of the United States at the same time that it also is charged with the duty of adjudicating the rights of the claimant under the placer-mining laws. The position which the Department occupies with respect to these claims is quite different from that which it occupies with respect to claims involving unreserved and unappropriated public lands open to free disposition for mining, homesteading, or other purposes, such as is the case, for example, with respect to placer-mining claims for deposits of the minerals not covered by the Mineral Leasing Act on lands subject to appropriation for mining purposes. In situations of this latter type the effect of a decision against the validity of the claim will merely be to open the land to location or entry by another claimant. The peculiar dual capacity in which the Department is required to act when adjudicating placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, and gas initiated prior to the Mineral Leasing Act may, with reason, be deemed to warrant the establishment of a special statutory procedure for the judicial review of these adjudications in a more direct and ample manner than is possible within the framework of the existing system. Application of the proposed statutory review procedure to other types of public-land adjudications, where the peculiar conditions resulting from the change in public policy effected by the Mineral Leasing Act do not exist, would, on the other hand, appear to be entirely unjustified, in view of the marked dissimilarity of circumstances and the general appropriateness of the present system of review.

The second major revision recommended is the substitution of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia as the reviewing tribunal, in lieu of the 10 circuit courts of appeals. By concentrating public-land litigation in one court, already expert in the minutiae of the public-land laws and Federal administrative procedures, the prompt and correct disposition of contested matters would be facilitated and the building up of uniform and well-considered rules of decision promoted. Substantial savings in legal expense to the Government would also accrue, since public-land suits can be more effectively and cheaply handled in Washington, where the presentation of the case may be made by the attorneys attached to the Department, than in the field, where the presentation must be by the United States attorney or by counsel specially retained or detailed for the purpose. It does not appear that claimants would be put to any material disadvantage by a requirement that the proposed review proceedings be brought in the District of Columbia. The facts of the matter are that the legal services which claimants might be obliged to procure would in any event be limited, for the most part, to the preparation and filing of briefs, together with oral argument in some instances, and that the present organization of the Federal judicial circuits makes it necessary for most litigants in the circuit courts of appeals to arrange for legal representation of this character at points remote from their places of residence. In addition, it may not be amiss to point out that the long-established administrative procedure employed in handling public-land cases within the Department, under which the major portion of the proceedings are had in Washington before the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary, has evoked no significant criticism.

The third major revision recommended is the clarification and amplification of certain features of the proposed review proceedings which have to do with purely procedural matters. In its present form the bill does not definitely exclude mere interlocutory or preliminary orders from being made the subject of petitions for review. To prevent the taking of appeals from rulings of this character prior to final administrative action on the merits of the case, the first sentence of the suggested redraft restricts the applicability of the bill to "final" decisions, determinations, or orders.

The present terms of the bill also fail to provide that objections not urged in the proceedings below shall not be considered by the reviewing court except for good cause shown; or that new evidence shall not be adduced in connection with the review proceedings unless the failure to introduce such evidence in the proceedings below is excused by the court for good cause shown; or that when new evidence is permitted to be adduced the case shall be remanded to the Department in order to allow it an opportunity to revise its former findings in the light of the additional testimony. All of these matters have been repeatedly recognized by the Congress and the courts as among the essentials of good procedure when judicial review of administrative proceedings is authorized. Unless claimants are required to present their entire case to the Department as a prerequisite to obtaining court review, the Department will not be in a position to render a decision based upon a complete knowledge of all the pertinent facts, the reviewing court will be obliged to pass upon evidence and arguments without the assistance of an initial sifting and determination by the Department, and the integrity of the administrative process will be threatened by the reversal of decisions that would not have been rendered in the first instance had all the facts been made known to the Department. The early history of the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to the time when requirements of the character of those just referred to were imposed upon litigants, as related in Sharfman, The Interstate Commerce Commission, volume I, pages 22–25, volume II, pages 385–387, amply illustrates the truth of these statements. The corollary requirement that new testimony, when determined to be admissible by the court, is to be taken before the administrative agency, in order that the latter may have an opportunity to pass upon the supplemental evidence and, if warranted thereby, to revise its original findings, is explicitly provided for in the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, and other statutes authorizing court review of administrative determinations. The provisions which have been inserted in the latter part of the suggested redraft in order to cover the foregoing matters are copied in large measure from existing legislation.

The fourth major revision recommended is the sharper definition of the scope of the functions of the reviewing court through the inclusion of provisions making it mandatory that the decision rendered in the course of the proceedings before the Department be set aside if found by the court to be contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary, or against the preponderance of the evidence, and, conversely, making it mandatory that the decision be affirmed by the court unless found to be contrary to law, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary, or against the preponderance of the evidence. While the basic principles of these rules are already implicit in the context of the bill, they are not now expressed in a way which eliminates all possibility of conflicting interpretations.

Both the affirmative and the negative aspects of the provisions suggested in the preceding paragraph are in accord with the great weight of legislative and judicial precedent upon the proper scope of court review over public land and other administrative adjudications except in one important particular, namely, that under these provisions the court is granted a wider range of authority to review decisions on matters of fact than is normally the case. Apart from certain situations involving jurisdictional limitations, judicial review of fact determinations made by administrative agencies is almost universally limited to the question whether the conclusions of the agency are supported by substantial evidence. The rule that administrative findings on issues of fact are not to be set aside when brought before a court for review unless found to have no substantial basis in the testimony adduced has been repeatedly held to be applicable to decisions of the Secretary of the Interior relating to the disposition of the public domain. Thus, the Supreme Court has stated that "the determination of the Land Department in a case within its jurisdiction of questions of fact depending upon conflicting testimony is conclusive," Gardner v. Bonestell (180 U. S. 362, 369), and that the determination of the Department upon a contested issue of fact "would, ordinarily, be conclusive on the courts, even if there were demonstrable error in the admission, or appreciation of evidence," West v. Standard Oil Co. (278 U. S. 200, 213). The substantial evidence rule has also been recognized and applied in numerous decisions of the Supreme Court dealing with the effect of administrative adjudications in other fields, e. g., Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (222 U. S. 541), Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States (280 U. S. 420), and has been incorporated in most of the Federal statutes which provide specifically for judicial review of administrative determinations, e. g. the Federal Trade Commission Act, section 5 (38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. 45), the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, section 6 (50 Stat. 85, 15 U. S. C. 836).

On the other hand, certain of the circumstances which surround the adjudication of placer-mining claims for mineral deposits subject to the Mineral Leasing Act lend considerable support to the view that the making of an exception from the general rule, under which the reviewing court would be empowered to ascertain whether the administrative decision is or is not supported by the preponderance of the evidence and to render judgment accordingly, might be appropriate with respect to this particular class of claims. In the first place, many of the factual issues presented in the adjudication of placer-mining claims, such as, for example, the question of whether a claim has been abandoned through failure to prosecute mining operations or exploratory work thereon, do not turn upon matters which can be verified from the records of the Department, or which require the making of technical or scientific investigations for their correct solution, or which for some other reason are susceptible of more accurate determination by a specialized administrative agency than by a court of general jurisdiction. In the second place, the fact that the United States has a substantial pecuniary interest in the outcome of the controversy adverse to the alleged rights of the claimant makes it desirable that the fullest possible opportunity be accorded the claimant to maintain the validity of his claim and to contest the correctness of the findings of the Department, in order that no ground may be left for the assertion of a charge of prejudice or bias in connection with the adjudication. Taken as a whole the circumstances appear to afford a substantial basis for considering that, insofar as placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale and gas initiated prior to the enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act are concerned, the scope of judicial review might, with propriety, be extended to the question of whether the administrative decision is supported by the preponderance of the evidence. The alteration in public policy brought about under the Mineral Leasing Act puts these claims in a class by themselves.

Upon the basis of the somewhat curtailed study which time has permitted, I see no objection to the enactment of S. 3943, provided the revisions covered by this letter and the accompanying redraft are incorporated therein.

I have been advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that no objection exists to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

REGISTRATION OF ORGANIZATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "control", to insert "by force", so as to make the section read:

That for the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "Attorney General" means the Attorney General of the United States;

(b) The term "organization" means any group, club, league, society, committee, association, political party, or combination of individuals, whether incorporated or otherwise, but such term shall not include any church, corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation which the Attorney General determines is organized for, and engaged in good faith exclusively in, activities in furtherance of religious, charitable, scientific, scholastic, or academic pursuits, or in furtherance of the fine arts;

(c) The term "political activity" means any activity the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which, is the establishment, control by force, conduct, seizure, or overthrow of a government or political subdivision thereof;

(d) An organization shall be deemed to be engaged in "civilian military activity" if (1) it gives instruction to, or prescribes instruction for, its members in the use of firearms or other weapons or any substitute therefor, or military or naval science, or (2) it receives from any other organization or from any individual instruction in military or naval science, or (3) it engages in any military or naval maneuvers or activities, or (4) it engages, either with or without arms, in drills or parades of a military or naval character, or (5) it engages in any other form of organized activity which in the opinion of the Attorney General constitutes preparation for military action; and

(e) An organization shall be deemed "subject to foreign control" if (1) it solicits or accepts financial contributions, loans, or support of any kind, directly or indirectly from, or is affiliated directly or indirectly with, a foreign government or a political subdivision thereof, or an agent, agency, or instrumentality of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, or a political party in a foreign country, or an international political organization, or (2) its policies, or any of them, are determined by or at the suggestion of, or in collaboration with, a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, or an agent, agency, or instrumentality of a foreign government or a political subdivision thereof, or a political party in a foreign country, or an international political organization.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 2, after the word "State", to insert a comma and "or (5) any nationally recognized organization of persons who are veterans of the armed forces of the United States, or affiliates of such organizations"; in line 10, after the words "of all", to insert "known"; in line 14, after the word "each", to insert "known"; in line 22, after the word "each", to insert "known"; in line 23, after the word "organization" and the comma, to insert "and"; in line 24, after the word "meetings", to strike out the comma and insert "and a copy of the minutes or journal of every such meeting"; on page 6, line 3, after the word "any", to insert "known"; in line 6, after the word "each", to insert "known"; in line 9, after the word "each", to insert "known"; in line 12, after the word "each", to insert "known'; in line 21, after the word "any", to insert "known"; in line 24, after the word "knowledge", to insert a comma and "together with the name of its author or authors and the name and address of the publisher"; on page 7, line 2, after the word "any", to insert "known"; in line 11, after the word "organization", to strike out "and of each branch, chapter, and affiliate of the organization"; and in line 13, after the word "each", to insert "known", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. (a) The following organizations shall be required to register with the Attorney General as hereinafter provided:

(1) Every organization subject to foreign control which engages in political activity;

(2) Every organization which engages both in civilian military activity and in political activity;

(3) Every organization subject to foreign control which engages in civilian miltary activity; and

(4) Every organization the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which, is the establishment, control, conduct, seizure, or overthrow of a government or subdivision thereof by the use of force, violence, military measures, or threats of any one or more of the foregoing.

Every such organization shall register by filing with the Attorney General, on such forms and in such detail as the Attorney General may by rules and regulations prescribe, a registration statement ccntaining the information and documents prescribed in subsection (c) and shall within 30 days after the expiration of each period of 6 months succeeding the filing of such registration statement, file with the Attorney General, on such forms and in such detail as the Attorney General may by rules and regulations prescribe, a supplemental statement containing such information and documents as may be necessary to make the information and documents previously filed under this section accurate and current with respect to such preceding 6 months' period. Every statement required to be filed by this section shall be subscribed, under oath, by all of the officers of the organization.

(b) Nothing in subsection (a) shall be deemed to require registration or the filing of any statement with the Attorney General by (1) the armed forces of the United States, or (2) the organized militia or National Guard of any States, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or (3) any law-enforcement agency of the United States or of any Territory, District, or possession thereof, or of any State or political subdivision of a State, or of any agency or instrumentality of one or more States, or (4) any duly established diplomatic mission or consular office of a foreign government which is so recognized by the Department of State, or (5) any nationally recognized organization of persons who are veterans of the armed forces of the United States, or affiliates of such organizations.

(c) Every registration statement required by subsection (a) to be filed by any organization shall contain the following information and documents:

(1) The name and post-office address of the organization in the United States, and the names and addresses of all known branches, chapters, and affiliates of such organization;

(2) The name, address, and nationality of each officer, and of each person who performs the functions of an officer, of the organization, and of each known branch, chapter, and affiliate of the organization;

(3) The qualifications for membership in the organization;

(4) The existing and proposed aims and purposes of the organization, and all the means by which these aims or purposes are being attained or are to be attained;

(5) The address or addresses of meeting places of the organization, and of each known branch, chapter, or affiliate of the organization, and the times of such meetings;

(6) The name and address of each person who has contributed any money, dues, property, or other thing of value to the organization or to any known branch, chapter, or affiliate of the organization;

(7) A detailed statement of the assets of the organization, and of each known branch, chapter, and affiliate of the organization, the manner in which such assets were acquired, and a detailed statement of the liabilities and income of the organization and of each known branch, chapter, and affiliate of the organization;

(8) A detailed description of the activities of the organization, and of each known chapter, branch, and affiliate of the organization;

(9) A description of the uniforms, badges, insignia, or other means of identification prescribed by the organization, and worn or carried by its officers or members, or any of such officers or members;

(10) A copy of each book, pamphlet, leaflet, or other publication or item of written, printed, or graphic matter issued or distributed directly or indirectly by the organization, or by any known chapter, branch, or affiliate of the organization, or by any of the members of the organization under its authority or within its knowledge, together with the name of its author or authors and the name and address of the publisher;

(11) A description of all firearms or other weapons owned by the organization, or by any known chapter, branch, or affiliate of the organization, identified by the manufacturer's number thereon;

(12) In case the organization is subject to foreign control, the manner in which it is so subject;

(13) A copy of the charter, articles of association, constitution, bylaws, rules, regulations, agreements, resolutions, and all other instruments relating to the organization, powers, and purposes of the organization and to the powers of the officers of the organization and of each known chapter, branch, and affiliate of the organization; and

(14) Such other information and documents pertinent to the purposes of this Act as the Attorney General may from time to time require.

All statements filed under this section shall be public records and open to public examination and inspection at all reasonable hours under such rules and regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "establishment", "conduct", and "seizure"; and in line 7 to strike out before the word "Government" the article "a" and to insert the article "the", and after the word "Government", to insert the words "of the United States"; and after the word "or", to insert the article "a", and at the end of line 8 strike out the semicolon and to insert in lieu thereof a comma and the words, "or any State or political subdivision thereof", so that the paragraph will read:

The term "political activity" means any activity the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which, is the control by force or overthrow of the Government of the United States or a political subdivision thereof, or any State or political subdivision thereof.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I was one of the subcommittee which gave active consideration to the bill, and when we as members of the subcommittee framed the bill in its final form, through a clerical inadvertence the particular amendment which has now been submitted was not included in the proposed legislation. I am certain there is no objection to the amendment, and the chairman of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], I am certain can verify that.

After all, the point was that we were defining political activity, and since that is one of the keystones of the bill, it is necessary that it be particularized. That, in brief, is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I suggest a further amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "any church, corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation which the Attorney General determines is organized for, and engaged in good faith exclusively in, activities in furtherance of religious, charitable, scientific, scholastic, or academic pursuits or in furtherance of the fine arts" and to insert "any corporation, association, community chest, fund, or foundation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes;".

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President the language which has been substituted for the language of the draft is language which already has been enacted in our Federal legislation several times. For instance it appears in the social security legislation, and in the internal revenue law wherein the type of organization herein treated is expressly defined.

If we were to continue the language which appears on page 1, lines 9 and 10, as the bill now stands, it would leave the Attorney General determining whether any Government organization is or is not within the purview of the act, and obvicusly even without appeal, and consequently, in order that all organizations may be defined by law, I have submitted the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in connection with this measure I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, following the brief remarks I am now making, a number of clippings from newspapers showing the activities of the Nazi organization in a number of South American republics and particularly in Uruguay.

Quite recently organizations were effected by the Nazis, through German agents who are living in Uruguay, calculated to bring about a revolution to overthrow the Government of Uruguay and to establish a Nazi organization. There are many authentic evidences, which have come to us from various sources, of activities, persistent, oftentimes open, more frequently secret, by Nazi agents in Latin American states for the purpose of destroying the governments there existing and paving the way for the establishment of Nazi regimes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clippings presented by the Senator from Utah will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like the RECORD to show that I am very heartily in favor of the bill which was just now passed. I think it is one of the best bills Congress has acted upon recently.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN NAVAJO INDIANS

The bill (S. 4212) for the relief of certain Navajo Indians, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $15,000, which amount shall be deposited as individual Indian money to the credit of the estates of the following-named deceased Navajo Indians, and in the respective amounts stated for distribution to the heirs of such deceased Indians as determined by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with existing law: Wilson Platero, $2,500; Meguelius Sacatero, $2,500; Tom Wood, $2,500; John Apachite, $2,500; Roy Chavez, $2,500; and John Chavez, $2,500.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized and directed to pay to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $2,000, which amount shall be deposited as individual Indian money to the credit of Dempsey Sacatero and Jose Mexicano, or their heirs, in the sum of $1,000 each.

SEC. 3. The amounts herein appropriated shall be in full compensation for claims for deaths or injuries sustained in an accident occurring near Gallup, N. Mex., on December 6, 1936: Provided, That the amounts herein appropriated shall be expended in accordance with the regulations governing the handling of individual Indian money: Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with these claims, and any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

AMENDMENT OF ACT INCLUDING POSTMASTERS IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The bill (S. 4373) to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes" was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill, which was sent here by the Post Office Department, was introduced by me. The purpose of it is simply this: In the case of postmasters who are eligible for service in the Army, or in the draft, it will be necessary for the Department to appoint others in their places, and the bill merely provides for that and that the postmasters, upon their return from whatever military service may be imposed upon them, shall be restored to their old places. I think it is a bill which should immediately appeal to everyone.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does that mean that the persons who have been appointed to fill the vacancies occasioned by the draftees or volunteers going into the military service, shall, when the draftees or volunteers return, be ousted from the positions which they occupy, or are they to be continued in those positions?

Mr. McKELLAR. They will be under civil service, but they will not be continued in the office of postmastership to which they are appointed. The man who is taken from the post-office service and put into the armed forces of the country is restored to his place upon the ending of the military situation.

Mr. KING. Suppose there is no place for the person appointed in his stead?

Mr. McKELLAR. The one who takes the place of the postmaster, and succeeds him by temporary appointment, must give up the place, of course, on the return of the postmaster from his service in the Army.

Mr. KING. Does this mean that the Government is bound to find a place for the temporary appointee?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not provide for that at all. It provides that if a postmaster is of military age and goes into the Army and serves his country, when he returns he shall be restored to his position, and it provides that the Postmaster General may make an appointment to the position during the time the regular postmaster is in the service.

Mr. KING. I may say that I am entirely in accord with that view, but the point I am inquiring about is if the Federal Government is in duty bound, after the postmaster has performed his military service and returns from it, to find a position for the person who temporarily filled the postmaster's position.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill does not so provide.

Mr. KING. I think there ought to be a provision in the bill to the effect that there is no obligation on the part of the Government to find a position for the temporary appointee.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not necessary to have such a provision in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand, the temporary employee is selected from civil-service employees already in the service. Is that correct? Is the Department restricted to appointing those already in the civil service in the Post Office Department, or may the Department go outside and appoint temporarily, say, the wife of the postmaster, or his son, or daughter, or brother-in-law?

Mr. McKELLAR. The provision of the bill is:

Provided further, That at any post office the postmaster of which has been called for duty as a member of the National Guard or of the Reserve of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps or pursuant to draft or voluntary enlistment, the Postmaster General is authorized to grant leave of absence without pay to such postmaster and to appoint an acting postmaster at such post office to serve for the period only of the absence of the regular postmaster on military service, requiring such acting postmaster to furnish suitable bond with surety for the faithful performance of the duties as acting postmaster and releasing the regular postmaster and his sureties of responsibility for the conduct of the office during such period: Provided further, That where a postmaster resigns for the purpose of military service as herein described and subsequently wishes to resume his previous position as postmaster he may be permitted, upon being released from military service, to withdraw his resignation and resume the office of postmaster, or be reappointed thereto, in the event the office is being conducted at the time by an acting postmaster: Provided further, That appointments of acting postmasters to serve during absences of regular postmasters on leave granted pursuant to the terms of this act shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and such appointments may continue until the return to duty of the regular postmaster or until it has been determined that the regular postmaster will not return to duty.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator that I regret it is restricted to the civil service, because if a person in the civil service takes the place of a postmaster, and then the postmaster returns from military service, the one who substituted for the postmaster must be put back in service, and down the line somewhere someone is going to lose his job.

Mr. McKELLAR. That, of course, would happen, but the Senator knows that we have assistant postmasters at nearly all the first- and second-class post offices, and the assistant would simply be appointed in the place of the postmaster. The bill simply authorizes the Postmaster General to make such appointments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4373) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act approved June 25, 1938 (ch. 678, 52 Stat. 1077; U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 39a) is amended by the addition of the following: "Provided further, That at any post office the postmaster of which has been called for duty as a member of the National Guard or of the Reserve of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or pursuant to draft or voluntary enlistment, the Postmaster General is authorized to grant leave of absence without pay to such postmaster and to appoint an acting postmaster at such post office to serve for the period only of the absence of the regular postmaster on military service, requiring such acting postmaster to furnish suitable bond with surety for the faithful performance of the duties as acting postmaster, and releasing the regular postmaster and his sureties of responsibility for the conduct of the office during such period: Provided further, That where a postmaster resigns for the purpose of military service as herein described and subsequently wishes to resume his previous position as postmaster he may be permitted, upon being released from military service, to withdraw his resignation and resume the office of postmaster, or be reappointed thereto, in the event the office is being conducted at the time by an acting postmaster: Provided further, That appointments of acting postmasters to serve during absences of regular postmasters on leave granted pursuant to the terms of this act shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and such appointments may continue until the return to duty of the regular postmaster or until it has been determined that the regular postmaster will not return to duty."

ESTHER JACOBS

The bill (H. R. 6888) for the relief of Esther Jacobs, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRAME FOR PAINTING OF THE SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 301) to authorize the acquisition of a suitable frame for the painting of the signing of the Constitution to be used in mounting said painting in the Capitol Building, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed or to purchase, at a price not exceeding $1,500, a suitable frame for the painting of the scene at the signing of the Constitution by Howard Chandler Christy now on view in the Capitol Building. Such frame shall be subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, and, when so approved, shall be used for mounting the said painting in the Capitol Building as required by Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved April 20, 1939.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky, as a matter of interest, tell us where it is intended to place that picture?

Mr. BARKLEY. The joint committee has not yet decided. There are only two places in the Capitol large enough for it, and it involves the relocation of one of them, so the committee has not yet decided where it will place the picture.

EASEMENT IN CERTAIN LANDS IN MEMPHIS, TENN.

The bill (H. R. 9989) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant an easement in certain land to the city of Memphis, Tenn., for street-widening purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAMBORN & CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5937) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Lamborn & Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 2, line 5, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. Any record, report, testimony, or document made, given, or filed in connection with any proceeding or hearing of any committee or subcommittee of Congress relative to the claim of Lamborn & Co., or relative to the claims of others arising from similar purchases and importations of sugar during 1920, may be introduced before the Court of Claims with the full force of depositions, subject to objections as to materiality and relevancy.

And to insert a new section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. In the proceedings upon such claim before the Court of Claims, the United States shall not avail itself of the defense that the Department of Justice of the United States acted without legal authority in making representations or requests or issuing directions or fixing restrictions with regard to the purchase, importation, or disposition of such sugar.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AVIATION CADET IN THE AIR CORPS, REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 4365) to create the grade of aviation cadet in the Air Corps, Regular Army, and to prescribe the pay and allowances therefor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. KING. Yes; and a statement as to its cost.

Mr. GURNEY. The purpose of Senate bill 4365 is to make the same provision for aviation cadets in the Army as is provided for aviation cadets of the Navy in House bill 10030, which was passed on August 27 of this year.

The provisions of Senate bill 4365, as nearly as possible, now compare with the attractive inducements offered aviation cadets in the Navy bill which I have just mentioned.

The bill, among other things, provides that during an aviation cadet's training, which is a period of 9 months, the cadet shall be covered by free Government insurance in the amount of $10,000. At the end of the training period, if the training period is satisfactorily completed and the cadet passes, he will be given a commission as second lieutenant in the Reserve Corps of the Army, and will be given extended active duty with the Air Corps. At the time he is given the commission, he will be allowed $150 to cover the cost of uniform and equipment.

I have said that he would have a $10,000 Government insurance policy free while he was a cadet. If he wants to continue that insurance after he becomes a Reserve officer, he will have to pay for it himself, the same as any other Reserve officer.

The Navy bill authorized the Navy aviation cadets to continue in the service, and they were to be enrolled on the regular promotion list of the Navy. The Army aviation cadets do not have that privilege for the reason that there will be so many of them, and they cannot be included in the regular promotion lists of the Army. In lieu of that, therefore, the bill gives them a bonus of $500 at the completion of each year of extended active duty with the Air Corps.

I believe that covers the main provisions of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Why is it important to give them commissions at the outset? Why not give them lesser rank? Why start with a high title and high standing when the cost is so great?

Mr. GURNEY. They start with the lowest commissioned grade in the Army, that of second lieutenant.

Mr. KING. A sergeant does not have a commission, does he?

Mr. GURNEY. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Why not start them as sergeants, or in some rank less than that of a cadet with a large salary?

Mr. GURNEY. I am sure that the responsibility of flying an airplane, the risks taken, and the intense training required justify the rank. The rank of sergeant is not commensurate with the duties. The rank of second lieutenant is low enough. They will hold that commission for 3 years, if the Army wants to keep them in the Air Corps that long. At the end of 3 years, if they are still on extended active duty, they will be advanced to the grade of first lieutenant, but will have the right to hold that commission for only 4 years, because Reserve officers are allowed only 7 years on extended active duty.

Mr. KING. I know, of course, that the duties are very important. If I may be pardoned a personal allusion, in the World War my only son, who at that time was 21 or 22 years of age, was a flyer. He started at the bottom of the ladder, so to speak, and became an instructor at the flying field in Texas. He went overseas and flew with the French Escadrille, but he did not need a high title when he started in the flying game. It was a game, and a very dangerous game at that time, particularly when we had the so-called "flying coffins" at the fields in Texas, instead of having the fine airplanes we have at the present time.

Mr. GURNEY. I am sure the Senator will agree with me that the grade of second lieutenant is a low enough rank to be given a cadet who has the responsibility of taking care of airplanes whose value ranges from $150,000 up to $1,000,000. Inasmuch as they do not have the opportunity to stay in the Army and make a lifetime career of the Army, I am sure that the rank of second lieutenant is no more than we ought to grant.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to make the observation that this bill is distinctly a departure from the past. We do not want a repetition of the old days, which have been so eloquently referred to by the Senator from Utah. It is because we are formulating a system of education, to get away from boys flying in "flying coffins," as it were, that we have devised this plan for education, to give the men who take the special training a rank which will enable them to have prestige in their office of teaching when they are called upon to teach men who have not had special schooling and training.

These men are not going into the Army permanently. They will not draw pay continuously. They will obtain an education and be in the reservoir of Reserve officers who, under the general law, may be ordered out for active duty from time to time when necessary. It was our theory, not that we wanted to treat the men as well as does the Navy, but that the Navy had adopted a wise course in setting up the school of flying cadets and holding out a goal at which the men could aim in order that they might strive for such proficiency as would make them good teachers of other flyers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator referred to the fact that the cadets would be students. Would they start as cadets?

Mr. GURNEY. They would start as cadets.

Mr. AUSTIN. They would become cadets immediately upon joining the school, just as a boy who goes to Annapolis or to West Point becomes a cadet.

Mr. KING. When would the boy emerge from the school to the position of an officer?

Mr. AUSTIN. After he had fulfilled the standards prescribed by the school.

Mr. GURNEY. The schooling period would be about 9 months. In time of peace, when we are not in a rush, the regular schooling period has been 1 year at Randolph Field, Tex. The period has been shortened to 9 months, under a more intensive training program.

Mr. KING. At the end of the year, what title would the boy have?

Mr. GURNEY. The same title. He would be commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. KING. Would he have the same rank and the same title on his first day as a cadet as he would have at the end of the year?

Mr. GURNEY. No. He would start as an aviation cadet, and during his schooling period he would receive $75 a month. After completing the training period he would be given a commission as second lieutenant in the Reserve Corps, at which time his salary would be $125 a month, with 50 percent additional for flying pay, to compensate for the extra hazard in flying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4365) to create the grade of aviation cadet in the Air Corps, Regular Army, and to prescribe the pay and allowances therefor, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 3. Aviation cadets shall be appointed to that enlisted grade by the Secretary of War from among enlisted men of the Army or from male citizens of the United States, effective upon their enlistment in the Army in that status, under such regulations as he may prescribe and, if qualified after completion of training, they shall, notwithstanding any provision of law which restricts the appointment of an officer in the Officers' Reserve Corps to a person who shall have attained the age of 21 years, be commissioned second lieutenants in the Air Corps Reserve: Provided, That each aviation cadet shall sign an agreement with the consent of his parent or guardian, if he be a minor, to accept a commission as second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, after successfully completing the prescribed course of instruction as an aviation cadet and to serve for a continuous period of 3 years on active duty as such, unless sooner relieved: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may discharge at any time any aviation cadet or relieve any Reserve officer at any time from active duty.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 3. Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, male citizens of the United States may enlist as aviation cadets, and enlisted men in the Regular Army may be appointed by the Secretary of War as aviation cadets. Each aviation cadet shall, at the time of his enlistment or appointment as such, be required to sign an agreement that upon his successful completion of the prescribed course of training and instruction as an aviation cadet he will accept a commission as second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, and will serve as such for a continuous period of 3 years on active duty, unless sooner released: Provided, That in the case of a minor, such agreement shall be signed with the consent of his parents or guardian. Upon the successful completion of such prescribed course of training and instruction, each aviation cadet shall be commissioned as a second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, and upon the completion of such period of 3 years on active duty each such second lieutenant shall be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve. The Secretary of War may at any time discharge any aviation cadet or release from active duty any such officer in the Air Corps Reserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 4, after line 18, to strike out:

SEC. 6. Any Air Corps Reserve officer, except an officer who has been selected for commission in the Regular Army, shall, when relieved from active duty that has been continuous for 1 or more years, be paid a lump sum of $500 for each completed year of active service as a Reserve officer. Except when a Reserve officer is relieved from active duty upon his own request or as a result of inefficiency or unsatisfactory service as determined by the Secretary of War, this lump sum payment shall be prorated for fractional parts of each year of such service. The lump-sum payments authorized herein are in substitution for the payment authorized in section 11 of the act approved April 3, 1939, and shall be in addition to any pay, allowances, compensation, or benefits which an officer may otherwise be entitled to receive.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 6. Section 2 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1524), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Whenever any Air Corps Reserve officer who has not been selected for commission in the Regular Army is released from active duty that has been continuous for 1 or more years, he shall be paid a lump sum of $500 for each complete year of active service as such officer, and if released from active duty otherwise than upon his own request, or as a result of inefficient or unsatisfactory service as determined by the Secretary of War, such lump-sum payment shall be prorated for fractional parts of each year of such active service. The lump-sum payments herein authorized shall be in addition to any pay, allowances, compensation, or benefits which such officers may otherwise be entitled to receive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 5, in line 22, after the committee amendment last agreed to, to strike out:

SEC. 7. All acts and parts of acts, including the acts approved July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 104), and April 3, 1939 (53 Stat. 555), which may be inconsistent or in conflict with this act, or any part thereof, are hereby repealed to the extent of the inconsistency or conflict.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 7. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] whether or not the committee, in considering the bill, gave any thought to the problem which has been presented upon numerous occasions to the Committee on Appropriations? I refer to the problem of what may properly and effectively be done to take advantage of the desire of a large number of Negroes in this country to qualify as fliers. Recently I have been advised by the officials in the Civil Aeronautics Authority that some very successful training has been carried out for Negro pilots under the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and that many of the fliers have made exceptionally good records. However, there has been much difficulty in fitting them into the Army.

Mr. GURNEY. I will answer the Senator by saying that I do not believe it is necessary to have such a provision in this bill, for the reason that cadets will be appointed from the Regular Army. Some of the men who are sent into the Army under the Selective Training Act will apply to be aviation cadets; and inasmuch as the Selective Training Act provides that there shall be no differences so far as race and color are concerned, they would have an equal opportunity with anyone else under the training program.

Therefore I am sure it is not necessary to have such a provision in this bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it the Senator's feeling that under the provisions of the bill all races and colors would have an equal opportunity?

Mr. GURNEY. I am sure that would be true under the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the grade of aviation cadet is hereby created as a special and separate enlisted grade in the Air Corps, Regular Army, in substitution for the grade of flying cadet, created by the act approved July 11, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes." Wherever, in any act of Congress, the designation "flying cadet" shall appear, it shall be construed to mean aviation cadet.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to establish and maintain one or more schools for the training and instruction of aviation cadets.

SEC. 3. Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, male citizens of the United States may enlist as aviation cadets, and enlisted men in the Regular Army may be appointed by the Secretary of War as aviation cadets. Each aviation cadet shall, at the time of his enlistment or appointment as such, be required to sign an agreement that upon his successful completion of the prescribed course of training and instruction as an aviation cadet he will accept a commission as second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, and will serve as such for a continuous period of 3 years on active duty, unless sooner released: Provided, That in the case of a minor, such agreement shall be signed with the consent of his parents or guardian. Upon the successful completion of such prescribed course of training and instruction, each aviation cadet shall be commissioned as a second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, and upon the completion of such period of 3 years on active duty each such second lieutenant shall be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve. The Secretary of War may at any time discharge any aviation cadet or release from active duty any such officer in the Air Corps Reserve.

SEC. 4. The base pay of any aviation cadet shall be $75 per month, which pay shall include extra pay for flying risk, as provided by law. Aviation cadets shall be paid, in addition, a money allowance for subsistence of $1 per day and shall, while undergoing training, be furnished quarters, medical care, and hospitalization and shall be issued uniforms, clothing, and equipment at Government expense. No aviation cadet shall be entitled to receive longevity pay. While traveling under orders, they shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, receive transportation and reimbursement for necessary expenses incurred which are incident to such travel, or cash in lieu thereof. When traveling by air under competent orders, they shall receive the same allowances for traveling expenses as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law for officers of the Army. When commissioned as second lieutenants, Air Corps Reserve, pursuant to this act, they shall be paid a uniform allowance of $150.

SEC. 5. Aviation cadets shall be issued Government life insurance in the amount of $10,000, the premiums on which shall be paid by the Government. Upon being commissioned as second lieutenants, Air Corps Reserve, they shall have the option of continuing such policies at their own expense.

SEC. 6. Section 2 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1524), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Whenever any Air Corps Reserve officer who has not been selected for commission in the Regular Army is released from active duty that has been continuous for 1 or more years, he shall be paid a lump sum of $500 for each complete year of active service as such officer, and if released from active duty otherwise than upon his own request, or as a result of inefficient or unsatisfactory service as determined by the Secretary of War, such lump-sum payment shall be prorated for fractional parts of each year of such active service. The lump-sum payments herein authorized shall be in addition to any pay, allowances, compensation, or benefits which such officers may otherwise be entitled to receive."

SEC. 7. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. This act may be cited as the "Army Aviation Cadet Act."

APPOINTMENT OF UNDER SECRETARY OF WAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] whether or not the bill has the same provisions and limitations with respect to the Under Secretary of War as are contained in the bill providing for the Under Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has the same provisions and limitations.

Mr. WALSH. Is there a limitation of the duration of the office to the period of the emergency?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is limited to the period of the emergency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to appoint from civil life, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Under Secretary in the Department of War to serve during any national emergency declared by the President to exist, including the present limited emergency. The Under Secretary of War shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War or required by law and shall be next in succession to the Secretary of War during his absence or disability or in the event of a temporary vacancy in that office. In prescribing the duties to be performed by the Under Secretary of War, the Secretary of War may prescribe any of the duties now prescribed by law to be performed by the Assistant Secretary of War. The compensation of the Under Secretary of War shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum. The Assistant Secretary of War, next after the Under Secretary of War, shall hereafter succeed to the duties of the Secretary of War during his absence or disability, or in the event of a temporary vacancy in that office.

SEC. 2. That the first two paragraphs of section 5a of the National Defense Act, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 764), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5a. Hereafter the Secretary of War, in addition to other duties imposed upon him by law, shall be charged with the supervision of the procurement of all military supplies and other business of the War Department pertaining thereto and the assurance of adequate provision for the mobilization of matériel and industrial organizations essential to wartime needs, and he may assign to the Under Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War such duties in connection therewith as he may deem proper. There shall be detailed to the Offices of the Secretary of War, the Under Secretary of War, and the Assistant Secretary of War from the branches engaged in procurement such numbers of officers and civilian employees as may be authorized by regulations approved by the Secretary of War.

"Chiefs of branches of the Army shall report regarding all matters of procurement direct to the Secretary of War, the Under Secretary of War, or the Assistant Secretary of War, as the Secretary of War shall have prescribed. The Secretary of War shall cause to be manufactured or produced at the Government arsenals or Government-owned factories of the United States all such supplies or articles needed by the War Department as said arsenals or factories are capable of manufacturing or producing upon an economical basis. All appropriations for manufacture of matériel pertaining to approved projects which are placed with arsenals, Government-owned factories, or other ordnance establishments shall remain available for such purpose until the close of the next ensuing fiscal year."

TRIAL OF PETTY OFFENSES COMMITTEED ON FEDERAL RESERVATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1999) to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try petty offenses committed on Federal reservations.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, this bill marks such an interesting innovation that I should like to observe briefly that the serious question in my mind is whether or not, if an accused person has a right under the Constitution, he will be able to waive it, even though we purport to authorize him to do so. We propose to give a man the right to elect whether he shall be tried before a United States commissioner for a petty offense, or whether he shall agree to be bound over and tried in court. Under the latter circumstances, of course, he would still have his trial in the same form as is now prescribed by law. But if he should exercise his election to be tried before a United States commissioner, and should signify in writing his agreement so to be tried, I assume that we are undertaking to proceed on the theory that an accused may estop himself, so to speak, from later asserting his constitutional rights, whether or not he has such rights. It seems to me that the innovation is so definitely worth while that I am more than willing to see it tried. As to petty offenses, the bill would prove a very definite gain in the administration and facilitation of business of the United States courts.

If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has any idea beyond what I have intimated as to the rights of the accused in this particular, I should be more than interested to have him state it for the RECORD, because I value his opinion very highly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the question which the Senator from Connecticut raises is a doubtful one. However, the difficulty is cured in the sense that the defendant is given the option either to be tried before a commissioner or before a United States court.

The bill also goes a little further than the present law. There is now a statute which permits the appointment of United States commissioners for national parks, other than the special act for the Smoky Mountain Park.

As to the commissioners, there is no law today for the appointment of a commissioner, say, of an air field such as we have over here at Gravelly Point, or a naval reserve. The statute was short, applying merely to national parks. It covers that point. The appointee, in the first place, is a fully authorized United States commissioner. He has a right to bind over to the district court. If it is not a case in which the individual may be bound over, if it is a petty case—that is, an offense which is not punishable by fine of over $500 or over 6 months in jail, without hard labor, particularly defined—if the accused person wishes to select that method of trial, he may do it.

Probably 99 cases out of a hundred which occur in the national parks today are minor offenses; and yet there is today no provision by which they may be disposed of, and the individuals committing the offenses may go away. At present they have to go to the nearest United States court.

Waiving the question of the constitutionality of that method of trial, which I do not care to go into, I think if accused persons see fit to accept that mode of trial rather than to go into the United States court it will never be questioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1938 AS TO TOBACCO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4374) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (15) of subsection (b) of section 301 of subtitle A of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the words—

"Fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco, comprising types 21, 22, 23, 24, 35, 36, and 37;"

and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Fire-cured tobacco, comprising types 21, 22, 23, and 24;

"Dark air-cured tobacco, comprising types 35 and 36;

"Virginia sun-cured tobacco, comprising type 37;"

SEC. 2. That section 312 of subtitle B of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsections (b), (d), (e), and (f) of such section, by striking out all of the second sentence in subsection (c) of such section, and by changing the subsection designation "(c)" therein to "(b)".

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is a bill which was unanimously reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the committee, asked me to look after the bill. I desire to offer an amendement to it.

I introduced a bill making a readjustment in the base period for burley and flue-cured tobacco, made necessary by certain changes in the market situation abroad. The bill which I introduced is recommended by all the tobacco organizations and the tobacco trade generally and by the Department of Agriculture.

I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it be incorporated in Senate bill 4374 at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 3. The last sentence of section 301 (a) (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: "The base period in case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the period August 1909 to July 1914. In the case of all kinds of tobacco except burley and flue-cured such base period shall be the period August 1919 to July 1929, and, in the case of burley and flue-cured tobacco, shall be the period August 1934 to July 1939; except that the August 1919–July 1929 base period shall be used in allocating any funds appropriated prior to September 1, 1940."

SEC. 4. That section 301 (b) (15) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of the last sentence thereof and adding a semicolon and the following: "provided that any one or more of the types comprising any such kind of tobacco shall be treated as a 'kind of tobacco' for the purposes of this act if the Secretary finds there is a difference in supply and demand conditions as among such types of tobacco which results in a difference in the adjustments needed in the marketings thereof in order to maintain supplies in line with demand."

SEC. 5. That section 312 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsection (b) thereof.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will state that this bill applies only to certain types of tobacco. The first part of it fixes the base period from 1934 to 1939, instead of from 1929 to 1934, because there has been a detrimental change in the market situation affecting burley tobacco and flue-cured tobacco, to which the first part of the amendment applies, and also because the marketing conditions growing out of the production of tobacco for the cigarette trade have undergone a change which results in the farmer producing and handling for cigarette purposes less tobacco per acre than formerly.

The latter part of the amendment applies only to dark-fired tobacco and air-cured dark tobacco. When the bill was passed, those two were regarded as somewhat similar in class. The latter part of the amendment I have offered simply permits the Secretary of Agriculture to divide air-cured from fire-cured dark tobacco, and to treat each one of them as a separate kind of tobacco. Those two amendments make necessary the elimination of subsection (b) of section 312.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had this bill up for consideration, they relied almost entirely upon the judgment of the Agricultural Department. It seemed, from what they communicated to us, that the amendment provided for in the bill was very important, and that it was necessary that the change be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment of mine does not affect that.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment was sent over by the Department.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the question I was about to ask the Senator. This amendment likewise has the approval of the Department?

Mr. BARKLEY. It has the approval of the Department. I received it directly from Mr. Thigpen, who is in charge of the tobacco section.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIBER PROPERTIES, SPINNING TESTS, ETC., OF COTTON SAMPLES

The bill (S. 4152) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make analyses of fiber properties, spinning tests, and other tests of the quality of cotton samples submitted to him was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An Act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and publish statistics of the grade and staple length of cotton," approved March 3, 1927, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 3c thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 3d. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make analyses of fiber properties, spinning tests, and other tests of the quality of cotton samples submitted to him by cotton breeders and other persons, subject to such terms and conditions and to the payment by such cotton breeders and other persons of such fees as he may prescribe by regulations under this act.

PAYMENT OF RESERVE OFFICERS EMPLOYED BY THE GOVERNMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4356) making provision for payment of Reserve officers employed by the Government when on active duty, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That any person in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, ordered with or without his consent to active duty with the military or naval forces of the United States shall be entitled to receive compensation in his civilian position covering military leave of 15 days now allowed by law for such employees who are members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and who are ordered to such duty with troops or at field exercises, or for instruction, and any accumulated or current accrued leave to his credit, in addition to his military pay. In case any such employee is granted leave without pay from his civilian position he may elect to have any accumulated or current accrued leave remain to his credit until his return from active military service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the purpose of this measure is to permit employees of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, ordered for active duty with the military or naval forces of the United States to be entitled to receive compensation in his civil position covering military leave of 15 days now allowed by law for such employees who are members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and who are ordered to such duty with troops or at field exercises or for instruction, and any accumulated or current accrued leave to his credit in addition to his military pay. It further provides that in case any employee is granted leave with pay from his civilian position he may elect to have any accumulated or current accrued leave remain to his credit until his return from active military service.

When ordered into the Federal service members of the National Guard lose their militia status and members of the Officers' Reserve Corps are not on duty for annual training as contemplated in the National Defense Act. Federal employees who are members of the National Guard or the Officers' Reserve Corps, therefore, will not be entitled to either military leave with pay from their civil duties or be exempt from the $2,000 dual-salary limitation with respect to accumulated or current accrued leave. No provision for military leave or exemption from the dual-salary limitation has been made for Federal employees ordered to duty under the Selective Training and Service Act.

The purpose of military leave is to enable Federal employees who are members of the Reserve forces to participate annually in limited military training without penalizing them financially, and there appears to be no good reason for depriving them of this privilege now merely because circumstances require that the duration of such service be prolonged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making provision for payment of employees of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, when ordered to active duty with the military or naval forces of the United States."

ALLOWANCE FOR QUARTERS TO ARMY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 4356) to provide for an extension of the conditions under which a money allowance for quarters may be paid to certain noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not satisfied with the bill. Will the Senator from Texas be willing to let it go over until we can look into it more carefully?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TAXES ON SALES IN NATIONAL PARKS AND RESERVATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6687) to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) no person shall be relieved from liability for payment of, collection of, or accounting for any sales or use tax levied by any State, or by any duly constituted taxing authority therein, having jurisdiction to levy such a tax, on the ground that the sale or use, with respect to which such tax is levied, occurred in whole or in part within a Federal area; and such State or taxing authority shall have full jurisdiction and power to levy and collect any such tax in any Federal area within such State to the same extent and with the same effect as though such area was not a Federal area.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be applicable only with respect to sales or purchases made, receipts from sales received, or storage, or use, occurring after December 31, 1940.

SEC. 2. (a) No person shall be relieved from liability for any income tax levied by any State, or by any duly constituted taxing authority therein, having jurisdiction to levy such a tax, by reason of his residing within a Federal area or receiving income from transactions occurring or services performed in such area; and such State or taxing authority shall have full jurisdiction and power to levy and collect such tax in any Federal area within such State to the same extent and with the same effect as though such area was not a Federal area.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be applicable only with respect to income or receipts received after December 31, 1940.

SEC. 3. (a) The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not be deemed to authorize the levy or collection of any tax on or from the United States or any instrumentality thereof, or the levy or collection of any tax with respect to sale, purchase, storage, or use of tangible personal property sold by the United States or any instrumentality thereof to any authorized purchaser.

(b) A person shall be deemed to be an authorized purchaser under this section only with respect to purchases which he is permitted to make from commissaries, ship's stores, or voluntary unincorporated organizations of Army or Navy personnel, under regulations promulgated by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall not for the purposes of any other provision of law be deemed to deprive the United States of exclusive jurisdiction over any Federal area over which it would otherwise have exclusive jurisdiction or to limit the jurisdiction of the United States over any Federal area.

SEC. 5. Nothing in sections 1 and 2 of this act shall be deemed to authorize the levy or collection of any tax on or from any Indian not otherwise taxed.

SEC. 6. As used in this act—

(a) The term "person" shall have the meaning assigned to it in section 3797 of the Internal Revenue Code.

(b) The term "sales or use tax" means any tax levied on, with respect to, or measured by, sales, receipts from sales, purchases, storage, or use of tangible personal property, except a tax with respect to which the provisions of section 10 of the Federal Highway Act, approved June 16, 1936, are applicable.

(c) The term "income tax" means any tax levied on, with respect to, or measured by, net income, gross income, or gross receipts.

(d) The term "State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

(e) The term "Federal area" means any lands or premises held or acquired by or for the use of the United States or any department, establishment, or agency of the United States; and any Federal area, or any part thereof, which is located within the exterior boundaries of any State shall be deemed to be a Federal area located within such State.

SEC. 7. (a) Subsection (a) of section 10 of the Federal Highway Act, approved June 16, 1936, is amended—

(1) By striking out the words "upon sales of gasoline and other motor vehicle fuels" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "upon, with respect to, or measured by, sales, purchases, storage, or use of gasoline or other motor vehicle fuels"; and

(2) By striking out the words "upon such fuels" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "with respect to such fuels."

(b) Subsection (b) of such section 10 is amended by striking out the words "not sold for the exclusive use of the United States during" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "with respect to which taxes are payable under subsection (a) for."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this bill permits taxation by States on sales of goods within Federal areas. It also permits taxation of salaries by States of persons living on military reservations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is this the bill to which the Senator invited my attention?

Mr. BROWN. It is.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to permit the States to extend their sales, use, and income taxes to persons residing or carrying on business, or to transactions occurring, in Federal areas, and for other purposes."

Mr. BROWN subsequently said: I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. GEORGE, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUSPENSION OF CIVIL LIABILITIES OF CERTAIN PERSONS

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 2222, Senate bill 4270.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishment, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, when this bill was up for consideration originally the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] objected. I have consulted with him, and he has kindly withdrawn his objection, after further consideration of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did object. The senior Senator from Louisiana, for whom the Senator from Kansas has very high respect, has explained certain circumstances which make the bill advisable. Therefore I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the heading "Article I—General provisions", on page 2, after line 7, to strike out:

SEC. 101. (1) That the term "persons in military service" and the term "persons in the military service of the United States," as used in this act, shall include the following persons and no others: All members of reserve components of the Army of the United States, and retired personnel of the Regular Army, ordered into active military service under authority of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of Reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service" (S. J. Res. 286, 76th Cong.), and all persons inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States for training and service under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940. The term "military service," as used in this act, shall signify Federal service by such persons on active duty with any branch of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard. The terms "active service" or "active duty" shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

And insert:

SEC. 101. (1) The term "persons in military service" and the term "persons in the military service of the United States," as used in this act, shall include the following persons and no others: All members of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and all officers of the Public Health Service detailed by proper authority for duty either with the Army or the Navy. The term "military service," as used in this act, shall signify Federal service on active duty with any branch of service heretofore referred to or mentioned as well as training or education under the supervision of the United States preliminary to induction into the military service. The terms "active service" or "active duty" shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 101. (1) The term "persons in military service" and the term "persons in the military service of the United States," as used in this act, shall include the following persons and no others: All members of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and all officers of the Public Health Service detailed by proper authority for duty either with the Army or the Navy. The term "military service," as used in this act, shall signify Federal service on active duty with any branch of service heretofore referred to or mentioned as well as training or education under the supervision of the United States preliminary to induction into the military service. The terms "active service" or "active duty" shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

(2) The term "period of military service," as used in this act, shall include the time between the following dates: For persons in active service at the date of the approval of this act it shall begin with the date of approval of this act; for persons entering active service after the date of this act, with the date of entering active service. It shall terminate with the date of discharge from active service or death while in active service, but in no case later than the date when this act ceases to be in force.

(3) The term "person," when used in this act with reference to the holder of any right alleged to exist against a person in military service or against a person secondarily liable under such right, shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and any other forms of business association.

(4) The term "court," as used in this act, shall include any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record.

The next amendment was, in section 301, page 11, line 17, after the word "jurisdiction", to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That such contracts may be altered, modified, rescinded, or canceled, and possession of said property may be either rescued or retained (as the parties may agree) without court action, pursuant to mutual agreement by the parties, or their assignees, executed in writing", so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 301. (1) That no person who has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That such contracts may be altered, modified, rescinded, or canceled, and possession of said property may be either rescued or retained (as the parties may agree) without court action, pursuant to mutual agreement by the parties, or their assignees, executing in writing.

The next amendment was, in section 302, page 12, line 17, after "obligations", to strike out "originating prior to the date of approval of this act and", so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 302. (1) That the provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations secured by mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of the period of the military service and still so owned by him.

The next committee amendment was, on page 18, line 20, after the word "hereof," to strike out "and shall bear interest at the rate of — per centum per annum, payable with the principal" and insert "and shall bear interest at a rate to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, payable with the principal"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 407. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall verify the computation of monthly difference reported by each insurer and shall, within 10 days thereafter, deliver each month to the proper officer of such insurer, a certificate in the amount of the monthly difference certified in respect of each insurer. Such certificate shall be signed by said Administrator in the name of the United States, shall be in such form as the Administrator shall determine, shall be payable to the insurer within 60 days after the approval of the statement of account, as provided in section 411 hereof, and shall bear interest at a rate to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, payable with the principal. Such certificate shall not be transferred except with the approval of said Administrator and shall remain with the insurer until settlement is made in accordance with this article.

On page 24, after line 9, to strike out:

SEC. 502. That section 1 of the act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"If any person whose application for a homestead entry."

And insert:

SEC. 502. That if any person whose application for a homestead entry.

And on page 25, line 8, after the word "year", to strike out the quotation marks, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 502. If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed, after such entry or application enters military service, the Department of the Interior shall construe his military service to be equivalent to residence and cultivation upon the tract entered for the period of such service. From the effective date of this act no contest shall be initiated on the ground of abandonment and no allegation of abandonment shall be sustained against any such person, unless it shall be alleged in the preliminary affidavit or affidavits of contest and proved at the hearing in cases initiated subsequent to the effective date of this act that the alleged absence from the land was not due to such military service. If such person is discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, the term of his enlistment and any period of hospitalization due to such wounds or disability shall be deducted from the required length of residence, without reference to the time of actual service. No patent shall issue to any homestead entryman who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least 1 year.

On page 25, after line 8, to strike out:

SEC. 503. That section 2 of the act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby amended to read as follows:
"If any person whose application for a homestead entry."

And insert:

SEC. 503. That any person whose application for a homestead entry.

In line 25, after the word "section", to strike out "(1)" and insert "502"; on page 26, line 1, before the word "If", to strike out the quotation marks; and in line 6, after the word "entered", to strike out the quotation marks and insert "The act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby repealed", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 503. If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed dies while in military service or as a result of such service, his widow, if unmarried, or in the case of her death or marriage, his minor orphan children, or his or their legal representatives, may proceed forthwith to make final proof upon such entry or upon an application which is allowed after the applicant's death, and shall be entitled to receive a patent for such land. The death of such person while in military service or as a result of such service shall be construed to be equivalent to a performance of all requirements as to residence and cultivation upon such homestead, notwithstanding the provisions of section 502 of this act.

If such person is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to return to the land, he may make final proof without further residence, improvement, or cultivation, at such time and place as the Secretary of the Interior may authorize, and receive a patent to the land entered. The act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby repealed.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 21, after the word "to", to strike out "508" and insert "512", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 507. Nothing in this article shall be construed to limit or affect the right of a person in military service to take any action during his period of service which may be authorized by law or the regulations of the Department of the Interior for the perfection, defense, or further assertion of rights initiated or acquired prior to the date of entering military service. It shall be lawful for any person while in such service to make any affidavit or submit any proof which may be required by law or the practice or regulations of the General Land Office in connection with the entry, perfection, defense, or further assertion of any rights initiated or acquired prior to entering such service, before the officer in immediate command and holding a commission in the branch of the service in which the person is engaged. Such affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before a register of a United States land office. The Secretary of the Interior may issue rules and regulations to effectuate the purposes of sections 501 to 512, inclusive.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 34, after line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 603. That this act shall remain in force until June 30, 1942: Provided, however, That should the United States be then engaged in a war, this act shall remain in force until such war is terminated by a treaty of peace proclaimed by the President and for 6 months thereafter: Provided further, That wherever under any section or provision of this act a proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction has been authorized or provided, the due exercise or enjoyment of which may extend beyond the period herein fixed for the termination of this act, such section or provision shall be deemed to continue in full force and effect so long as may be necessary to the exercise or enjoyment of the proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or transaction foresaid.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 35, after line 4, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 605. That the provisions of section 4, Public Resolution No. 96, Seventy-sixth Congress, and the provisions of section — of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 are hereby repealed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I have some perfecting amendments which I wish to offer in the nature of substitutes for some of the committee amendments. I have submitted them to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, lines 17 to 22, inclusive, in lieu of the proviso proposed to be inserted by the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall prevent the modification, termination, or cancelation of any such contract, or prevent the repossession or retention of property purchased or received under such contract, pursuant to a mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, if such agreement is executed in writing subsequent to the making of such contract and during the period of military service of the person concerned.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the general purpose of this amendment is the same as that of the committee amendment which it would replace. However, it would modify the language of the committee amendment to make it conform to the language which was finally agreed upon and included in the Selective Training and Service Act.

This section of the bill restricts the right of the seller to repossess property which has been sold on an installment purchase contract by reason of the failure of the purchaser to pay the installments falling due during the period of his military service. This amendment provides that nothing in the section shall prevent the modification, termination, or cancelation of any such contract by mutual agreement of the interested parties or prevent the repossession or retention of the property involved pursuant to such mutual agreement. The proposed amendment would require that such mutual agreement be executed in writing subsequent to the making of the contract and during the period of military service of the person concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana to the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, beginning with line 14 in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out through line 2 on page 35, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

SEC. 604. That this act shall remain in force until May 15, 1945: Provided, however, That should the United States be then engaged in a war, this act shall remain in force until such war is terminated by a treaty of peace proclaimed by the President and for 6 months thereafter: Provided further, That wherever under any section or provision of this act a proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction has been authorized or provided with respect to military service performed prior to the date herein fixed for the termination of this act, such section or provision shall be deemed to continue in full force and effect with respect to such military service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, between lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 603. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 35, beginning with line 5, it is proposed to strike out through line 8, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 606. The provisions of section 4, Public Resolution No. 96, Seventy-sixth Congress, and the provisions of section 13 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, shall not be applicable with respect to any military service performed after the date of enactment of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask that all amendments in the bill for which substitutes have not been adopted be agreed to en bloc.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, with reference to one committee amendment, on page 12, line 17, by which the committee struck out the words "originating prior to the date of the approval of this act and", I wish to say that the elimination of these words would cause a hardship to those persons in the military service or who are to be called, because it would freeze their credit. It is obvious that no lending agency would allow a possible draftee to borrow money on a chattel or other security which is likely to depreciate in value, unless he has the protection which the words which would be deleted from this section would give. Therefore I ask that the committee amendment which would strike out those words be rejected, and that the words remain in the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, the amendment on page 12, lines 17 and 18, is rejected. Without objection, all the other amendments for which substitutes have not been agreed to are agreed to en bloc.

Mr. OVERTON. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be instructed to correct the section numbers; that he be instructed to strike out the word "That" at the beginning of each section, and to capitalize the following word; and that he be instructed to place at the beginning of each paragraph an appropriate letter or number in accordance with the ordinary practice for designating subsections and subparagraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard."

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that some brief remarks on the bill which I have prepared be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. This is for the reason that I feel the bill may go to conference, and there is complete information in the statement, which would be helpful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there obection?

There being no obection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In reference to S. 4270, section 301, division 1, on page 12, lines 17 and 18, it is suggested that clause "originating prior to the date of approval of this act and" be reinstated in this section for the following reasons:

The elimination of these words will cause a hardship to those persons who are in the military service or who are to be called in because it will freeze their credits.

The original Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of 1918 contained these words, and it was a matter of considerable discussion at that time. A part of the report of the Judiciary Committee proves this point, which is quoted as follows:

"The lesson of the stay laws of the Civil War teaches that an arbitrary and rigid protection against suits is as much a mistaken kindness to the soldiers as it is unnecessary. A total suspension for the period of the war of all rights against a soldier defeats its own purpose. In time of war credit is of even more importance than in time of peace, and if there were a total prohibition upon enforcing obligations against one in military service, the credit of a soldier and his family would be utterly cut off. No one could be found who would extend them credit."

It is obvious that no lending agency will allow a possible draftee to borrow money on a chattel or other security that is likely to depreciate in value unless he has a protection that the words that have been deleted from this section will give.

It is apparent that men between the ages of 21 and 35 when asking credit are now unable to assure the prospective creditors that they will be present when their debt will fall due. These prospective creditors, whether individuals or corporations, know that when the date falls due their borrower will be hundreds of miles away and therefore not amenable to court process will be wary in extending credit unless good marketable security is offered. The ability to offer such security will be more important than heretofore. Why should millions subject to be called be deprived of the opportunity to offer that type of security? Hundreds of millions of dollars are lent daily on low rates of interest on the security of shares of stock, trade fixtures, automobiles, and other property which rapidly fluctuates in price. This money could not be lent if the creditor had to subject himself to the expense and more especially the delays of court action before he could dispose of them. In most cases the element of time would destroy the value of the security.

Since the power of sale in a chattel mortgage, deed of trust, or pledge does not give the holder the opportunity to deprive the mortgagor of his rights and requires the mortgagee to get a fair price for such chattel, it is evident that no protection is found necessary along these lines. Of course, there is a type of lender who will lend at exorbitant rates of interest on securities of questionable value; but the prospective soldiers should not be deprived of the opportunity to offer reputable institutions good security at a reasonable rate of interest.

I am therefore recommending that the words "originating prior to the date of approval of this act and" be reinstated in S. 4270, division 1, on page 12, lines 17 and 18.

COMMENTS RELATIVE TO URGING ENACTMENT OF S. 4270 RATHER THAN DELAY UNTIL THE NEXT SESSION

Senator OVERTON introduced an amendment which was incorporated in both the National Guard bill and the selective-service bill. This amendment purported to revive in part the provisions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918. There was, and is, no objection to the purpose of this amendment, and Senator OVERTON's foresight in introducing it is very praiseworthy. However, Senator OVERTON's comments, at the time he introduced the amendment (p. 10052, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 8, 1940), indicate that he realized it was in the nature of a stop-gap, pending submission of a more comprehensive bill, which was then in process of preparation by the War Department. From this it may be implied, with all due respect to Senator OVERTON, that the amendment was drafted somewhat hurriedly.

Although I am no lawyer, certain features of the wording have been called to my attention which might possibly nullify the purpose of the amendment due to legal uncertainty. For example, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1918 expired in 1919, or 6 months after the termination of the World War. There may be some question as to the legality of making its provisions again effective by merely so stating. Again, the amendment states that "The benefits of the * * * Act * * * are hereby extended to all persons inducted into the land or naval forces * * * and * * * the provisions of such act of March 8, 1918, shall be effective for such purposes." A legal question is immediately raised as to what are the "benefits" of the act. Further, having decided what the benefits are, the provisions of the act are effective "for such purposes," which implies that portions of the act, not related specifically to "benefits," are ineffective.

I cite these possibilities to show that, although the intent of Congress in this matter is very clear, the language used in expressing this intent is not clear from the legal viewpoint.

The Committee on Military Affairs has studied S. 4270 and the amendments which it proposes are in accord with the draft of the bill submitted by the War Department. The bill, in substance, is a modernized version of the 1918 act. The War Department devoted considerable thought and time to its preparation and consulted all other interested departments of the Government. Senator OVERTON was aware of this when he introduced his amendment, but considered it advisable to go ahead rather than delay, and in this I am inclined to agree. He stated, however, that when the War Department bill was introduced it could be used as a substitute for his amendment.

COMMENTS RELATING TO ARTICLE IV "INSURANCE" AND ARTICLE V "TAXES AND PUBLIC FUNDS" WHICH ARE OMITTED FROM SENATOR OVERTON'S AMENDMENT BUT INCLUDED IN S. 4270

The necessity for the enactment of these two articles can neither be expressly proven nor denied. We cannot foresee just how many persons will be affected. It seems certain that some may at once, since the volume of life insurance in force has tripled in the last 20 years; the number affected will increase later on. One thing is of outstanding importance relative to immediate enactment of S. 4270 which contains the articles IV and V. The efficient administration of these articles requires that advance notice be given of their provisions both to the persons who come into the military service and to the administrative agencies concerned. It would appear advisable to urge enactment of S. 4270 to anticipate the various needs rather than delay as in the case of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1918, which was enacted about 1 year after the United States had declared war.

COMMENTS RELATIVE TO CLASSES OF PERSONNEL INCLUDED WITHIN THE PROVISIONS OF S. 4270

The Overton amendment is limited in application to persons inducted or called into active Federal service under the National Guard resolution and the Selective Service Act. These include:

1. Officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard.

2. Officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Organized Reserves.

3. Retired officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Regular Army.

4. Persons inducted into the land or naval forces under the Selective Service Act.

The following classes, included in S. 4270 as amended, are excluded from the provisions of the Overton amendment:

1. All persons who may volunteer for the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.
2. The Coast Guard.
3. The Regular Navy and Naval Reserve.
4. The Marine Corps and Marine Corps Reserve.
5. Officers of the Public Health Service detailed for duty with the armed forces.
6. Enlisted men of the Regular Army.
7. Officers and warrant officers on the active list of the Regular Army.

If any part of the Army is included there appears to be no objection to the inclusion of the Navy and Marine Corps, if for no other reason than to avoid discrimination between the armed services. By law, the Coast Guard is a part of the military forces and may, when directed by the President, operate as a part of the Navy, hence the Coast Guard should be included. It does not appear that any serious objection would be raised to the inclusion of any of the first five classes named above.

This brings us to a consideration of class 6, enlisted men of the Regular Army. At first glance there would appear to be no necessity for including them within the provisions of S. 4270. They have managed to get along without S. 4270 ever since 1919, so why include them now? During peacetime, many enlisted men, particularly those in the noncommissioned grades, marry. Their ability to maintain families, despite their small pay, is based largely on the relative infrequency with which they are required to change station. Their wives may contribute to the family income by obtaining employment on the military post or in nearby communities. They may live in modest rented houses in the community, may purchase furniture and second-hand cars on the installment plan, and for all practical purposes they are relatively permanent members of the civilian community. An emergency arises, troops are suddenly ordered into the field for extended training periods, to foreign service, or to other stations. The wife, if employed on the military post, may lose her job. The soldier is unable to send every cent of his pay home. The questions of rent and installment payments immediately arise, and you have justification for granting the protection afforded by S. 4270 to enlisted men of the Regular Army.

The assumed situation cited is by no means typical of the 375,000 men in the Regular Army, but it is distinctly a possibility and one which would merit the protection of S. 4270. In brief, a national emergency is in many ways just as complete a disruption of the civilian aspects of military life in the Regular Army as calling the National Guard and selective-service trainees into training for 1 year is to their normal way of living.

This brings us to a consideration of class 7, officers and warrant officers of the Regular Army. At first glance there appears to be no necessity for including them within the provisions of S. 4270. Considering their higher rate of pay, there appears even less need than for enlisted men. However, consider the impact of a national emergency upon officers of the Regular Army as contrasted with peacetime. Their rate of pay has been considered adequate in the past, but in no sense sufficient to permit accumulation of savings in the nature of a reserve for "rainy days."

A junior officer with a family of two or three is stationed on a military post. He is purchasing a car and some furniture on the installment plan. A national emergency arises. His organization is ordered to field duty, for example, in Alaska. His family cannot accompany him. Another organization is ordered to the post. His family cannot continue to occupy quarters on the post. They must rent a home in a civilian community. A large portion of the expense of such a move must be borne by the officer. The cost of medical and hospital care for his family may have to be borne by the officer. In brief, it is not difficult to build up an entirely possible, and not improbable, situation which would justify granting the protection of S. 4270 to officers. In such a situation should such an officer be denied protection which is extended to a Reserve officer serving in the same organization? If it were, the officer might have just cause for resentment and lowered morale.

It must be conceded that few, if any, officers of the Regular Army will find cause for seeking protection under any of the provisions of S. 4270. Generally such officers are meticulously careful in meeting financial obligations. However, the existence of a possibility of need for protection cannot be denied, and in such a case it should be granted.

There are adequate safeguards incorporated in S. 4270 to prevent abuse of any privilege granted thereunder. The findings of any court must be predicated upon a showing that the ability to meet obligations is impaired by reason of military service. Also, there is an express provision in section 600 aimed to prevent taking advantage of the act with intent to delay enforcement of a right. The conclusion must be that all persons in the military service should be included in the provisions of S. 4270.

EASTERN CHEROKEES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the consideration of the calendar I interposed objection to the consideration of two bills which were introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], calendar No. 2264, Senate bill 4232, and calendar No. 2265, Senate bill 4233. They deal with small appropriations in the nature of fees and compensation for small areas of Indian lands. Since the bills were under consideration I have conferred with the Senator from Oklahoma, and I withdraw the objections which I offered, and ask that the bills be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4232) for the relief of the Eastern Cherokees.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,997.85, with interest at 5 percent per annum from March 15, 1910, the same being the amount of the unpaid interest-bearing principal found due the Eastern Cherokees by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1906 (202 U. S. 101); and when appropriated shall be placed to the credit of the Eastern Cherokees and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to their attorney of record. The warrants representing this unpaid balance are hereby canceled upon the approval of this act.

EASTERN AND WESTERN CHEROKEES

The bill [S. 4233] for the relief of the Eastern and Western Cherokees was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $432.28, with interest at 5 percent per annum from January 1, 1874, to the date of the passage of this act, the same being the balance arising from the sale of the Cherokee Strip, the title to which was vested by the treaty of 1846 (9 Stat. 871) in the whole Cherokee people, and said fund having been found due by the Slade-Bender award and appearing as item 3 in the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1906 (202 U. S. 101); and when appropriated shall be placed to the credit of the Eastern and Western Cherokees and paid to their attorney of record by the Secretary of the Treasury.

PROBLEMS OF AMERICAN SMALL-BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 2171, Senate Resolution 298, to appoint a special committee to study and survey problems of American small-business enterprises.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is that a resolution which was objected to a few days ago?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes. I spoke to the Senators who objected, and I understand they are willing to withdraw their objections.

Mr. KING. I do not agree that the resolution is necessary at all.

Mr. MURRAY. I have two perfecting amendments to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 2171. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that the measure has not been considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was considered last Friday, not today.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. The problem then is, it seems to me, whether we are to proceed to the consideration of that bill or some other.

Mr MURRAY. I spoke to the Senator who objected to it yesterday, and I understand he wishes to withdraw his objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. My recollection is there were many objections, and I shall, under the circumstances, have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

SUGARCANE HARVESTED IN THE MAINLAND AREA

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1585, Senate Joint Resolution 225.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1585. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Louisiana whether the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the chairman of the Finance Committee, who is interested in the legislation pertaining to sugar, is advised that the Senator from Louisiana intended to bring up this measure now.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; he knows all about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. And are other Senators interested in the sugar situation also advised?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; most Senators interested in sugar have been told that my resolution would be considered today.

Mr. President, the resolution that I am now proposing for the consideration of the Senate is the same one that I attempted to incorporate in an appropriation bill in the early part of the year. I am certain that all Senators are familiar with its provisions, because it was debated for quite some time. Unless Senators desire to ask me some questions pertaining to the resolution, it is my purpose not to discuss it at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be stated.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937 with respect to the 1940 crop shall be withheld from any producer in the mainland cane-sugar area, because of the marketing (or processing) of sugarcane in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, if the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940, but payments shall be made only with respect to the proportionate share acreage established for the farm under the provisions of such act, and the following deductions shall be made from such payments, on account of any acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 which is in excess of (1) 110 percent of the proportionate share for the farm, or (2) the proportionate share for the farm plus 25 acres whichever is the greater; for so much of such excess as does not exceed 500 acres, a deduction of $10 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 500 acres, a deduction of $20 per acre.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, on page 2, in lines 19, 20, and 21, provision is made for sugarcane "marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940." I assume the Senator means planted in 1939. The Senator does not mean to go back an indefinite period.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I am interested only in cane that was planted as of January 1, 1940.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the Senator object to inserting the words "planted in 1939"?

Mr. ELLENDER. I would not agree to that change because the language in my amendment was worked out by the committee in order to include all cane actually growing and planted prior to January 1, 1940. That would cover plant cane, first-year stools, and second-year stools.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there should be a time limit. The Senator does not mean to include sugarcane planted in 1870 or 1880? There should be some limit on it. It merely says sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940, without any limitation. What I understand the Senator to mean is the acreage of sugarcane being grown in the year 1939, regardless of when it was planted.

Mr. ELLENDER. There are some farmers in Louisiana who may have third-year stools also. The amendment is intended simply to cover the growing cane and the planted cane as of January 1, 1940.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but the Senator means the cane that was actually in the process of growing during the year 1939. The Senator does not mean to include acreage of cane that was growing in 1935.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; of course not. I am interested only in cane that was planted or growing as of January 1, 1940.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the Senator object to changing the language so it would be limited to an acreage of cane growing during the year 1939? That is, we are trying to get a basis for computation.

Mr. ELLENDER. That change may complicate matters. I have worked on this matter with the Department on many occasions, and as a matter of fact the language that is the basis of this measure was prepared and drafted by the Department of Agriculture. It has been so worded, I believe, as to cover the very situation of which the Senator is apprehensive. There is nothing in the bill that would grant any cane grower an increase in his basic cane quota. Since the language in the bill was drafted by the Department of Agriculture, I am satisfied that it is intended to cover the sugarcane that the Senator has in mind, and no other.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, why not say so?

Mr. ELLENDER. I would prefer that the language remain as is, since the Department has passed upon it. I do not want to get into any further complications with respect to the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. The matter is now before the Senate, and we are trying to fix a basis for the computations whereby the sugarcane growers in Louisiana shall be permitted to receive certain payments, provided their plantings are not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane which was in process of growth during the year 1939. Is not that the fact?

Mr. ELLENDER. The bill as originally drafted was intended to cover sugarcane planted in 1937, 1938, and 1939, and all cane growing from the stools of the cane planted in said years.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator does not mean to include sugarcane which was planted in 1937, and for one reason or another has been dug up or ruined, does he?

Mr. ELLENDER. Obviously, such sugarcane could not be included, if it is no more.

Mr. ADAMS. The language does not say "growing." It says "planted prior to January 1, 1940."

Mr. ELLENDER. How could it come into the picture if the cane has been destroyed? My people surely cannot harvest sugarcane from acreage that was plowed up years ago.

Mr. ADAMS. That is just what I am asking the Senator. Is he not willing to make his amendment comply with what he conceives to be the facts? As I understand, he is interested only in the sugarcane which was growing prior to January 1, 1940, during the year 1939, the previous crop year, regardless of whether it was planted in 1937, 1938, or 1939. As I understand, the question is as to the acreage which was actually growing in the crop year 1939.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not think the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado would cover the case, because sugarcane planted in other years than 1939 is still growing in Louisiana. To carry out the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado we might add "and subsequent to January 1, 1935." The Senator from Colorado is apprehensive that we might go back to an acreage which was planted in 1780. That is not the purpose. We might say "between the dates of January 1, 1935, and January 1, 1940."

Mr. ELLENDER. That would cover the situation; but I do not see any necessity for so amending the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Neither do I.

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe the present language covers the situation.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be compelled to offer an amendment to the Senator's amendment in order to make that clear. My amendment may not be accepted. However, it seems to me that we are including something as a basis of measurement which is not what the Senator has in mind. It is not the thing on which we are in agreement. Either I do not understand the Senator or he does not understand me.

Mr. ELLENDER. I must apologize to the Senator if I do not make myself clear to him.

Mr. ADAMS. I am willing to assume that I am the one who does not understand. What we are trying to say is that no payment shall be held back under the Sugar Act of 1937, with reference to the 1940 crop, because of an excess over the acrage planted prior to January 1, 1940. What is the acreage planted prior to that time? Does the Senator mean to accumulate the acreages planted in 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939? Or does the Senator really mean the acreage which was growing in 1939, as the basis upon which the computation is to be made?

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator will bear in mind that this bill affects only sugarcane which is harvested during the crop year 1940, I am sure his fears will be allayed. It certainly is not contemplated to make payments on lands or acreages which have been planted with cane which has not been ground into sugar. If the Senator desires to limit it along the lines of the limitation that I incorporated in the resolution when I introduced it—that is, to cane planted during specific years—I should have no objection; but I submitted the question to the Department of Agriculture, and the Department worked out the language that is now in the bill. The bill is not intended to cover any other acreage of sugarcane except that which was planted or growing as of January 1, 1940. If the Senator should offer an amendment to the effect that only such cane as was planted from January 1, 1935, up to January 1, 1940, shall be included, I am sure that would cover the situation, and I would agree to such amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. It was growing during the crop year 1939. That is what I assume is the basis of the computation. We are not interested in cane which was not growing in 1939. We are not interested in cane which ceased to grow in 1935, 1936, 1937, or 1938. We are interested in the actual acreage of sugarcane which was growing in the year preceding the first of January 1940.

Mr. ELLENDER. The cane which was planted up to January 1, 1940, and cane which was actually growing in 1939, ought to cover the situation; but as I have stated, I am sure that the language as it is drafted covers the situation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It occurs to me that perhaps the difficulty is overcome by the amendment which I understand the Senator from Louisiana is about to offer.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was about to make the same suggestion, Mr. President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I understand after certain discussions today, the Senator has agreed to make it clear that by this provision he does not intend to increase, and his joint resolution will not have the effect of increasing, the sugar quota of Louisiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It merely operates to prevent penalizing those who, in the circumstances, planted certain acres which they might not otherwise have planted, provided that the Secretary shall find the total to be not greater than 505,000 tons.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. I suggest that if the amendment had been sent to the desk and read, I believe it would have removed any objection the Senator from Colorado had. The amendment which I propose to offer reads as follows:

Provided, That the foregoing provision shall be effective only if the Secretary determines that the actual production from the 1940 crop acreage shall not exceed the estimated production of the 1940 proportionate share acreage of 505,000 tons.

That, to my mind, would cover the situation as to which there is doubt in the mind of the able Senator from Colorado. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator, Is the effect of the amendment simply to prohibit a number of pounds in excess of the number of pounds which might have been marketed under the quotas had it been produced and offered for marketing?

Mr. ELLENDER. No.

Mr. PEPPER. In other words, the Senator has increased the acreage, but has not increased the quota?

Mr. ELLENDER. The acreage is not increased at all. When the farmers were allotted a certain sugarcane acreage for 1940 by the Department of Agriculture it was based on an estimated production of 505,000 tons of sugar. They were allotted a certain acreage upon which to produce this amount of sugar. It so happens that, because of storms and bad weather, the amount produced will be far less than the amount contemplated by the department when the acreage allotments were established. In addition to the penalties which are inflicted on the farmer who planted in excess of his proportionate share under the terms of this bill, there is the further proviso that the entire amount of sugar which is produced this year from the proportionate share acreage plus that produced from the excess acreage shall not exceed the 505,000 tons fixed by the Department when the allocation of acreage was made for the 1940 crop.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to extend my hearty approval to the amendment offered by the able Senator from Louisiana, and say that it meets a very great need on the part of the cane area, of which, of course, Florida is a part. I very sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted, because we shall very keenly react favorably to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 3, line 8, after the words "per acre", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the foregoing provision shall be effective only if the Secretary determines that the actual production from the 1940 crop acreage shall not exceed the estimated production of the 1940 proportionate share acreage of 505,000 tons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I understand that only about 200 farmers are affected by this amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. In Louisiana, between 200 and 250.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And most of those are what we call small farmers; are they not?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; a few of them are large farmers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What would the Senator say would be the average acreage of each of the farmers affected by the amendment?

Mr. ELLENDER. Some of them have as little as 50 acres. Some, of course, have larger acreages. I think one of them would be classed among the largest producers in the State. But most of them, I should say, have from 50 to 200 acres—the larger portion of those affected are in that class.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That was my understanding.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added to the joint resolution as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 2. The last clause of section 201 of the act appproved September 1, 1937, is amended to read as follows: "and in order that the regulation of commerce provided by this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary shall make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available to consumers shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole. The amount of such additional allowances shall not be less than the amount required, after allowance for normal carry-over, to give consumers in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to the average of the 2-year period, 1937–38."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

SUSPENSION OF CIVIL LIABILITIES OF CERTAIN PERSONS

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 4270, Calendar No. 2222, for the purpose of making a transposition of some of the text of it to aid in indexing.

First, I suppose, the Senate should act upon my request to recur to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4270) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask that the sentence contained in lines 3 and 4 on page 35 of the bill be transposed to become the first sentence and first section of the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, what is the purpose of the transposition?

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 35, lines 3 and 4 read as follows:

SECTION 604. That this act may be cited as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940.

At the request of the clerk of the committee I have made this unanimous-consent request, in order to facilitate indexing the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator asks that the sentence be transposed?

Mr. AUSTIN. That it be transposed to the first page and the first line, making it lines 1 and 2 on page 1, instead of lines 3 and 4 on page 35.

Mr. OVERTON. I assume that that is correct. I do not exactly follow the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator from Louisiana knows as much about it as I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerks will be authorized to make the transposition.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS; TRUTH IN FABRIC—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as there will be some discussion of the conference report, it is not possible to proceed with it today; and it will be the unfinished business when the Senate meets tomorrow.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several officers to be assistants to the Chief of the Air Corps with the rank of brigadier general, Regular Army, for a period of 4 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Gerald A. Gleeson to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albert M. Martinson to be a commander, to rank as such from September 1, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Louis Albert Ledbetter to be brigadier general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, October 1, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of light and of love, during this day we would yield ourselves to the guiding power of Thy spirit and the warming assurance of Thy presence. In all our duties, grant us Thy help; in our perplexities, Thy counsel; in our burdens and trials, Thy sustaining grace.

We thank Thee for the heritage which we have received from those whose quest for truth has illumined the path in which we walk, whose search for beauty has enriched the world in which we live, whose devotion to goodness has ennobled the soul of humanity, and whose obedience to Thy will has made life forever significant.

Enlist us in a crusade to free the world from the curse of hatred and the tyranny of war. Widen the horizon of our sympathies and understanding. Enlighten our minds and hearts with a vision of that blessed day when righteousness and peace shall be gloriously triumphant.

In the name of the Christ, we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, September 26, 1940, was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL STOLEN PROPERTY ACT

Mr. SABATH (on behalf of Mr. LEWIS of Colorado) from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 617), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 617

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3936), an act to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask my distinguished friend from Michigan the reason for putting this bill over?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the distinguished majority leader that I explained my objections in full when this calendar was called 3 or 4 weeks ago. I should dislike to encumber the RECORD again with all the objections I had to the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was present at the time, and I am aware of what the gentleman stated then. Are the same objections expressed then the reason for the gentleman's action today?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; they have not changed any. The bill has not been changed any.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the report of the special committee, of which I was a member, was unanimous?

On the special commission were the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER]. On the part of the Senate there were the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], also the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I was a member of the commission, and there were three members of the Supreme Court on it also. The report of the special committee is unanimous. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not press his unanimous-consent request but will permit the bill to pass.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Before the gentleman asks me to do this, I wish he would review the reasons I gave for it at that time.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman's mind is made up—and I thoroughly respect the gentleman—I would much prefer that the gentleman would object to the passage of the bill without prolonging the discussion further.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McCORMACK. I object. I prefer to see consideration of the bill objected to rather than have it go over again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no man whose memory I revere more than that of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. I had a deep admiration for his father from the time I could sit up and read the English language. I have equally respected Justice Holmes. In my opinion, if there is any man in this country who should be honored it is the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. He was a great jurist, he was a great man, he was my mentor, he was my champion, in fact he was a little god whom I worshiped for several years when I was studying law. So I hope the gentleman will appreciate that when I object to the consideration of this bill it is with the hope that the Committee on the Library and the special commission the gentleman mentions will get together on a bill which the House can pass with full realization that it would meet with the ideals and principles of the late Justice Holmes himself were he alive to supervise this proposal. That is the reason I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. KEAN objected.

ARLINGTON FARM, VA.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4107, to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Va., to the jurisdictions of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10315, to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish suitable vessels for the benefit of certain State nautical schools, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MOUNT VERNON MEMORIAL HIGHWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10221, to provide for the acquisition of additional land along the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway in exchange for certain dredging privileges, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for the moment?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; I will withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman served on the committee from which this bill was reported. I have no personal interest, of course, in the bill, but I do have an interest in it as a citizen interested in the preservation of the Washington Memorial Highway.

This bill will cost the Government not 1 penny, but the Government will get some very useful rights for its own purposes. I cannot see how there could possibly be any objection to the enactment of this measure, and I hope the gentleman, in view of the fact that we are now getting pretty well along in the session, will not interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill at this time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why is this corporation going to be so liberal as to give title to expensive property to the United States Government for nothing?

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman has read the report and the hearings, the gentleman will see that the Government will acquire title to quite a bit of land along the Washington Memorial Highway which it does not now own and which will obviate the probability of the establishment on this route of many unsightly things. It will acquire these rights and this title simply by giving temporary dredging privileges in a much smaller tract of land owned by the Government. These dredging operations, the Army engineers report, will enable seaplanes to take off from the proximity of our National airport and will also improve the navigation of the Potomac River.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But this bill does not provide that the Federal Government shall obtain this valuable property without giving something in return. The Federal Government is apparently going to give the owners of this land something of great value.

Mr. LANHAM. The Federal Government will acquire very much land and title to that land. It will give title to no land, but for a limited period of time it will grant dredging privileges in a very much smaller tract of land, and this dredging will result in an improvement of navigation of the river and also facilitate the operation of seaplanes near the National Airport.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the gentleman's statement I will support this bill with a sincere hope that this expensive and expansive airport which has thus far cost the taxpayers of the country more than $14,000,000 might be improved so that it can be an integral part of our national-defense system. Right now there is not one underground, hidden, or camouflaged runway or hangar, and any enemy bombing squadron could wipe out that Gravelly Point Airport which is adjacent to our Nation's Capital in a few moments.

In view of the fact they are going to do some dredging at this airport, if the pending bill is enacted, and in order that they might then have some facilities and place to install some underground, hidden, or camouflaged runways and hangars and really provide for national defense at this airport which is adjacent to the National Capital, I shall withdraw my objection to the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Wisconsin stated that the Gravelly Point Airport is going to cost $14,000,000. I have been informed that the Gravelly Point Airport will cost over $25,000,000, but I have not been able to find anybody in the Congress who can give me an estimate on what the Gravelly Point Airport will cost. Can the gentleman tell us?

Mr. LANHAM. In the first place this bill has no connection with the Gravelly Point Airport further than that the dredging contemplated will make it possible for seaplanes to operate from near that port. I may say further that the legislation with reference to the Gravelly Point Airport did not emanate from our committee; consequently I cannot give the gentleman detailed information in that regard.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is another Member of Congress who does not know anything about what the cost of the Gravelly Point Airport will be. I have been trying to find out what the cost of that operation will ultimately be. Probably the gentleman from Missouri, who looks as if he had the knowledge, might tell us what that airport will cost.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Missouri will tell the gentleman that it is going to be the finest airport in the world. Furthermore, in building airports the gentleman from Missouri is in favor of building airports to take care of our needs 25 years from now as well as today.

Mr. RICH. So am I; but when we build airports we ought to do it with the idea in mind that we are going to do it in an economical, businesslike way. When we start digging out rivers, and indulging in building a very expensive airport, I do not think that is good business.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to protect more adequately the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, and to add further to its memorial character, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to carry out the following transactions with the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation:

(a) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States of America a good and sufficient title in fee simple, free of all encumbrances, to that piece of land lying along the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway beginning approximately opposite highway station 242 and extending to station 247, as surveyed by the Public Roads Administration, and as shown on sheet 154 of the Alexandria, Va., assessment maps as block 1, lot 1, containing twenty-three and five-tenths acres, more or less, in consideration for the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War permitting the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, its successors and assigns, to remove the sand and gravel from the same number of acres situated in the Potomac River adjacent thereto as shown on plan No. 105.22–414 in the files of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission for a period of 20 years.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to acquire certain lands in exchange for certain dredging and other rights on land already owned by the United States on the east side of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway in Fairfax County, Va., extending from approximately station 426 to station 516+50, shown as areas "A," "B," "C," and "D" on plan No. 105.22–415 in the files of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and more particularly set forth as follows:

(1) To accept on behalf of the United States of America a good and sufficient title in fee simple, free of all encumbrances, to that piece of land lying on the east side of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and extending from approximately opposite station 459 to station 516+50, approximately five thousand seven hundred and fifty feet in length and averaging approximately eight hundred feet in width, and containing one hundred and ten acres, more or less, and as further shown as area "A" on said plan.

(2) To accept on behalf of the United States of America a good and sufficient title in fee simple, free of all encumbrances, to area "D" lying between area "A" and the Potomac River, and containing one hundred and fifty acres, more or less; the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation reserving unto itself, its successors and assigns, the right to remove sand and gravel therefrom for a period of 30 years, and for the same period reserving such riparian rights as may exist in area "D."

(3) To permit the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, its successors and assigns, to remove sand and gravel from that part of United States property lying east of area "B" and opposite station 426 to 459, to the extent of eighty-five acres, more or less, of the total one hundred and ten acres in area "C," as shown on said plan, for a period of 20 years, and for the same period granting such riparian rights as may exist in this area.

(4) To require that the scope of dredging operations necessary to remove the sand and gravel in areas "C" and "D" be so limited and conducted as not to undermine the adjacent shores of areas "A" and to provide that the Government shall have the right of ingress and egress from the Potomac River to the lands marked on the plan as areas "A" and "B" for the purpose of depositing dredged material in those areas; and to allow the workmen employed in the dredging operations at the locations described above, to have access to the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway for the purpose of going to and from work, and to park their cars at designated places.

(5) The Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to prescribe any other terms and conditions deemed necessary to protect the interests of the United States in the above transactions.

(c) All lands acquired by the United States pursuant to this act shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service as a part of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and shall be subject to all laws and rules and regulations applicable thereto.

With the following committee amendments:

"(c) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War are hereby further authorized to prescribe in any contract or contracts entered into pursuant hereto any other terms and conditions deemed necessary to protect the interests of the United States in the above transactions, and to delineate the exact area to be dredged as provided for in section (a).

"(d) All lands acquired by the United States pursuant to this act shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service as a part of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and shall be subject to all laws and rules and regulations applicable thereto.

"(e) All dredging shall be performed in accordance with plans recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War as provided in section 10 of River and Harbor Act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1151; 33 U. S. C. 403), as amended."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNUAL LABOR ON MINERAL CLAIMS, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2747, relative to annual labor on mineral claims in the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the Territory of Alaska a survey for patent purposes made by a United States mineral surveyor under order of the United States Cadastral Engineer may be credited upon annual labor required by law to be performed upon or for the benefit of the claim or claims for the year in which such survey is made, but in no case shall the credit for the cost of such survey and its attendant expense exceed the amount of the annual labor required for 1 year as to the claim or claims so surveyed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "surveyed", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the cost of such survey shall not be credited in determining the value of the labor or improvements required under section 2325, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 30, ch. 2, sec. 29)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: Page 1, line 3, after the word "the" and before the word "Territory", insert "continental United States and the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEASING LANDS ON PORT MADISON AND SNOHOMISH OR TALALIP INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 253, to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. When Calendar 916 was called, did the amendment offered make this bill applicable to the whole of the continental United States? There was so much confusion that I do not know what was going on. I ask the Speaker whether the amendment offered to H. R. 2747, Calendar No. 916, made the bill applicable to the entire continental United States?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] to that bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: Page 1, line 3, after the word "the" and before the word "Territory", insert "continental United States and the."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand that amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the consideration of the present bill, I may say that in connection with the amendment offered to H. R. 2747, had the official objectors, or the unofficial objectors, or whatever we are classified, knew that the import of that amendment was to bring the entire mining industry of the United States under this act, we surely would have objected to the original consideration of the bill. I do not think it is fair to this House to legislate in that particular manner, and I wish that hereafter when there are amendments to bills known by the sponsors of the bill they would let us know so we can object, because otherwise we will object to every bill on this calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill S. 253?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, any Indian lands on the Port Madison and Snohomish or Tulalip Indian Reservations in the State of Washington, may be leased by the Indians with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, for a term not exceeding 25 years: Provided, however, That such leases may provide for renewal for an additional term not exceeding 25 years, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS IN OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2617, to authorize the leasing of the undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Chocktaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. If nobody here can explain the bill, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

MIAMI NATION OF INDIANS OF INDIANA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2306, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in all claims which the Miami Indians of Indiana who are organized and incorporated as the Miami Nation of Indians of Indiana may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was reported on August 20, 1940. I have in my hand the report filed by the committee with the bill. The report contains a letter from the General Accounting Office and from the Department of the Interior, but it does not contain the letter from the Attorney General, who objects to many features of this bill. The Attorney General's letter is dated July 13, 1939, written to the chairman of the committee. Why is that letter not included in the report? Surely the House is entitled to the views of the Department of Justice. The Attorney General points out the disadvantages to the Government in his communication. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

AMENDING THE WHEELER-HOWARD ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2103, to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"None of the provisions of this act shall apply to (1) any Indian tribe on the Standing Rock Reservation located in the States of North and South Dakota; (2) the Pine Ridge Sioux Tribe of Indians of the State of South Dakota; (3) the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe of Indians of the State of South Dakota; (4) the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians, of the Rosebud Agency of the State of South Dakota; (5) any Indian on any reservation or any Indian tribe or group, located in the State of Nevada; (6) the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians located in the State of North Carolina; (7) any Indian tribe, band, or group, located in the State of California; (8) any Indian or Indian tribe on the Colorado River Indian Reservation of the State of Arizona; or (9) the Navajo tribe located in the State of New Mexico."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 2 of the act of June 15, 1935 (49 Stat. 378), entitled "An act to define the election procedure under the act of June 18, 1934, and for other purposes," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to hold an election on the question of whether any Indian reservation shall be excluded from, or included within, the application of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), upon receipt of a petition for such an election signed by one-third of the adult Indians of the reservation.

"(b) The result of such election shall determine whether the said act of June 18, 1934, shall apply, continue to apply, or cease to apply, to such reservation.

"(c) When any such election has been held, no similar election shall be held on the same reservation for a period of 2 years.

"(d) In the event that the Indians of any reservation, having voted that the act of June 18, 1934, shall apply to the said reservation, have secured a charter of incorporation or adopted a tribal constitution under the said act, such Indians may take such action as is required by law to annul such charter, to rescind such constitution, and to discharge or liquidate all corporate or tribal obligations entered into pursuant to such charter or constitution, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, all obligations embodied in corporate or tribal loan agreements, trust agreements, leases of tribal land, permits, timber contracts, attorney contracts, land assignments, contracts for the acquisition of land, and contracts for personal services; and no election requiring the exclusion of any such reservation from the said act shall be effective until the prescribed action has been taken and all obligations of the character specified have been discharged or liquidated and a proclamation by the Secretary of the Interior so declares.

"(e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $20,000 in any fiscal year to defray the expenses of elections held under this act.

"(f) This act shall not apply to any reservation in the State of Oklahoma or in the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota to the committee amendment: At the end of line 24 on page 2 insert "or any certain sections thereof," and on page 3 in line 4, after "said act of June 18, 1934" insert "or any certain sections thereof."

TO PERMIT THE INDIANS TO CHOOSE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this amendment has been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] who, I understand, is the author of the committee amendment to the Senate bill, which now comes before us as a substitute. The amendment which I have offered is agreeable to them. It is needed to preserve equity and justice for the Indians.

My amendment has two purposes. The first purpose is to make it possible for an Indian tribe to preserve for itself those portions of the act of June 18, 1934, which it may have found workable and helpful while discarding those portions which have been found unsuited to its particular situation. The second purpose is to make it possible for an Indian tribe that has not accepted the act to come under those portions of the act which it believes will be beneficial even though it may not believe the entire act to be suitable.

Under the first purpose, it is my intention to preserve, for example, certain rights of the Sioux Tribes, known as Sioux benefits, and originally established by law in 1889, to carry out certain treaty provisions, and subsequently confirmed and extended by other legislation, including the act of May 22, 1928 as well as the act of June 18, 1934. Obviously, it would be unfair to the Sioux to impair their Sioux benefits in any way as the price of their voting to remove themselves from the act. Under my amendment, the Sioux should be able to vote to exclude themselves from or to include themselves within, portions of the act without affecting the sections which apply to Sioux benefits.

Under the second purpose, it is my thought that the educational loans and the revolving-fund loans, to mention two examples, are portions of the act of June 18, 1934, which many tribes desire who object to the form of Indian organization required under other sections. Surely the Congress has no desire to make these loan funds a bribe to get Indians to go into a form of social organization that is distasteful to some of them. The ability to use a loan wisely is largely a matter of the individual's ability. The purpose of the loans is to give the Indian a chance to stand on his own feet and to improve his ability to do so. Should the Indians who can use such a loan to advantage be denied the opportunity because his reservation does not want to accept a community form of social or political organization? I am sure that Congress has no intention of maintaining a discrimination among the several reservations on this point. My amendment is intended to make it possible for the loan provisions to be applied to a reservation without requiring the acceptance of the organization and charter features.

Mr. Speaker, some of the trouble under the Indian Reorganization Act has been the attempt to make one coat fit all Indians. But the Indian people on different reservations vary greatly in habits, customs, lands, climate, training, and inheritance. They need coats of different sizes, weights, and colors. I realize that a small amendment of a few words cannot accomplish everything, but I believe this will help. It is designed to let the Indians select for themselves those parts of the act of June 18, 1934, which seem suited and helpful to them and to permit themselves to shake off or leave off those parts of the act which they feel produce quarrels, confusion, and discord. The basic act is not a balanced, unified act. Those who have studied its history know and understand why it is not.

The bill as reported by the committee would only permit reservations to vote on applying or withdrawing from the act as a whole. My amendment extends that principle of choice and decision by the Indians to the sections of the act. I think it will reduce the trouble that has developed on the one hand while extending the good on the other. I realize that very few Members have Indian reservations in their districts and this legislation and discussion of it means little to them. I have five reservations in my district, two of them among the largest in the country. I assure you that the Indians are a loyal, earnest body of American citizens. I earnestly hope that the Congress will give them the opportunity for self-determination which this bill and my amendment seek to provide.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to define the election procedure under the act of June 18, 1934, and for other purposes.' "

AMENDING SECTION 204 OF THE TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10098, to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, whatever the merits of this bill may be it is going to cost the Government $1,800,000, and for that reason, it being on the Consent Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

SEAMEN'S PROTECTION CERTIFICATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10381, to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the chairman of the committee will explain what this bill does?

Mr. BLAND. The sole purpose of this bill is to get rid of some old statutes that are merely confusing now, and that require the collector of customs to give certain certification as to seamen. We have on the statutes now authority whereby they must proceed in a regular way to be identified and licensed. This creates a confusion in the law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. One of the sections to be repealed provides for the issuance of seamen's protection certificates, and the other provides for the continuous-discharge book. Is the information which is contained in the seamen's protection certificates and the continuous-discharge book provided for at the present time?

Mr. BLAND. It is provided for now under penalties and regulation. The provisions in the statutes sought to be repealed confuse the situation inasmuch as they call for a protection certificate that does not comply with the regulations we have later put upon the books.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 686 and 687), be and they are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. All certificates heretofore issued to seamen under the authority of section 4588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby declared void.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 267) providing for acquisition by the Railroad Retirement Board of data needed in carrying out the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Acts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman about the $9,000,000 that is involved? Where is it coming from, and will it ultimately result in further appropriations by the United States Government?

Mr. LEA. The expense of the Retirement Board is maintained by direct appropriations by the Federal Government, but the employees contribute half of that fund and the railroads contribute the other half. Under the law, the direct contribution is made from the Federal Treasury on the theory that it is necessary to do so to make the act constitutional, but the fund is reimbursed by the men and by the railroads.

Mr. KEAN. As this would result in a large annual contribution by the United States Government, a contribution of more than the $1,000,000 which we figure is the right amount to allow to pass on the Consent Calendar, I must ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] that this is not intended as an annual appropriation, it is an appropriation which will make possible the compilation of information in order to bring the railroadman's record up to date. When that feat is accomplished it is then incumbent upon the railroad management to keep every employee's record up to date. Under present conditions sometimes a period of 6 to 9 months is consumed by the railroads and the Railroad Retirement Board in assembling information so as to perfect a retirement application. When this money is expended, a period of 2 years will have elapsed and the record of every railroad employee in the United States will be up to date enabling the Railroad Retirement Board to adjudicate a retirement claim within 15 days. Incidentally the work of compiling these records will employ many furloughed employees and will be of twofold value in benefiting all railroad employees and aiding those unemployed.

Mr. KEAN. In answer to the gentleman may I say that I agree with him that it is a good bill, but it is on the Consent Calendar and we have made a rule that large items shall not be passed on the Consent Calendar. I must insist on my request.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Surely the gentleman recalls that a moment ago the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. LEA] informed the House that the Government is not paying the bill. While it is true an appropriation is being asked for, the Federal Treasury will be reimbursed by a form of tax paid jointly by the railroads and their employees.

Mr. KEAN. He says that it is.

Mr. LEA. The Government pays it in the first instance, and the money is supposed to be recouped by the contributions made by the men and by the railroads.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. In other words, the employees and the railroad management pay the bill.

Mr. CROSSER. If the gentleman will yield, may I say that both the men and the management are for this bill.

Mr. KEAN. I now understand from the gentleman that the $9,000,000 would entirely be returned to the United States Government by the railroads and the men, so this will not result in any ultimate payment by the United States Government.

Mr. LEA. That is the theory of the law at the present time.

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas complete records of all service and compensation which may be creditable toward benefits under the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 and the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 are required for the administration of said acts; and

Whereas such records with respect to service prior to January 1, 1937, are largely in the possession of employers subject to said acts and are constantly subject to the danger of loss or destruction; and

Whereas the loss or destruction of such records would jeopardize the establishment of the rights of individuals to annuities based in whole or in part on such prior service and would otherwise severely and permanently impede and impair the administration of said acts, and the danger of loss or destruction presents a serious emergency; and

Whereas the prompt transcription, compilation, and filing with the Railroad Retirement Board of such records will remove the data contained therein from the danger of their loss or destruction and will make them expeditiously and permanently available for necessary operations of the Railroad Retirement Board and will result in a more efficient and economical administration of the said acts: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That each employer subject to the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, and each other company, association, or person (hereinafter referred to as the "other company") who is in possession of such data as are hereinafter described, shall immediately begin collecting and shall furnish currently as completed and not later than June 30, 1943, shall have completed furnishing to the Railroad Retirement Board (hereinafter called "the Board") in such form as the Board may prescribe, certified reports of all data with respect to service and compensation prior to January 1, 1937, corresponding in substance with that which has heretofore been required by the Board for the adjudication of claims for annuities under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 and the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, and which can be obtained from the records in the possession of such employer or other company.

SEC. 2. The Board is hereby authorized and directed to establish a uniform reasonable rate of payment to which employers or other companies are entitled for the furnishing of the reports required by section 1 of this joint resolution to be furnished which rate shall not result in payment to any employer or other company of any amount in excess of 50 cents multiplied by the aggregate number of man-years of service established and verified by such employer or other company and reported to the Board in accordance with section 1 of this joint resolution. The Board shall, from time to time, determine, and certify on proper voucher to the Secretary of the Treasury, the amount of payment due to each employer or other company pursuant to this section: Provided, however, That no payment shall be certified or made with respect to any item in such reports as concerns the record of employees 65 years of age or over who have filed application for annuity, or with respect to any report not furnished on or before June 30, 1943. Upon such certification, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such amount to such employer or other company from the special fund hereinafter established. Whenever any employer or other company furnishes through any other employer or other company any report required by the first section of this joint resolution to be furnished, the Board may certify the payment to be made to the employer or other company through whom such report is furnished, and payment in accordance with such certification shall discharge all obligations arising hereunder with respect to such report.

SEC. 3. If any employer or other company fails to exercise due care and diligence in carrying out its duties under this joint resolution, the Board, by its employees, may transcribe the necessary data from records in the possession of such employer or other company, which records shall be made available as the Board may require, and no payment shall be due to any employer or other company for or on account of any records transcribed by employees of the Board.

SEC. 4. Reports, records, and data acquired by the Board pursuant to this joint resolution shall be so assembled and processed by the Board as to provide as nearly as practicable a complete record, by individuals, of all service and compensation prior to January 1, 1937, creditable under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935. The Board shall take steps reasonably calculated to give notice of such record to each individual with respect to whom such record is established. Direct communication, transmission to employers for delivery, public advertisement, or such other means as the Board may determine, shall constitute due notice to all such individuals: Provided, however, That unless the Board's records show that actual notice was received through other means by an individual for whom the Board has an address on file and such notice is evidenced by a receipt signed by such individual, notice to such individual shall include the mailing of notice to the last address on file with the Board. Whenever the Board shall determine that reasonable notice has been given it shall so find and shall enter such finding upon its records. Such finding may be made with respect to all individuals or, from time to time, with respect to described classes of individuals. Any record established as hereinabove provided, which is not contested within 2 years after the finding of reasonable notice hereinabove provided for has been entered upon the records of the Board, shall be presumed to include all service rendered and compensation earned prior to January 1, 1937, by the individual to whom such record relates, and, unless shown by new and manifestly convincing evidence to be clearly erroneous, shall be conclusive: Provided, however, That such record shall in no wise restrict the authority of the Board to determine, upon the filing of an application for an annuity, that some or all of the service or compensation so recorded is not service or compensation as said terms are defined in the Railroad Retirement Acts or that under the provisions of the applicable Railroad Retirement Act some or all of the service or compensation so recorded is not to be used in the computation of an annuity. The Board may also take steps, through publication or otherwise, reasonably calculated to give notice of the carrying out of this joint resolution to individuals with respect to whom no record of service or compensation is established. Whenever the Board shall determine that such steps have been taken it shall so find and shall enter such findings upon its records. With respect to each individual who does not, within 2 years after such finding has been entered upon the records of the Board, request the establishment of a record of his service and compensation, the fact that no such record is established shall be presumed to show that such individual, prior to January 1, 1937, rendered no service and earned no compensation as said terms are defined in the applicable Railroad Retirement Act, and such presumption shall be rebuttable only by new and manifestly convincing evidence showing it to be clearly erroneous.

SEC. 5. The Board is hereby authorized to promulgate such orders, rules, and regulations as in its judgment are necessary or proper to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution. All powers and remedies including legal processes available to the Board under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 for the administration of said act shall be similarly available to the Board for the carrying out of this joint resolution.

SEC. 6. In order to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution, there shall be set aside on July 1, 1940, in a special fund $9,000,000 of the amount appropriated to the Railroad Retirement Account by the Railroad Retirement Board Appropriation Act, 1941, such fund to remain available until June 30, 1943, for expenditure in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this joint resolution. Any unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, in the special fund hereby established shall revert to the railroad retirement account.

SEC. 7. No provision of this joint resolution shall be construed in any manner to limit or impair any authority, power, or discretion conferred upon or vested in the Board by the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, or the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10012, to amend the act of June 25, 1938, extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and under that reservation I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this is a bad bill. The bill is an antimerit system, political-spoils system bill, and it was no doubt originally introduced in order to O. K. and approve of positive willful violations of the law by the United States Civil Service Commission and the Post Office Department.

In the district which I have the honor to represent there is located a Veterans' Administration hospital and home at Wood, Wis. Wood, Wis., has a separate post office and its own postmaster, and the city of Milwaukee post office has nothing to do with its operation. A civil-service examination was held in order to establish an eligible list from which to appoint a postmaster at Wood, Wis. An eligible list was established by the United States Civil Service Commission. Three World War veterans with disability preference qualified in the examination, and their names appeared on the eligible list which was established by the United States Civil Service Commission. Two of those on the eligible list which was certified to the Post Office Department by the United States Civil Service Commission were war veterans with a veteran's disability preference, who were bona fide residents at Wood, Wis., within the territory served by the Wood post office and patrons of the Wood, Wis., post office. The third veteran on said eligible list who was appointed postmaster at Wood, Wis., was a resident of West Allis, Wis., and a patron of the West Allis, Wis., post office.

Mr. Speaker, section 2 of the act of June 25, 1938, under which the postmaster at Wood, Wis., is appointed, provides that—

> No person shall be eligible for appointment under this section unless such person has actually resided within the delivery of the office to which he is appointed, or within the city or town where the same is situated for 1 year next preceding the date of such appointment, if the appointment is made without competitive examination; or for 1 year preceding the date fixed for the close of receipt of applications for examination, if the appointment is made after competitive examination.

Mr. Speaker, this mandatory requirement of the act of June 1938 is clear and unmistakable. Mr. Earl Judkins, of West Allis, Wis., was appointed postmaster at Wood, Wis., in clear violation of the specific provisions of law. He had not resided within the delivery of the Wood, Wis., post office or within the city or the town where such post office is situated for 1 year preceding the date fixed for the close of receipt of applications for the civil-service examination. The Wood, Wis., post office and the territory which it serves is within the corporate limits of the city of Milwaukee, Wis. West Allis, Wis., is an independent municipality, and the Wood, Wis., post office is not situated within its corporate limits.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the pending bill was introduced in order to legalize the illegal appointment of a carpetbagger postmaster for the Wood, Wis., post office. This political-spoils system of appointing carpetbagger postmasters in clear violation of clear and unmistakable provisions of law is indefensible and reprehensible, and I do not want to put my approval on it by consenting to the consideration and passage of this bill.

I, for one, intend to oppose this bill and object to its consideration today. Should it come before us in the future, I sincerely hope that all of those who talk much in favor of the selective civil-service merit system in the Halls of Congress and outside of the Halls of Congress will help me give this bill the kiss of death.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress should not legalize an illegal act in the appointment of a carpetbagger postmaster in a Veterans' Administration facility when we have two qualified war veterans with service-incurred disabilities on the eligible list who meet the residence requirements of the law applicable to postmaster appointments.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman is correct in his facts and if the gentleman will report the matter to the Comptroller General the postmaster will not be paid. I am just as much in favor of carrying out the law as is the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am correct in my facts, and when I return to Wisconsin I intend to have a court action taken to prevent the expenditure of public funds for a postmaster's salary who is specifically prohibited by law from being appointed postmaster.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman does not have to bring any court action.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I shall take this matter up with the Comptroller General, and if it is necessary take it to court in order that the clear and specific law of the land is not violated in importing a carpetbagger, political-spoils-system, political-henchman postmaster into a Veterans' Administration facility when two veterans who have service disabilities reside within the limits of the post office and their names appear on the eligible list established by the United States Civil Service Commission.

I am fearful that this bill might legalize that illegal appointment at Wood, Wis.

Mr. RAMSPECK. This bill has nothing to do with that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I will object to the bill's consideration today, and I will then take it up with the gentleman, and if he can show me that it will not legalize this illegal appointment of a carpetbagger postmaster at Wood, Wis., I shall withdraw my objection to its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I object to the present consideration of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDMENT OF MOTOR CARRIER ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10398, to amend part II of the Interstate Commerce Act (the Motor Carrier Act, 1935), as amended, so as to make certain provisions thereof applicable to freight forwarders.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PROHIBITION FROM OFFICIAL BALLOT OF POLITICAL PARTIES ADVOCATING OVERTHROW OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next business, House Concurrent Resolution 55, recommending to the States the prohibition from official ballot of political parties advocating overthrow of the Government of the United States by force.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow by force of the form of government of the United States established by the Constitution should not be recognized as a political entity, and the Congress recommends to the several State legislatures the enactment of legislation prohibiting the recognition of any such political party or organization on the official ballot of such States for the election to any office within such States, and for the choice of electors of the President and Vice President of the United States and for the election of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The concurrent resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RENTALS IN CERTAIN OIL AND GAS LEASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10402, to amend the act relating to rentals in certain oil and gas leases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. HORTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is aware of the fact that if this is allowed to go over without prejudice, there will never be another time during this session when this bill can be brought up?

Mr. COSTELLO. Personally, I am opposed to the enactment of the legislation. As a matter of fact, this proposition was brought before the House scarcely more than a month or so ago. The House had reported out a bill with the approval of the Department of the Interior. The House committee then offered an amendment to do the very thing that this bill which is now on the calendar attempts to do. That amendment was turned down by the House, and the bill in the unamended form was passed and approved by the President. Now the gentleman is bringing in another bill to try to force upon the House the adoption of an amendment that the House has already rejected.

At the time that bill was on the calendar I raised objection to the amendment. Under the terms of the original bill it was provided that those who went out and obtained mining leases would have to make the first year's rental payment on that lease and the requirement to make payment in the second and third years would be waived. Under the terms of the present bill a person who would make his lease would not have to pay anything during the first and second years and then would only be called up to make payment to the Government in the third year. In other words, if he did not find oil or gas or some other mineral upon the ground during the first 2 years he could vacate the property and abandon it and he would have to pay out nothing for the use thereof. There is no benefit to the Government in that sort of proposal. It is putting the cart before the horse. If the Government is going to receive anything out of these leases it should require that the person should make rental payments the first year and not wait until the third year.

Mr. HORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HORTON. The gentleman is quite right in the purpose of the bill. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the amendment was a committee amendment and passed unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. I do not know of anyone excepting the gentleman from California and the Department of the Interior who is opposed to this bill. This is an opportunity and this is an effort to give the little fellow a chance to develop for himself something on the public domain. If he is not relieved of the necessity of paying these rentals for the first year, it does not give him, the little fellow, a chance. Otherwise you give the big fellow all the opportunities and the little fellow who does the wildcatting loses everything he has. Do you not honestly think that now, when we are engaged in national defense, when we are trying to find out where these strategic materials are, that the little wildcatter ought to be given an even break, especially since he is the fellow who spends his own money and really makes these discoveries? That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. As a matter of fact, you would not be benefiting the small man at all any more than you would the big company, because the big oil companies who want to go out and prospect this land for new development would be able to get persons to go out and make these leases and make the preliminary investigations, and the oil companies would not have to put up a single penny. Now, if in this country we were suffering from a shortage of gas and oil, then we might be anxious to offer every inducement to people to go out and discover new oil fields. But we are not suffering from that sort of situation. As a matter of fact, we are suffering from overproduction of oil and gas.

Mr. HORTON. The gentleman will admit that it is a good thing to find out where this oil is? He knows that 90 percent of the oil discoveries have been done by wildcatters?

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the legislation we have already enacted was a very liberal grant on the part of the Government, whereby we waived the second and third year's rental requirements. Frankly I cannot see any justification for any person taking a lease for 3 years and not being obligated to pay for the first 2 years. Only in the third year, if he discovers anything, is he going to pay anything. I do not think the legislation is necessary, and for that reason I am going to insist on the bill being passed over.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Committee on Public Lands, which consists of a membership which is supposed to know a great deal about public lands and the development of oil and which knows the handicaps that the oil prospector is up against, considered this amendment on two different occasions. They unanimously reported this bill out. I think it has a great deal of merit because, in the first place, unless oil is struck he loses his money. It has cost the prospector not only his time, but in addition to that whatever revenue or money he could pick up in the meantime. So it seems to me it would simply go a little way in helping the little fellow. The big fellow is able to take care of himself, he does not need any assistance from the Government. As suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming it is the small prospector for whose benefit this bill is designed.

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the gentleman would find that the large companies would benefit as much as the little fellows, frequently more so, because they would engage more people to go out and prospect the leases for them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

CITIZENSHIP OWNERSHIP OF VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7694, to require vessels engaged in the coastwise trade and in the whaling or other fisheries to be wholly owned by citizens of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have talked with the chairman of the committee in connection with this bill. The bill is drafted, I am informed, in such way that the situation in respect to the so-called railroad-car ferries operating in the Great Lakes connecting their own lines is not protected definitely. The Grand Trunk Western Railway, for example, have connecting ferries which have been running from time immemorial. I do not believe it is the intention of the committee to stop the operation of these car ferries. The Grand Trunk Western Railway stock is owned largely by the Canadian National Railways. Has the gentleman an amendment to correct this situation?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is right. There is nothing in the present bill except section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920. It was thought we had entirely covered the situation, but it was brought to our attention afterward that we had not. This morning we adopted an amendment which was acceptable to the Great Lakes interests as entirely taking care of that situation.

We also adopted one or two other amendments this morning.

The general purpose of this act is one that has been sought for a number of years involving a situation regarding ownership of coastwise vessels requiring them to be American-owned, yet we have not covered it as we did in 1916. Under that act the vessels could operate provided they were manned by American officers. We have taken care of that situation so as to require American ownership.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then do I understand the gentleman intends to offer an amendment covering the Great Lakes car ferries situation?

Mr. BLAND. I shall offer one for that very purpose. There are three amendments to be offered to this bill. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that at this time these three amendments may be reported for the information of the House before the objecting stage is passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the proposed amendments be reported for information?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Page 13, strike out lines 16 to 19, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) a resident of the United States who is not a citizen of the United States but who is a citizen of any insular possession of the United States whose citizens owe allegiance to the United States."

Amendment No. 2: Page 16, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

"(e) Seagoing vessels of foreign build hereafter certified by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries, with the Philippine Islands, the islands of Guam, Tutuila, Wake, Midway, and Kingman Reef; and if found otherwise engaged, such vessels shall be forfeited: Provided, however, That no such vessel shall hereafter be admitted to registry as a 'vessel of the United States' unless the admission to registry thereof shall be approved jointly by the United States Maritime Commission, the Navy Department, and the Department of Commerce after consultation by the Maritime Commission with the State Department and such other agencies as the Maritime Commission may deem advisable and, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall be found to be in the interest of the foreign trade or the national defense of the United States."

Amendment No. 3: Page 18, line 21, after "SEC. 11", insert "(a)."

"(b) The right of any vessel to engage in transportation which prior to the enactment of this act would be permitted only by the second proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, and to be documented under the laws of the United States for the purpose of engaging only in such transportation, or the right of any foreign vessel to engage in such transportation, shall, notwithstanding any provision of this act or of any amendment made by this act, be determined as if this act had not been enacted: Provided, however, That such vessel, if so documented under the laws of the United States, shall be forfeited if used in transportation not permitted by the second proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended: Provided further, That such vessel, if not a vessel of the United States, shall be subject to all of the applicable provisions of this act, and amendments made by this act, if used in any other transportation than that permitted by the second proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended.

"(c) In the case of a car ferry complying with all of the conditions and requirements of the last proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, except the requirement relating to documentation, notwithstanding any other provision of this act, or of any amendment made by this act, the right of such car ferry to be documented under the laws of the United States for the purpose of engaging only in transportation permitted by that proviso, and only as a part of rail routes permitted by that proviso, and to engage in such transportation, shall be determined as if this act had not been enacted: Provided, however, That such car ferry, if so documented and used in transportation not permitted by such proviso, or if so documented and operated over any route not permitted by such proviso, shall be forfeited."

Mr. BLAND (interrupting the reading of the third amendment). I may say that this is the amendment that takes care of the Grand Trunk situation and provides that they may continue just as they are now without interference.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Can the gentleman inform us whether this will allow the reequipping of these ferry facilities?

Mr. BLAND. The next section relates to the ferry facilities and this operation of the railroads which are under the Interstate Commerce Commission. They were permitted, as to certain operations, to retain the status just as it is now.

It retains the status quo just as it is now, both as to those and as to the next amendment, the car-ferry amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And the putting on of new ferries and the junking of old?

Mr. BLAND. Just so long as they do not extend the service. Present operations are all right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On two different times the Grand Trunk ferries have been referred to. There is not anything in this proposal to interfere in any way with the Ann Arbor proposition?

Mr. BLAND. We are protecting them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And all the other lines that operate across the Great Lakes?

Mr. BLAND. We are protecting them with these amendments. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that on page 16 "e" and "f" be made "f" and "g." This is a renumbering of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BLAND. That in addition to the amendments which have already been submitted, the following amendment be permitted: On line 16, page 15, "e" be changed to "f", and on page 19, "f" be changed to "g." We have inserted a new section "e" and a renumbering is necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that is on page 16, line 15.

Mr. BLAND. Yes. That should be changed to "f." On page 16, line 19, "f" should be changed to "g."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4311. (a) Vessels of 20 net tons and upward, enrolled in pursuance of this title (R. S. 4311–4390; U. S. C., title 46, secs. 251–356) and having a license in force, or vessels of less than 20 tons but not less than 5 net tons, which, although not enrolled, have a license in force, as required by this title, and no others, shall be deemed vessels of the United States entitled to engage in the coasting trade or fisheries. Any vessel other than as defined above found engaged in the coasting trade or fisheries shall, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and equipment, be forfeited: Provided, That the penalty prescribed by this section shall not apply to undocumented vessels of less than 5 net tons, built in and wholly owned by citizens of the United States and operated by crews at least 50 percent of which, excluding the person in charge, shall be citizens of the United States: Provided further, That such penalty shall not apply to vessels built in the United States and which, on the effective date of this act, are owned by aliens lawfully admitted as residents therein, which vessels are engaged solely in the fisheries until on and after 6 years from the date of the approval of this act: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any existing laws relating to the kind of documents necessary for vessels engaged in the coasting trade or whale fisheries.

"(b) Within the meaning and for the purposes of this section, and of the navigation laws of the United States regulating the registry, enrollment and licensing, and licensing of vessels as contained in titles XLVIII and L of the Revised Statutes of the United States and amendments thereto (chs. 1 and 12, U. S. C., title 46), and the numbering of undocumented vessels propelled in whole or in part by machinery as provided by the act of June 7, 1918 (40 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of August 5, 1935 (49 Stat. 526) (U. S. C. 288, title 46), the term 'citizen (or citizens) of the United States' shall, whenever used therein, be defined as follows:

"(1) As applied to individuals it shall be held to include only those persons whose citizenship has been legally acquired by virtue of birth or who have been completely naturalized in accordance with the laws of the United States.

"(2) Firms, partnerships, companies, organizations, and associations (other than corporations) shall be deemed citizens of the United States only if the entire ownership, interest, control, and management of such is vested solely in persons who are citizens of the United States as defined in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) A corporation shall be deemed a cititzen of the United States only if it is organized and chartered under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, the corporate officers and directors are citizens of the United States as hereinbefore defined, and not less than 51 percent of the voting stock of such corporation is owned by persons who are citizens of the United States and is free from any trust or obligation of any kind whatsoever in favor of any person not a citizen of the United States; but in case of a corporation operating a vessel in the coasting trade or in the whaling or other fisheries not less than 75 percent of the voting stock must be owned by persons who are citizens of the United States and is free from any trust or obligation of any kind whatsoever in favor of any person not a citizen of the United States: Provided, That after the effective date of this act no certificate of registry, certificate of enrollment and license, license, or certificate of award of number to an undocumented vessel shall be issued to any vessel not wholly owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States: And provided further, That 6 years from the effective date of this act all such documents, including certificates of award of numbers to undocumented vessels, which have been issued prior to the passage and approval of this act to vessels the ownership of which is not in accordance with the provisions of this act, and which are outstanding at the end of the 6-year period above fixed, shall become null and void and shall be taken up and canceled, and any such vessel thereafter operated in violation of the ownership requirements of this act, unless the same shall have been lawfully transferred to foreign registry, shall be seized and forfeited."

SEC. 2. That section 4131 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (46 U. S. C. 221), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4131. Vessels registered pursuant to law and no others, except such as shall be duly qualified according to law for carrying on the coasting or fishing trade, and except yachts licensed under the provisions of section 4214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 103), shall be deemed 'vessels of the United States', and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels; but no such vessel shall enjoy such benefits and privileges longer than it shall continue to be wholly owned by persons who are citizens of the United States, either native born or completely naturalized, or by corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or district thereof, the corporate officers and directors of which are citizens of the United States as hereinbefore defined, and not less than 51 percent of the voting stock of such corporation is owned by persons who are citizens of the United States and is free from any trust or obligation of any kind whatsoever in favor of any person who is not a citizen of the United States; but in case of a corporation operating a vessel in the coasting trade or in the whaling or other fisheries not less than 75 percent of the voting stock shall be so owned; and all 'vessels of the United States,' as herein defined, shall be commanded by persons who are citizens of the United States. All the officers of 'vessels of the United States' who shall have charge of a watch, including pilots, shall in all cases except as otherwise expressly provided by law be citizens of the United States. The word 'officers' shall include all engineers in charge of a watch; and, except as otherwise expressly provided for by law, no person shall be qualified to hold a license as a commander or watch officer of a 'vessel of the United States' who is not a native-born citizen or whose naturalization as a citizen shall not have been fully completed. In cases where, on a foreign voyage, any such vessel is for any reason deprived of the services of an officer below the grade of master, his place, or a vacancy caused by the promotion of another officer to such place, may be supplied by a person not a citizen of the United States until the arrival of the vessel at the first port in the United States; and such vessel shall not be liable to any penalty or penal tax for such employment of an alien officer."

SEC. 3. That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (46 U. S. C. 11), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4132. The following-described vessels shall, unless otherwise disqualified by law, be entitled to be registered as 'vessels of the United States':

"(a) Vessels built within the United States.

"(b) Vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize.

"(c) Vessels which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States.

"(d) Seagoing vessels of foreign build which have been certified by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo may be admitted to registry as 'vessels of the United States' for trade only with foreign countries, the Philippine Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, and if found otherwise engaged such vessels shall be forfeited: Provided, That no vessel described in this section shall be admitted to registry as a 'vessel of the United States' unless wholly owned by persons who are citizens of the United States, either native-born or whose naturalization shall have been fully completed, or by corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or district thereof, the corporate officers and directors of which corporation are citizens of the United States as above defined, and not less than 51 percent of the voting stock of such corporation is owned by citizens of the United States and is free from any trust or obligation of any kind whatsoever in favor of any person not a citizen of the United States; but in case of a corporation operating any vessel in the coasting trade or in the whaling or other fisheries not less than 75 percent of the voting stock shall be so owned."

SEC. 4. That section 4137 of the Revised Statutes (46 U. S. C. 15) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4137. Registers for vessels owned by any incorporated company may be issued in the name of the president or secretary of such company, and such register shall not be vacated or affected by sales of any shares of stock in such company if such sales do not result in alien ownership or control, directly or indirectly, of a percentage of such stock in excess of the amount permitted by any law relating to the ownership of vessels registered pursuant to the laws of the United States."

SEC. 5. That section 4313 of the Revised Statutes (46 U. S. C. 253) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4313. Enrollments and licenses for vessels owned by any incorporated company may be issued in the name of the president or secretary of such company, and such enrollments or licenses shall not be vacated or affected by any sale of shares of stock of such company if such sales do not result in alien ownership or control, either directly or indirectly, of a percentage of such stock in excess of the amount permitted by any law relating to the ownership of vessels enrolled and licensed or licensed for the coasting trade or for the whaling or other fisheries."

SEC. 6. That section 1 of the act of June 7, 1918, as amended by the act of August 5, 1935 (49 Stat. 526; 46 U. S. C. 288), is hereby amended by substituting a colon for the period at the end of the section and adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, That no numbers shall be awarded to vessels under the provisions of this act which are not wholly owned by persons who are citizens of the United States, either native-born or whose naturalization shall have been fully completed, or by corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or district thereof, the corporate officers and directors of which corporation are citizens of the United States, and not less than 75 percent of the voting stock of such corporation is owned by persons who are citizens of the United States and is free from any trust or obligation of any kind whatsoever in favor of any person who is not a citizen of the United States."

SEC. 7. That wherever in this act and in the sections of law herein amended the words "person" or "persons" are used in connection with the ownership of vessels they shall be held to include individuals, firms, partnerships, companies, organizations, and associations (other than corporations).

SEC. 8. The Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate appropriate regulations for effectuating the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. Except as herein otherwise provided this act shall become effective on the date of approval thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That within the meaning and for the purposes of this act, and of the laws of the United States regulating the registry, enrollment and licensing, and licensing of vessels as contained in titles XLVIII and L of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and in acts supplementary thereto, the term 'citizen (or citizens) of the United States' shall, wherever used therein, be defined as follows:

"(a) As applied to individuals it shall be held to include only those persons whose citizenship has been legally acquired by virtue of birth or who have been completely naturalized in accordance with the laws of the United States.

"(b) Firms, partnerships, companies, organizations, and associations (other than corporations) shall be deemed citizens of the United States only if the entire ownership, interest, control, and management of such is vested solely in persons who are citizens of the United States as defined in subsection (a) of this section.

"(c) No corporation shall be deemed a citizen of the United States unless the controlling interest therein is owned by citizens of the United States and unless its president and managing directors are citizens of the United States and the corporation itself is organized under the laws of the United States or of a State, Territory, district, or possession thereof, but in the case of a corporation operating any vessel in the coastwise trade or in the whaling or other fisheries the amount of interest required to be owned by citizens of the United States shall be 75 percent.

"(d) The controlling interest in a corporation shall not be deemed to be owned by citizens of the United States (1) if the title to a majority of the stock thereof is not vested in such citizens free from any trust or fiduciary obligation in favor of any person not a citizen of the United States; or (2) if the majority of the voting power in such corporation is not vested in citizens of the United States; or (3) if through any contract or understanding it is so arranged that the majority of the voting power may be exercised, directly or indirectly, in behalf of any person who is not a citizen of the United States; or (4) if by any other means whatsoever control of the corporation is conferred upon or permitted to be exercised by any person who is not a citizen of the United States.

"(e) Seventy-five percent of the interest in a corporation shall not be deemed to be owned by citizens of the United States (1) if the title to the 75 percent of its stock is not vested in such citizens free from any trust or fiduciary obligation in favor of any person not a citizen of the United States; or (2) if 75 percent of the voting power in such corporation is not vested in citizens of the United States; or (3) if, through any contract or understanding it is so arranged that more than 25 percent of the voting power in such corporation may be exercised, directly or indirectly, in behalf of any person who is not a citizen of the United States; or (4) if by any other means whatsoever control of any interest in the corporation in excess of 25 percent is conferred upon or permitted to be exercised by any person who is not a citizen of the United States.

"SEC. 2. Section 4311 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 251) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4311. (a) Vessels of 20 net tons and upward, enrolled and having a license in force, or vessels of less than 20 net tons but not less than 5 net tons, which, although not enrolled, have a license in force, registered vessels which are not prohibited by law from engaging in the coastwise trade or fisheries, undocumented vessels of less than 5 net tons built in and wholly owned by citizens of the United States, and no others, shall engage in the coastwise trade or in the whaling or other fisheries. Any vessel which engages in the coastwise trade or in the whaling or other fisheries in violation of this section shall, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and equipment, be forfeited. But, if the license of any vessel shall have expired while the vessel was at sea, and there shall have been no opportunity to renew such license, then the said forfeiture shall not be incurred.

"'(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to any vessel of less than 5 net tons built in the United States which is engaged solely in the fisheries, while owned by a person of any of the following classes, if, on the date of the enactment of this subsection, that person owned the same or any other such vessel which was then engaged solely in the fisheries:

"'(1) a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of a State, Territory, District, or possession thereof, which is not a citizen of the United States, until on and after 2 years from such date of enactment;

"'(2) a person not a citizen of the United States who is a citizen of any insular possession of the United States whose citizens owe allegiance to the United States;

"'(3) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States; or

"'(4) any alien (whether or not eligible to become a citizen of the United States) who has been a resident of the United States continuously since July 1, 1925, and who shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce that he is a law-abiding resident of the United States of good repute:

Provided, That during any national emergency proclaimed by the President, or whenever the President determines that the interests of the national defense make it advisable, he may, in his discretion, at any time make the provisions of subsection (a) applicable to any vessel exempted therefrom by the foregoing provisions of this subsection. For the purposes of this subsection, the Secretary of Commerce may accept such evidence of lawful admission of an alien to the United States as he may deem satisfactory in lieu of official records of admission.'

"SEC. 3. Nothing in this act or in the amendments made by this act shall, for a period of 2 years, invalidate any register, enrollment and license, or license, heretofore lawfully issued to any vessel.

"SEC. 4. Section 4131 of the Revised Statutes as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 221), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4131. Vessels registered pursuant to law, vessels enrolled and licensed or licensed for carrying on the coastwise trade or fisheries, yachts enrolled and licensed or licensed, and no others, shall be deemed "vessels of the United States" and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels; but no such vessel shall enjoy such benefits and privileges longer than it shall continue to be wholly owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States and commanded by a citizen of the United States. All the officers of "vessels of the United States" who shall have charge of a watch, including mates, pilots, and engineers, shall, in all cases, except as otherwise expressly provided by law, be citizens of the United States. No person shall be qualified to hold a license as a commander or officer of a merchant vessel of the United States who is not a native-born citizen, or whose naturalization as a citizen shall not have been fully completed. In cases where on a foreign voyage any such vessel is for any reason deprived of the services of an officer below the grade of master, his place, or a vacancy caused by the promotion of another officer to such place, may be supplied by a person not a citizen of the United States until the arrival of the vessel at the first port in the United States; and such vessel shall not be liable to any penalty or penal tax for such employment of an alien officer.'

"SEC. 5. Section 4132 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, Supp. V, sec. 11), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. The following-described vessels shall, when wholly owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States, and otherwise qualified by law, be entitled to be registered as "vessels of the United States":

"'(a) Vessels built in the United States.

"'(b) Vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize.

"'(c) Vessels which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States.

"'(d) Seagoing vessels of foreign build which have been certified by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo heretofore admitted to registry as "vessels of the United States" for trade only with foreign countries, with the Philippine Islands, the islands of Guam, Tutuila, Wake, Midway, and Kingman Reef; and if found otherwise engaged, such vessels shall be forfeited.

"'(e) Foreign-built vessels used exclusively for pleasure which have been heretofore documented as "vessels of the United States." Such vessels, if used for any other purpose shall be forfeited.

"'(f) Vessels entitled to be registered under other statutes of the United States.'

"SEC. 6. Section 4137 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 15) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4137. Registers for vessels owned by any incorporated company may be issued in the name of the president or secretary of such company; and such register shall be voided and the vessel forfeited in case of sale or transfer of any share or shares of stock in such company which results in alien ownership or control, directly or indirectly, of a percentage of such stock in excess of the amount permitted by any law relating to the ownership of vessels registered pursuant to the laws of the United States.'

"SEC. 7. Section 4313 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 253) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4313. Enrollments and licenses or licenses for vessels owned by any incorporated company may be issued in the name of the president or secretary of such company; and such enrollments and licenses or licenses shall be voided and the vessel forfeited in case of sale or transfer of any share or shares of stock in such company which results in alien ownership or control, directly or indirectly, of a percentage of such stock in excess of the amount permitted by any law relating to the ownership of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade or in the whaling or other fisheries.'

"SEC. 8. Section 4885 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 335) is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 9. The act of April 18, 1874 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 336), is amended to read as follows:

"'Sections 4361, 4362, 4363, and 4366 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, shall not be so construed as to apply to canal boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State; and all such boats, excepting only such as are provided with sails or propelling machinery of their own adapted to lake or coastwise navigation, and excepting such as are employed in trade with the Canadas, shall be exempt from such provisions and from the payment of all customs and other fees under any act of Congress.'

"SEC. 10. The act of June 30, 1879 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 332), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'The provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge for the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled by sail or internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory.'

"SEC. 11. Nothing contained in this act or in the amendments made by this act shall be deemed to alter, amend, or repeal section 4367, 4368, 4369, or 4370 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 313, 314, 315, or 316); section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. V, title 46, sec. 883); section 442, 443, 444, 445, or 446 of the Tariff Act, 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 1442, 1443, 1444, 1445, or 1446); any other statute of the United States permitting the transportation of passengers or merchandise between points in the United States including districts, territories, or possessions thereof, embraced within the coastwise laws, in a foreign vessel; section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 103); section 9 of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 808); section 22 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 13); the Ship Mortgage Act of 1920 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, ch. 25); section 5 of the act of June 25, 1936 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 46, sec. 672a); or section 302 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 46, sec. 1132).

"SEC. 12. The Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate appropriate regulations for effectuating the provisions of this act and of the amendments made by this act.

"SEC. 13. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of the provisions thereof, shall not be affected thereby."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendments which have been sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments to the committee amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 13, strike out lines 16 to 19, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) A resident of the United States who is not a citizen of the United States but who is a citizen of any insular possession of the United States whose citizens owe allegiance to the United States."

Page 16, between lines 1 and 15, insert the following:

"(e) Seagoing vessels of foreign build hereafter certified by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries, with the Philippine Islands, the islands of Guam, Tutuila, Wake, Midway, and Kingman Reef, and if found otherwise engaged such vessels shall be forfeited: Provided, however, That no such vessel shall hereafter be admitted to registry as a "vessel of the United States" unless the admission to registry thereof shall be approved jointly by the United States Maritime Commission, the Navy Department, and the Department of Commerce after consultation by the Maritime Commission with the State Department and such other agencies as the Maritime Commission may deem advisable and, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall be found to be in the interest of the foreign trade or the national defense of the United States."

Page 19, beginning in line 1, strike out all after the semicolon down to and including the semicolon in line 3.

Page 19, after line 19, insert the following:

"(b) The right of any vessel to engage in transportation which prior to the enactment of this act would be permitted only by the second proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, and to be documented under the laws of the United States for the purpose of engaging only in such transportation, or the right of any foreign vessel to engage in such transportation, shall, notwithstanding any provision of this act or of any amendment made by this act, be determined as if this act had not been enacted: Provided, however, That such vessel, if so documented under the laws of the United States, shall be forfeited if used in transportation not permitted by the second proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended: Provided further, That such vessel, if not a vessel of the United States, shall be subject to all of the applicable provisions of this act, and amendments made by this act, if used in any other transportation than that permitted by the second proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended.

"(c) In the case of car ferry complying with all of the conditions and requirements of the last proviso of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, except the requirement relating to documentation, notwithstanding any other provision of this act, or of any amendment made by this act, the right of such car ferry to be documented under the laws of the United States for the purpose of engaging only in transportation permitted by that proviso, and only as a part of rail routes permitted by that proviso, and to engage in such transportation, shall be determined as if this act had not been enacted: Provided, however, That such car ferry, if so documented and used in transportation not permitted by such proviso, or if so documented and operated over any route not permitted by such proviso, shall be forfeited."

The amendments to the committee amendment were agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read:. "A bill to require vessels engaging in the coastwise trade or in the whaling or other fisheries to be wholly owned by citizens of the United States, and for other purposes."

CONFERENCE REPORT ON TAX BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

CITIZEN REQUIREMENT FOR MANNING OF VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9918, relating to citizenship requirement for manning of vessels, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill in reference to citizenship?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill with reference to citizenship is to provide that at least 75 percent of the men engaged shall be citizens of the United States. Then there is the 25 percent that may be taken from special classes that are mentioned in the bill in order to protect against any injustice. It is to increase the percentage of Americans that are employed on these ships.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman on that; but I would like to know what the gentleman and his committee is doing to get rid of the "fifth column" element—men who are against our form of government and who are being employed on vessels in coastwise trade? What are you doing to get them out of the service?

Mr. BLAND. We are still facing a very difficult problem. First, there is the Dies committee that is examining those things. I have talked with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] and representatives of the Dies committee to follow up their investigation. Under authority that has been granted by this House, I am having a clerk go over the hearings of the Dies committee to get leads there. Authority has been given the Bureau of Marine Inspection for checking up on the men to whom licenses have been granted, and with these various agencies we have been given authority to hold hearings on this matter. Of course, I have opposed the adjournment of Congress, and that has interfered with our hearings, but we expect there will be time to go more fully into that. With the delicate situation such as we have, I feel I may safely say that everything is being done that can be done without too much hullaballoo, which is very undesirable in matters of that kind, and especially if we wish to ferret out those people.

Mr. RICH. I feel the gentleman will give every attention to that which he possibly can, because if we have any "reds" or "fifth columnists" in our seagoing forces we ought to clean them out, and the quicker we do it the better.

Mr. BLAND. I am heartily in accord with that, and I do think that if many of the American seamen could ever be made to realize this problem—and they are patriotic, loyal, law-abiding men—they would help to clean it out themselves.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman, what is the relationship of this bill to the requirements which were carried in the Merchant Marine Act of some 3 or 4 years ago?

Mr. BLAND. Nothing with reference to the subsidy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What requirements were there in the Merchant Marine Act governing the percentage of American citizenship we should have in our merchant-marine crews?

Mr. BLAND. We do not interfere with that. We leave it as it is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What was the percentage?

Mr. BLAND. We are requiring 100 percent on cargo vessels—I am speaking now of subsidized vessels—and 90 percent on passenger vessels; the 10 percent is to be made up in the steward's department, where we find it is not practicable now to get 100-percent American citizens. This is intended to bring the other ships up more nearly to the provisions that we have in the merchant marine.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But it is being limited to 75 percent?

Mr. BLAND. Yes. It is very questionable whether we could go further than that at this time.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee why there is no saving clause in the case of fishing vessels where they are unable to get native citizens to man the boats?

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will permit, I have an amendment that I am sending to the Clerk's desk which will make the saving clause applicable as to fishing vessels and vessels other than foreign vessels, because I realize that the situation is doubtful in that respect.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am entirely ignorant of shipping matters, but I should like to know why it is that we have to make the limit for these employees 75 percent of American citizenship. Why cannot we make it 100 percent?

Mr. BLAND. I introduced a bill to that effect and I hope we will ultimately come to that, but there is a serious question with respect to the fishing vessels and these other vessels. There are a number of people who are law abiding and yet are not citizens. I refer to the men in the steam schooners on the Pacific coast who have been here before 1930. There are also some men up along the Massachusetts coast similarly situated. They have not so complied with the law that they can now become naturalized, but they have been here 25 or 30 years and have raised children. We are permitting them to show that. They are good, law-abiding residents, and it would be an injustice to them to cut them out. We have tried without doing an injustice to anybody or to the industry to pave the way so that we may ultimately have 100-percent American citizenship on these vessels, and I hope we may.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In regard to the fishing vessels, may I say that the native-born men will not in many cases go out with the crew? We must have some latitude.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers, pilots, and crew (crew including all employees of the vessel) of vessels documented under the laws of the United States, and of undocumented vessels owned in the United States, shall be citizens of the United States, either native-born or completely naturalized: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to—

(1) Public vessels other than those engaged in commercial service;

(2) Vessels not exceeding 16 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck excluding sheer, temporarily equipped with detachable motors;

(3) Sailboats not more than 16 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck excluding sheer;

(4) Rowboats, canoes, and other like non-self-propelled small craft.

SEC. 2. If, with respect to the crew of any vessel subject to the provisions of this act (except a cargo vessel in respect of which a construction or operating subsidy has been granted in accordance with the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended) the Secretary of Commerce shall, upon investigation, ascertain that qualified citizens are not available, he may, if he deems such action proper and in keeping with the purpose of this act, reduce the percentage of citizens required by section 1 hereof to not less than 90 percent of such crew, or lower in the case of the crew of a fishing vessel, and any person not required to be a citizen must, as a prerequisite to employment on board any such vessel, be in possession of a valid certificate of declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, or other evidence of legal admission into the United States for permanent residence, or a certificate, issued by the Attorney General of the United States under such rules and regulations as he may require, certifying that said person has been admitted into the United States for permanent residence. In the case of passenger vessels in respect of which a construction or operation subsidy has been granted in accordance with the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, such members of the crew who are not citizens of the United States may be employed only in the steward's department.

SEC. 3. If any vessel while on a foreign voyage, or in the Panama Canal Zone, is for any reason deprived of the services of any member of the crew below the grade of master, such position or vacancy caused by the promotion of another to such position may be supplied by a person other than as defined in sections 1 and 2 hereof until the first call of such vessel at a port in the United States where such replacements as will comply with the provision of this act can be obtained.

SEC. 4. The owner, agent, or officer of any such vessel who shall employ or permit any person to serve in violation of the provisions of this act shall be liable for each offense to a penalty of $500, or imprisonment for 1 year, or both.

SEC. 5. Any person employed or serving on any such vessel in violation of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Commerce shall make such regulations as may be necessary to carry out in the most effective manner the provisions of this act and to secure its proper enforcement by collectors of customs and other officers and employees of the United States designated by the Secretary of Commerce for such purpose.

SEC. 7. During any national emergency, as proclaimed by the President, he may, in his discretion, suspend any or all of the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, beginning in line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Citizen Manning of Vessels Act of 1940.'

"CITIZENSHIP OF MASTERS, OFFICERS, AND SO FORTH

"SEC. 2. The master or person in charge of every vessel documented under the laws of the United States and of every undocumented vessel owned in the United States, and each licensed officer, each pilot, each officer in charge of a watch (including mates and engineers) on any such vessel, and each licensed motorboat operator of any such vessel, shall be a citizen of the United States, native-born or completely naturalized.

"CITIZENSHIP OF CREW—UNSUBSIDIZED VESSELS

"SEC. 3. (a) This section shall apply to all vessels documented under the laws of the United States and all undocumented vessels owned in the United States in respect of which neither a construction nor operating subsidy has been granted under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended.

"(b) At least 75 percent of the crew of each vessel to which this section applies shall be citizens of the United States, native-born or completely naturalized.

"(c) Any member of the crew of any vessel to which this section applies who is not a citizen of the United States shall be either—

"(1) An individual who is a citizen of an insular possession of the United States whose citizens owe allegiance to the United States; or

"(2) An alien lawfully admitted prior to July 1, 1930, for permanent residence in the United States who has been a resident of the United States continuously since such date; or

"(3) An alien (whether or not eligible to become a citizen of the United States) who has been a resident of the United States continuously since July 1, 1925, and who shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce that he is a law-abiding resident of the United States of good repute.

"(d) As used in this section, 'crew' in the case of any vessel means all employees (including all persons sharing in the lay on fishing vessels) of the vessel exclusive of the master or person in charge thereof, and exclusive of pilots, licensed officers, and officers in charge of a watch thereon.

"(e) Whenever the Secretary of Commerce, upon investigation, is of the opinion, in the case of any vessel to which this section applies, that qualified citizens are not available in sufficient numbers, he may, in his discretion, reduce the percentage of citizens required by subsection (b) to such percentage lower than 75 percent as he deems necessary for such periods as he may by regulations or order prescribe. Whenever the Secretary of Commerce, upon investigation, is of the opinion, in the case of any such vessel engaged in the foreign trade, that qualified individuals of the classes described in subsection (c) are not available in sufficient numbers, he may, in his discretion, permit the employment of such other classes of individuals not citizens of the United States, for such periods, as he may by regulations or order prescribe.

"FILLING VACANCIES ON FOREIGN VOYAGES

"SEC. 4. If any vessel, to which section 2 or section 3 is applicable, while on a foreign voyage or in the Panama Canal Zone is for any reason deprived of the services of any employee below the grade of master, his place or a vacancy caused by the promotion of another to his place may be supplied by a person not a citizen of the United States until the first call of such vessel to a port in the United States where such replacements as will comply with the provisions of those sections can be obtained.

"EXEMPTIONS OF CERTAIN VESSELS

"SEC. 5. The provisions of section 2 and section 3 shall not apply to—

"(a) Public vessels other than those engaged in commercial service;

"(b) Vessels not exceeding 16 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck, excluding sheer, temporarily equipped with detachable motors;

"(c) Sailboats not more than 16 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck, excluding sheer;

"(d) Rowboats, canoes, and other like non-self-propelled small craft.

"CITIZENSHIP OF CREW—SUBSIDIZED VESSELS

"SEC. 6. For citizenship requirements in the case of the crews of vessels in respect of which a construction or operating subsidy has been granted, see section 302 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended.

"CITIZENSHIP OF STAFF OFFICERS

"SEC. 7. For citizenship requirements with respect to staff officers of certain vessels, see the act entitled 'An act to provide for the registry of pursers and surgeons as staff officers on vessels of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 1, 1939.

"EMERGENCY POWER OF PRESIDENT

"SEC. 8. During any national emergency proclaimed by the President, or whenever the President determines that the interest of the national defense makes it advisable, the President may, in his discretion, suspend any or all of the provisions of sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this act.

"AMENDMENTS AND REPEALS

"SEC. 9. (a) Section 5 of the act entitled 'An act to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea"; to maintain discipline on shipboard; and for other purposes,' approved June 25, 1936 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., supp. V, title 46, sec. 672a), is hereby repealed.

"(b) The second sentence of section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to amend section 4100 and 3100 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant-marine engineer service and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, and for other purposes,' approved May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 189), is hereby repealed.

"(c) The provisions of section 2 of this act shall apply in respect of a vessel to which section 302 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, applies, only to the extent that requirements contained in section 2 of this act are not contained in section 302 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended.

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 10. The Secretary of Commerce shall enforce sections 2, 3, and 4 of this act through collectors of customs and other Government officers acting under the direction of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, and shall make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 11. (a) The owner, agent, or officer of any vessel to which section 2 or section 3 is applicable who knowingly employs or permits any person to serve in violation of the provisions thereof shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $500 for each offense, for the payment of which the vessel shall be liable, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

"(b) Any person knowingly serving on any vessel to which section 2 or section 3 is applicable in violation of the provisions thereof shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $100, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 12. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"EFFECTIVE DATE

"SEC. 13. This act shall take effect 90 days after the date of its enactment, except sections 3 (e) and 10, which shall take effect immediately."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer certain amendments to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. BLAND to the committee amendment: Page 4, following the period in line 18, insert the following new sentence: "Whenever the Secretary of Commerce, upon investigation, is of the opinion, in the case of any fishing vessel which is of less than 200 gross tons and which is not required by law to be inspected, or any group of such vessels, or any industry, that qualified engineer-watch officers are not available in sufficient numbers, he may, in his discretion, permit the employment of such classes of individuals not citizens of the United States, and not disqualified by law for such employment, for such periods, as he may by regulations or order prescribe."

Page 5, following the period in line 23, add the following: "The bargee on an unrigged vessel which is not subject to the inspection laws shall be considered a member of the crew."

Page 6, line 1, following the word "vessel", insert a comma and the following: "or any group of vessels, or any industry."

Page 6, line 8, following the word "vessels", insert a comma and the following: "or any group of vessels, or any industry."

Page 6, line 9, strike out the following: "engaged in the foreign trade."

Page 6, line 13, following the comma after the words "United States", insert "and not disqualified by any other law for such employment."

The amendments to the committee amendment were agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPEDITING MARITIME COMMISSION SHIPBUILDING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10380, to expedite national defense, by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. We have been trying for the past several years to create the 8-hour day so we can give jobs to all men who want them and get them off of relief. Why would it not be a good thing to continue that policy that we have been working on and try to get these men jobs in industry and thus take them off of the W. P. A. and P. W. A. and other Government agencies?

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will pardon just there, there was passed by this House in June and approved on June 28, 1940, a bill which contained the following language:

During the national emergency, declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard contracts shall be suspended—

And then there was another provision that—the provisions of all preceding sections of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

Now, as the gentleman will notice, that relates to the work of the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard. The result is that now you have this situation in your shipbuilding plants. You will have a shipbuilding plant that is engaged on Army, Navy, and Coast Guard work and merchant marine work for the Maritime Commission, and you have a law requiring the men on the merchant ships, and probably ships that are essential to national defense or for other purposes, limited to an 8-hour day, while in the same yard and in other yards, you permit men engaged in Army, Coast Guard, or Navy work to work longer than 8 hours. The result is, of course, that men will be going to those places where they can get their overtime. This measure simply makes the work for the Maritime Commission conform with the work for the Army, Navy, and the Coast Guard.

The American Federation of Labor and some other gentlemen were concerned about the bill as it was first prepared and they said, "You are going to wipe out overtime; you are going to change it as to hours and wages in a very little while." We saw what was their difficulty and we said, "Sit down around the table; we do not intend that. We intend that they shall get their overtime; we intend that the only thing that shall be removed is the discrepancy between Maritime Commission work and Army and Navy work." In this way we worked out this amended bill which was satisfactory to them.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman and the Congress and the American Federation of Labor and all the organizations are desirous of having an 8-hour day, why are we so much more interested in overtime? What I am trying to do is to get the 8-hour day so we can put all men to work in industry and take them off the Government pay roll. That is one way you are going to get the money. If we are going to think only in terms of overtime, I think we will defeat the purpose of trying to keep everybody in this country busy.

Mr. BLAND. But do not let us discriminate against one class of work in favor of another, and what we are doing here is to put it all on a parity in this respect until 1942. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is too good a businessman to fail to recognize what the trouble would be otherwise.

Mr. RICH. I think it is a wise provision to try to make everything uniform, but let us not overlook the fact that we want to get these men jobs, and whenever we say that because they are engaged now in some essential for war we will not let down the bars, then we are defeating our purpose in trying to make more jobs.

Mr. BLAND. This applies to skilled labor and they are not eligible under the W. P. A. to do the work required here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee one or two questions. Do I understand that as the law now stands it is absolutely illegal for more than 8 hours' work to be required of a worker in 1 day on work of the United States Maritime Commission?

Mr. BLAND. That is provided in the contract and it is illegal.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is illegal even if you pay overtime?

Mr. BLAND. It is illegal if you pay overtime, while this measure permits overtime to be paid.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then this bill removes that restriction?

Mr. BLAND. That is all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They can work 12 or 14 hours a day, conditioned on paying the time-and-a-half for overtime?

Mr. BLAND. But limited to the contract of the organization with the ship company as provided in the language—

Nothing in this act shall be construed to modify any contracts between management and labor in shipyards which provide for conditions more favorable to labor than the minimum provisions as to hours per day and hours per week, and for overtime provided in this act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Suppose that same shipyard was building a bottom for a private operator, that is in no way connected with the Government itself or the Maritime Commission, and that shipbuilding concern proceeded to work the men on that private bottom that is being built more than 8 hours a day, would they be paid for overtime?

Mr. BLAND. That is a matter between the organization and the shipyard, a private matter, not regulated by law. We are here trying to make the law uniform.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And there is no Federal law that enters into that at all?

Mr. BLAND. I think not, unless there is general legislation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is one matter I want to clear up in my own mind. Do I understand that this bill lifts a prohibition against working more than 8 hours, but does not change the provision for the payment of overtime?

Mr. BLAND. The language is:

Provided, That the wages of every laborer and mechanic employed by any contractor or subcontractor engaged in the performance of any such contract, shall be computed on a basic rate of 8 hours per day and 40 hours per week, and work in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week shall be permitted upon compensation for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week at not less than one and one-half times the basic rate of pay.

They wanted that provision in. We thought that was implied in the bill, and we said that we would put it affirmatively in this measure so that there could be no question about it.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman will not accept an amendment? I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but I am not in sympathy with the first two lines, which provided "During the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist." In lieu of that language, I would suggest this, "That until otherwise provided by law, the provisions of law prohibiting," and so forth, "shall be suspended."

Mr. BLAND. I am perfectly willing, if that does not conflict with section 4, which provides that the provisions of this act shall terminate on June 30, 1942.

Mr. MICHENER. I am sure that it should not.

Mr. BLAND. I am willing to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. But I want to state my reasons for making the request to which the gentleman has acceded.

The gentleman well knows what I am aiming at, but it is well that the RECORD show it, I have made a fight two or three times against clauses of this sort in bills, the purpose of which was to validate and make legal the President's declaration of September 8, 1939 that a "limited emergency" existed. I repeat, that the President has not authority to declare a limited emergency. The President of the United States can only declare an emergency when authorized so to do by the Constitution or the Congress. Neither the Constitution nor the Congress authorized the President to make that declaration of "limited emergency," but ever since that declaration was made there has been an insistent effort, every time a bill comes up here dealing with national defense, to include a provision that that limited emergency declared on the 8th day of September 1939 be validated. One of the legal representatives from one of the departments, was before the Judiciary Committee the other day who indicated that if this provision were in the bill, then, when the President wanted to use emergency powers he would have authority, without compelling the Attorney General to look through the World War statutes to see if he could not find some emergency power on which the President might predicate the contemplated action.

Mr. BLAND. I will accept the amendment if the gentleman will offer it.

Mr. MICHENER. Then I will quit talking.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have the form of the amendment, if we are going to accept the bill? It may be that the amendment to be offered is in effect contrary to section 4 of the bill. I reserve the right to object until I know the form of the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I will offer this amendment: Page 2, line 8, in the amendment, which has been proposed, strike out "during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939," and insert "until June 30, 1942."

Mr. MICHENER. That would cover the matter perfectly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, in order to ask a brief question. We now have about 11,000,000 unemployed people in the United States. Under the language of this bill, is it possible to work the workers in the navy yards and shipyards 16 hours a day with time and a half for overtime at an additional cost to our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury and at the same time have that Treasury called upon to provide additional funds to keep additional unemployed people on the W. P. A. or on relief?

Mr. BLAND. If that is so, it is already passed and in the law. We are only dealing with the Maritime Commission contracts.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Well, is it proposed to limit this time and a half only to cases where they cannot get sufficient people to employ a double or a triple shift on these jobs?

Mr. BLAND. There is no question about that. The question now is to get skilled labor. W. P. A. men cannot work on these jobs.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In every recent Labor Board civil-service examination they have thousands of applicants for skilled and unskilled work in the navy yards.

Mr. BLAND. We have no trouble about that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman certain that this is not going to be a general policy, and does the gentleman believe that those in charge of this work will generally employ skilled labor at 8-hour shifts and that they will only resort to 16-hour shifts with time and a half for overtime when they cannot get sufficient skilled labor?

Mr. BLAND. I think the provisions of this law permit the organizations to decide that. I do not think a condition of that kind will ever arise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the national emergency, declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by United States Maritime Commission contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels shall be suspended: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

SEC. 2. The United States Maritime Commission is hereby authorized to modify existing contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels as it may deem necessary to expedite military and naval defense, and to otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That during the national emergency, declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by United States Maritime Commission contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels shall be suspended: Provided, That the wages of every laborer and mechanic employed by any contractor or subcontractor engaged in the performance of any such contract shall be computed on a basic rate of 8 hours per day and 40 hours per week and work in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week shall be permitted upon compensation for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week at not less than one and one-half times the basic rate of pay.

"SEC. 2. The United States Maritime Commission is hereby authorized to modify its existing contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels as it may deem necessary to expedite national defense, and to otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 3. Nothing in this act shall be construed to modify any contracts between management and labor in shipyards which provide for conditions more favorable to labor than the minimum provisions as to hours per day and hours per week and for overtime provided in this act.

"SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND to the committee amendment: On page 2, beginning in line 8, strike out all of line 8 down through the word "exist" in line 9 and insert "until June 30, 1942."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10122, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Montana has an amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I have, Mr. Speaker, to page 9, section 5.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman's proposed amendment have the approval of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They approved the bill as passed by the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. I understand that, but does the gentleman know whether they would approve the bill as modified by the amendment he now proposes?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman that this is a clarifying or a minor amendment. The bill provides that the units of the irrigable lands shall be of not more than 160 acres and that no water may be delivered to or for more than the farm unit area of irrigable lands in the project owned by a single landowner and that the landowner would have 3 years in which to dispose of any excess land.

This amendment is designed to clarify the operation of the act in respect to lands in excess of 160 acres, so as to permit the landowner to retain the land holdings, but limit the water to be received to the amount necessary for 160 acres. In other words, water is made the yardstick instead of acres.

The act will work out more practically with this clarification, as in many instances in rough country it is necessary to take pieces or parcels out of a whole section of land to make a total of 160 acres of irrigable land.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it necessary?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hardly think it is, but others do.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then why put it in?

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will pardon me, this amendment is offered at the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. They thought it would be better to have the purpose expressed in clearer language so there could be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of the fact that the gentlemen from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. LEWIS], as well as yourself, approve it, I shall not press my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. For the purpose of stabilizing water supply and thereby rehabilitating farmers on the land and providing opportunities for permanent settlement of farm families the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as "the Secretary") is hereby authorized to investigate and, upon compliance with the provisions of this act, to construct water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States, and to operate and maintain each such project in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the United States shall retain title to the dams, reservoirs, irrigation, and other project works until Congress otherwise provides: And provided further, That expenditures from appropriations made directly pursuant to the authority contained in section 12 (1) to meet reimbursable construction costs allocated to irrigation as defined in section 4 (b) shall not exceed $1,000,000 for dams and reservoirs in any one project.

"SEC. 2. In connection with the investigation, construction, or operation and maintenance of a project, pursuant to the authority of this act, the Secretary is authorized to utilize (1) in such manner as the President may direct, services, labor, materials, or other property, including money, supplied by the Work Projects Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Office of Indian Affairs, the Farm Security Administration, or any other Federal agency, for which the United States shall be reimbursed in such amounts as the President may fix for each project, within the limits of the water users' ability to repay costs as found by the Secretary under subsection 3 (a) (iv); and (2) such services, labor, materials, easements, or property, including money, as may be contributed by any State or political subdivision thereof, State agency, municipal corporation, or other organization, or individuals, if, in the judgment of the Secretary, the acceptance thereof will not impair the title of the United States to the project works and will not reduce the probability that the project water users can meet the obligations to the United States entered into pursuant to this act. Moneys received and accepted under (2) of this section shall be and remain available for expenditure for the purposes for which contributed in like manner as if said sums had been specifically appropriated for said purposes.

"SEC. 3. (a) No construction of a project may be undertaken pursuant to the authority of this act unless and until the Secretary has made an investigation thereof and has submitted to the President his report and findings on—

"(i) the engineering feasibility of the proposed construction;

"(ii) the estimated cost of the proposed construction;

"(iii) the part of the estimated cost which properly can be allocated to irrigation;

"(iv) the part of the estimated cost which probably can be repaid by the water users in accordance with the requirements of section 4;

"(v) the part of the estimated cost which can properly be allocated to municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or power and probably be returned to the United States in revenues therefrom;

"(vi) the part of the estimated cost which can properly be allocated to the irrigation of Indian trust and tribal lands, and which can probably be returned by the Office of Indian Affairs;

"(vii) the part of the estimated cost which can properly be allocated to flood control as recommended by the Chief of Engineers, War Department."

In connection with each such investigation, report, and finding, the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture regarding participation in the proposed project by the Department of Agriculture under the authority of sections 5 and 6; and the Secretary shall also transmit to the President a report on the participation, if any, which the Secretary of Agriculture may wish to provide. The project shall be deemed authorized and may be undertaken pursuant to this act if (1) the Secretary finds and certifies to the President that the project has engineering feasibility and that the water users probably can repay, in accordance with the requirements of section 4, an amount equal to or in excess of that part of the estimated cost allocated by him to irrigation to be met by expenditure of moneys appropriated pursuant to section 12 (1); and (2) the President has approved said report and findings and has found that services, labor, materials, easements, and other property, including money, for the construction of the project, should be made available to the Department of the Interior by the Work Projects Administration or other Federal agencies, to the extent found necessary by the Secretary to make up the difference between the estimated cost of project construction and (i) the part thereof to be met by expenditure of moneys appropriated pursuant to section 12 (1), together with (ii) such services, materials, money, easements, and other property as non-Federal agencies or parties have agreed to contribute and the Secretary has found acceptable under section 2.

"(b) No actual construction of the physical features of a project, which meets the requirements of subsection (a) shall be undertaken unless and until (1) rights-of-way and other interests in land deemed by the Secretary to be necessary for the construction and operation of the major features of the project works have been secured, with titles or easements and at prices satisfactory to the Secretary; and (2) the Secretary has found (i) that water rights adequate for the purposes of the project have been acquired with titles and at prices satisfactory to him, or have been initiated and can be perfected in conformity with State law and in a manner satisfactory to him; and (ii) that such water rights can be utilized for the purposes of the project in conformity with State law and in a manner satisfactory to him.

"SEC. 4. (a) No water for irrigation may be delivered from the works of any project constructed under the authority of this act until after the repayment contract or contracts required by this section have been executed. Where practicable in the judgment of the Secretary, the repayment contract shall be with a water users' organization or organizations satisfactory in form and powers to the Secretary; and otherwise the repayment contract shall be with the individual landowners. The contract or contracts shall contain such provisions as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to protect the interests of the United States.

"(b) The term 'reimbursable construction costs' as used in this act means that part of the costs of investigating, constructing, and operating and maintaining the project, which are allocated by the Secretary to irrigation, and which are met by expenditures of moneys therefor appropriated under the authority of section 12 (1), plus such amounts as the President, under section 2 (1), may determine to be reimbursable: Provided, That administrative expenses incurred in the District of Columbia in connection with the investigation, construction, or operation and maintenance of a project shall not be included in the reimbursable construction costs nor shall they be charged to the water users in any way.

"(c) The repayment contract or contracts for a project shall, in their aggregate, provide for repayment to the United States of the total amount of the reimbursable construction costs of the project allocated to irrigation. Each such contract shall provide, among other things, that—

"(1) The Secretary shall fix a development period for each project of not to exceed 10 years from and including the first calendar year in which water is delivered for the lands in said project; and during the development period water shall be delivered to the lands in the project involved at a charge per acre-foot, or other charge, to be fixed by the Secretary each year and to be paid in advance of delivery of water. Such charges shall be fixed with a view of returning such amounts as in the Secretary's judgment are justified by the rate of project development, including as a minimum the return over the full development period of that part of the cost of operating and maintaining the project, during said period, allocated by the Secretary to irrigation; and collections of such charges in excess of the cost of the operation and maintenance during the development period, as thereafter determined by the Secretary, shall be credited to the reimbursable construction costs of the project in the manner determined by the Secretary.

"(2) The United States shall operate and maintain the project during the development period fixed for it. After the development period, the United States shall operate and maintain the project or any part thereof as long as is deemed necessary by the Secretary, and shall be paid in advance for each year that part of the estimated cost of operating and maintaining the project for such year allocated by the Secretary to irrigation. In the event charges due the United States are not paid when due the United States may, at its election, suspend operations in whole or in part.

"(3) The repayment of the reimbursable construction costs shall be spread in not to exceed 40 annual installments, of the number and amounts fixed by the Secretary; and the first annual installment under each contract shall become due and payable on the date fixed by the Secretary, in the year next following the last year of the development period fixed under subsection (c) (1).

"(4) The water users or their organization will take such measures as the Secretary deems proper to secure the adoption of proper accounting, to protect the condition of project works, and to provide for the proper use thereof, and to protect project lands against deterioration due to improper use of water. Delinquencies in any payments due to the United States shall be penalized by a penalty of not less than one-half of 1 percent per month. No water shall be delivered to or for any land or party while either said land or the organization in which it is located or said party is in arrears in the advance payment of operation and maintenance charges or development period charges under subsection (c) (1), or in arrears for more than 12 months in the payment of an installment of the reimbursable construction costs.

"(5) The Secretary shall establish the size of farm units of irrigable lands on each project in accordance with his findings of the area sufficient in size for the support of a family on the lands to be irrigated, but the farm units of irrigable lands shall be of not more than 160 acres. No water may be delivered to or for more than the farm unit area of irrigable lands in the project owned by a single landowner; and after the third year in which water is made available from a project's works, no water may be delivered to or for any land of a landowner owning more than the farm unit area of irrigable land in the project: Provided, That 3 years shall be allowed for the disposal of any excess holding acquired at any time in good faith by descent, will, foreclosure of any lien, or by other judicial process: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, corporate or otherwise. No water shall be delivered to or for any land, in a project area, transferred or disposed of subsequent to approval of the project by the President, unless and until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary or his duly authorized representative that the land has been transferred or disposed of at a price not exceeding the appraised value as determined by the Secretary or his duly authorized representatives, and upon proof of fraudulent representation as to the true consideration involved the Secretary is authorized to cancel the water right attaching to the land involved: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to create authority to interfere with the delivery of water under prior rights.

"SEC. 5. (a) In connection with the construction or operation and maintenance of projects undertaken pursuant to the authority of this act, and in order to further in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States an effective rehabilitation program, stabilization of the agricultural economy and maximum utilization of funds spent for relief purposes, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, pursuant to cooperative agreement with the Secretary of the Interior, (1) to arrange for the settlement of the projects on a sound agricultural basis, and insofar as practicable, the location thereon of persons in need; (2) to extend guidance and advice to settlers thereon in matters of farm practice, soil conservation, and efficient land use; (3) to acquire agricultural lands within the boundaries of such projects, with titles and at prices satisfactory to him; and (4) to arrange for the improvement of lands within the project boundaries, including clearing, leveling, and preparing them for distribution of irrigation water. Contracts between the United States and water users or water users' organizations for the lease or purchase of, or the improvement of, lands within such projects shall provide for annual or semiannual payments to the United States, of the number and amounts fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The lease, purchase, or improvement contracts for each tract of land shall provide in the aggregate for the return, in not to exceed 50 years from the date the land is first settled upon, of the costs incurred by the United States in acquiring and improving such tract of land with funds appropriated under authority of section 12 (2), except administrative expenses incurred in the District of Columbia, together with interest on unpaid balances of said costs at not less than 3 percent per annum. Such lease, purchase, or improvement contracts shall also provide for the fulfillment of such obligations related to reimbursable construction costs and operation and maintenance charges as may be applicable to such lands in accordance with the repayment contract or contracts required by section 4.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture may utilize (1) in such manner as the President may direct, services, labor, materials, or other property, including money, supplied by the Work Projects Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Office of Indian Affairs, the Farm Security Administration, or any other Federal agency to the extent that the President, upon the report and recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture, finds that the same should be supplied in assistance of such improvement work, and for which the United States shall be reimbursed in such amounts as the President may fix for each project; and (2) such services, labor, materials, or other property, including money, as may be contributed by any State or political subdivision thereof, State agency, municipal corporation, or other organization, or individuals. Moneys received and accepted under (2) of this subsection shall remain available for expenditure for the purposes for which contributed in like manner as if said sums had been specifically appropriated for said purposes.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary, by cooperative agreements, may arrange with the Department of Agriculture or with such other Federal or State agencies, as he deems desirable, for cooperation in the investigations and surveys of projects proposed under the authority of this act; and in connection with any such project which is undertaken the Secretary by such cooperative agreements may arrange for such cooperation in the construction or operation and maintenance of the project as he deems desirable. Any such cooperative agreement with the Department of Agriculture may provide, among other things, (1) that the Secretary of Agriculture shall enter into the repayment contracts required by section 4 and shall handle the collections of repayments and shall take over the other administrative duties connected with the project, after the Secretary of the Interior announces that the project is ready for operation; (2) if such agreement be entered into after construction of the project has been undertaken by the Secretary of the Interior and after he has entered into the repayment contracts required by section 4, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall take over the collection of repayments and other administrative duties connected with the project; (3) that no water shall be delivered to or for any land or party while the owner of said land or said party is in arrears for more than 12 months in the payment to the United States of money due and payable under a land contract entered into pursuant to section 5 (a); and (4) that any repayment contract with a water user or water users' organization entered into pursuant to section 4 and any land contract with the same water user or organization entered into pursuant to section 5 (a), if said contracts involve the same land, may be combined in a single instrument. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to carry out the provision of any such cooperative agreements.

"SEC. 7. On any one project undertaken pursuant to the act of August 28, 1937, entitled 'An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes' (50 Stat. 869), as amended and supplemented, expenditures for the construction, maintenance, operation, rehabilitation, or financial assistance of any one project shall not exceed $50,000 of Federal funds, whether appropriated or allotted or both. Under said act no project which involves the storage or utilization of water for the irrigation of more than 500 acres of land or which involves the surface storage of more than 500 acre-feet of water or which involves a total cost exceeding $5,000 shall be undertaken unless and until the Secretary of the Interior has found and certified to the President that the proposed project cannot feasibly or practicably be undertaken pursuant to the Federal reclamation laws or the act of August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), as amended. All project facilities and appurtenances which depend for their utility in whole or in part upon each other or upon any common facility shall be deemed one project within the meaning of this section.

"SEC. 8. All payments made to the United States under repayment contracts on account of reimbursable contruction costs, including penalties collected for delinquencies in such payments, and all other receipts from project operations pursuant to sections 4 and 9 shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. Charges collected during the development period of a project under section 4 (c) (1), excepting such amounts thereof as may be credited to reimbursable construction costs, and charges collected for the operation and maintenance of a project under section 4 (c) (2) shall be made available for expenditure for appropriation by Congress for operation and maintenance of said project.

"SEC. 9. In connection with any project undertaken pursuant to this act, provisions, including contracts of sale, may be made for furnishing municipal or miscellaneous water supplies, or for developing and furnishing power in addition to the power requirements of irrigation: Provided, That expenditures from appropriations made directly pursuant to the authority contained in section 12 (1) to meet costs allocated to municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or surplus power shall not exceed $500,000 for any one project: Provided further, That no contract relating to a water supply for municipal or miscellaneous purposes or to electric power shall be made unless, in the judgment of the Secretary, it will not impair the efficiency of the project for irrigation purposes. On any project where such provisions are made, the Secretary shall allocate to municipal or miscellaneous water purposes or to surplus power the part of the estimated construction costs of the project which he deems properly so allocable; and such allocations shall not be included in the reimbursable construction costs covered by the repayment contract or contracts required under section 4. All right, title, and interest in the facilities provided for such municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or surplus power and the revenues derived therefrom shall be and remain in the United States. Contracts for such municipal or miscellaneous water supplies or for such surplus power shall be for such periods, not to exceed 40 years, and at such rates as in the Secretary's judgment will produce revenues at least sufficient to cover the appropriate share of the annual operation and maintenance cost of the project and such fixed charges, including interest, as the Secretary deems proper: And provided further, That in sales or leases of such power, preference shall be given to municipalities and other public corporations or agencies; and also to cooperatives and other nonprofit organizations financed in whole or in part by loans made pursuant to the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 and any amendments thereof.

"SEC. 10. (a) In connection with any project constructed pursuant to the provisions of this act, the Secretary shall have the the same authority, with regard to the utilization of lands owned by the United States, as he has in connection with projects undertaken pursuant to the Federal reclamation laws, act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

"(b) In connection with the construction or operation and maintenance of a project undertaken pursuant to the authority of this act, the Secretary shall have with respect to construction and supply contracts, and with respect to the acquisition, exchange, and disposition of lands, interest in lands, water rights, and other property and the relocation thereof, the same authority, including authority to acquire lands and interests in land and water rights with titles and at prices satisfactory to him, which he has in connection with projects under the Federal reclamation laws.

"SEC. 11. The Secretary is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

"SEC. 12. To carry out the purposes of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated (1) for the Department of the Interior such sums as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this act, and (2) for the Department of Agriculture such sums as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Strike out all of subsection (5) on pages 9 and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(5) The Secretary shall establish, with respect to land not already under cultivation, the size of farm units of irrigable lands on each project in accordance with his findings of the area sufficient in size for the support of a family on the lands to be irrigated, but such farm units shall be of not more than 160 acres.

"In the case of such lands not already under cultivation, no water in excess of the amount determined by the Secretary to be reasonably necessary for the successful irrigation of 160 acres of land shall be allowed to any one landowner regardless of the amount of land which such owner may own.

"In the case of land already under irrigation but for which the amount of water is insufficient, the owner thereof shall be entitled to have delivered to him for a supplemental supply not more than the additional amount determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be reasonably necessary for the successful irrigation of 160 acres: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, corporate or otherwise: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to create authority to interfere with the delivery of water under prior rights."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 9, in line 4, following the period, insert the following: "Provided, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be construed to modify the provisions of special legislation pertaining to any particular object."

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is for the purpose of insuring against any controversy. The rule already is that a general law does not modify a special act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALIFORNIA INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3765, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California," approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which reported this bill, I want to state that this bill as reported by the committee is indefensible. It provides for a potential raid on our almost bankrupt Treasury amounting to about $100,000,000. I am pleased, as a member of the committee which reported the bill, to object to its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

REPLACEMENT OF FISHING VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10501, to amend section 509, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the fourth sentence of section 509, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 46, sec. 1159), of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as precedes the first semicolon therein is amended to read as follows: "In case the vessel is designed to be of not less than 3,500 gross tons and to be capable of a sustained speed of not less than 14 knots, or, without regard to tonnage or speed, is designed to be a fishing vessel, the applicant shall be required to pay the Commission not less than 12½ percent of the cost of such vessel, and in the case of any other vessel the applicant shall be required to pay the Commission not less than 25 percent of the cost of such vessel (excluding from such cost, in either case, the cost of national defense features)."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 509 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended by inserting, after "Sec. 509", the letter "a" in parentheses, and by adding at the end of such section the following new subsections:

"'(b) Any citizen of the United States may make application to the Commission for aid in the construction of a new vessel to be engaged in the fisheries of the United States. If such application is approved by the Commission, the vessel may be constructed under the terms and conditions of this title, but no construction-differential subsidy shall be allowed. The Commission shall pay for the cost of national-defense features incorporated in such vessel. The applicant shall be required to pay the Commission not less than 12½ percent of the cost of such vessel (excluding from such cost the cost of national-defense features); the balance of such purchase price shall be paid by the applicant within 20 years and in not less than 20 equal installments, with interest as prescribed in subsection (a) of this section, and with payment secured by a preferred mortgage on the vessel and otherwise secured as the Commission may determine. In case of any such vessel, the cost of which, as determined by the Commission, does not exceed $100,000, the Commission may waive, to the extent that it deems necessary or desirable in view of the size and type of the vessel and any national-defense features involved, and other facts deemed pertinent by the Commission, any or all provisions of this title otherwise applicable except the provisions of section 503 and section 505 (a) other than the requirements as to competitive bidding which may be waived if the Commission deems the construction price to be fair and reasonable. The Commission is authorized to sell, at not less than the amount of the unpaid principal and the accrued interest, any mortgage acquired under this subsection to a mortgagee eligible under section 1104 of title XI of this act, and to insure any such mortgage so sold subject to the following sections of title XI: 1104 (c), 1105, 1106, and 1107. The Commission is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

"'(c) The provisions of section 505 (b) of this title with respect to the payment to the Commission of profit of the shipbuilder shall not be applicable to any contract made pursuant to the provisions of this section where by the terms of such contract the total compensation payable to the shipbuilder thereunder may in no event exceed the total cost of performing the contract as determined by the Commission plus an amount not in excess of 11½ percent of such cost.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVING RESTRICTION PLACED UPON CERTAIN LANDS AT MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10335, to remove the restriction placed upon the use of certain lands acquired in connection with the expansion of Mitchel Field, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4258) to remove the restriction placed upon the use of certain lands acquired in connection with the expansion of Mitchel Field, N. Y., be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the item contained in the act of Congress approved July 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 452), entitled "An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes," providing for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of Mitchel Field, N. Y., 342 acres, more or less, to be used exclusively for runways, $500,000, is hereby amended so as to remove the restriction thereby placed on the use of the land so authorized to be acquired: Provided, That the use of said land for any other purpose shall in no way interfere with the effective use of the runways placed thereon.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 10335) was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF ASSISTANT CHIEFS OF BRANCHES AND OF WING COMMANDERS IN THE AIR CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3636, to amend the National Defense Act, as amended, so as to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and wing commanders, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth sentence of section 4c of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 762), and as amended by the act of May 12, 1939 (Public, No. 72, 76th Cong.), be, and the same is hereby, further amended to read as follows:

"Any officer who shall have served 4 years as chief or assistant chief of a branch or as commanding general of the General Headquarters Air Force or who shall have served 2 years as wing commander of the Air Corps and who may subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the highest grade held by him as such chief, assistant chief, commanding general, or wing commander."

SEC. 2. Any officer who has heretofore served 4 years as assistant chief of branch of the Army or who has heretofore served 2 years as wing commander of the Air Corps and who has been retired in a grade below that of brigadier general, shall, on the date of approval of this act, be advanced in rank upon the retired list to the highest grade held by him as such assistant chief or wing commander and shall receive the pay and allowances provided by law for such advanced rank.

SEC. 3. No back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9947, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the bill, and if it is in order I will also include in my point of order in addition to this bill Nos. 948, 949, 950, and 951 on the calendar.

The point of order is that the report does not comply with section 2 (a) of rule XXIII of the Ramseyer Rule, which provides that—

Whenever a committee reports a bill or joint resolution repealing or amending any statute or part thereof, it shall include in its report or in the accompanying document the text of the statute or part thereof which it is proposed to repeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard on the point of order. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has pointed out, the Committee on Revision of the Laws has complied with the so-called Ramseyer rule only with reference to item 947 on the calendar. The delay in putting these bills on the calendar was occasioned by the fact that we sought in connection with that bill, which was the first one we considered, to comply with the Ramseyer rule by setting forth in the report all the laws affected by that bill. In view of the fact that we were seeking by these bills to repeal existing law, in some cases going back many years and the Revised Statutes and the Statutes at Large are available only in the Library, we were faced with the necessity of typing the text of the laws so repealed. We felt, in view of the fact, that the sections affected by the bill are clearly set forth in the bills themselves and in the report, and the reasons for the bill are also clearly set forth in the report, that no Member of this House, having access, as we all have, to the Revised Statutes, to the Statutes at Large, and to the United States Code, to all of which sections sought to be repealed by this series of bills, specific reference is made, would raise a point of order.

I hope the gentleman from Michigan will cooperate with our committee and will not press the point of order, because it will simply delay the consideration of these bills, which represent an effort—and, I hope, a noble effort—on the part of the Committee on Revision of the Laws to obtain authority to omit from the United States Code those sections of existing law which are duplicated, which are redundant, which are temporary in nature, which are obviously obsolete, and which have been repealed by inference. When I say "repealed by inference" I refer to the increased practice on the part of the standing committees of this House, when rewriting legislation, to include in the bill reported a section repealing laws that might be inconsistent with the laws or with the sections contained in the bill. I do not believe you should place upon this committee the responsibility of attempting to determine what are the inconsistent laws thereby repealed. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on his point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. I think some time should be given for the consideration of this bill. Granting all that the gentleman has said to be true, it seems to me that we should not establish the precedent of repealing dozens of laws by unanimous consent in an omnibus bill. I think we would be subject to criticism if we did not provide for some consideration of these bills. All the Committee on Revision has to do is to go to the Rules Committee, get a rule waiving all points of order and providing for a limited amount of time to discuss the matter. That will give the gentleman sufficient time to explain each of these bills, and compare them with existing law, so that we will be able to determine whether they have been repealed by implication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman permit an observation from the Chair as to whether the gentleman would consider it advisable to ask unanimous consent that the bills go over without prejudice, for the reason that if he insists on his point of order it means the bills will have to be recommitted to the Committee on Revision of the Laws?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was aware of that, and made the point of order to stress the fact that there would be objection to the bill on the Consent Calendar. In order that the bills may not lose their status on the Union Calendar and may be considered if a rule is granted, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order to do so, that the bills appearing on the Consent Calendar as Nos. 946, 948, 949, 950, and 951 may be passed over without prejudice, and I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from New York if sometime between now and the time these bills will come up again the clerk of his committee can prepare some statement for the record so that we may be advised what these repealers really repeal?

Mr. KEOGH. I may say to the gentleman from South Dakota that we have sought in the reports accompanying these bills to set forth very clearly the purposes of each bill and the reasons for including in the bill the sections we have, but if the gentleman from South Dakota feels that any other information may be necessary or advisable, we, of course, shall be delighted to comply with his request.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have a feeling that, as the gentleman from Michigan has pointed out, the Congress would be subject to a great deal of criticism if it would be apparent from the bill, as it is from the one I have examined, that there is a general repealer here of certain sections and the Congress would not know what it might be repealing.

Mr. KEOGH. I should like very much to make this statement with reference to that. We are not in effect repealing any laws by these bills but are seeking to obtain Congressional authority to eliminate these sections from the United States Code. The laws that are covered by these bills have already been repealed by bills which this Congress has passed, but in the passing of those subsequent bills the committees handling them have not expressly repealed the prior sections of law which the subsequent bills superseded or replaced or amended. We are simply trying to do here the work that should have been done in some of those committees. Our bills would not be necessary if those new bills contained express rather than blanket repealers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In that respect, we should not assume the responsibility of saying by unanimous consent that a certain act has been repealed by implication. Courts sometimes spend days on that question. If it is just a matter of saving a little time, I believe we had better not take any chance on repealing these en bloc without at least giving them some consideration.

Mr. KEOGH. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that these bills have been the subject of study for months, not for days. The delay in putting them on the calendar was due to the fact that we sought in connection with calendar No. 947 to comply with the technical Ramseyer rule. Further, these bills have been studied by editors and by publishing companies for years, not for months. If we do not start somewhere we are going to find ourselves with a United States Code that is simply too cumbersome and too complicated for even the most learned legislators to know anything about.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The code should include all of the law, and where there is any question as to whether a discrepancy exists between two statutes the two statutes should be in the code for the enlightenment of the lawyers and the courts interpreting the section. I do not believe we should be asked to do a job here which is properly referred to the courts; at least, we should not be asked to do it by unanimous consent. That is why I brought the matter up.

Mr. KEOGH. I should like to point out that the first three bills on this calendar refer to sections of law affecting Internal Revenue Bureau taxation. In January of 1939 this Congress took what I have previously said was a most progressive step in legislating when we enacted the Internal Revenue Code. Section 4 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code reads as follows:

> The internal revenue title, as hereinafter set forth, is intended to include all general laws of the United States and parts of such laws, relating exclusively to internal revenue.

We have sought in these first three bills on the calendar to go through every title in the United States Code, including title XXVI as superseded by the Internal Revenue Code and repeal those sections that deal with internal revenue, because this Congress then, January 1939, said, in effect, "From this point on all our internal revenue laws shall be found in title XXVI and nowhere else." However, our committee lacks the authority to eliminate them from the United States Code unless the Congress gives it to us. We are seeking in these bills to obtain that authority.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, my reservation of objection, as I understood, was to the unanimous-consent request that the bills enumerated by the gentleman from Michigan be permitted to pass over without prejudice. I have no objection to that request.

Mr. KEOGH. Further reserving the right to object, may I ask if the gentleman from Michigan will not amend his request to include Calendar No. 947?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was going to do that.

Mr. KEOGH. I should like to have all these bills considered together rather than piecemeal, because I do not want our committee to fall into piecemeal amending or repealing.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the gentleman I was going to do that, and I shall do it later, because Calendar No. 947 comes in a different category and I prefer to take action on it separately.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe objection should be made to these bills or that the gentleman should insist upon his request to pass the bills over without prejudice. There is tremendous confusion among lawyers and litigants when they look into the books as to what the law it. You have a great lot of deadwood there piled up, and it brings about endless confusion.

Not only has our committee made a careful study of these matters but all the departments involved have made a very careful check and there is nothing in any of these bills except various obsolete acts that ought to go out, and there is no greater service that could be rendered to the American bar and the lawyers generally than to have these bills passed.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, with respect to the first three bills referred to on the calendar, they have been submitted to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and they have interposed no objection and we would have received from that committee a letter of approval to be included in the report except for the fact that they have been engrossed with the excess-profits-tax bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. These measures should be acted on by this Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection to action being taken, but I want the action taken to be commensurate with the dignity of the House.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield there, this is the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But there should be a certain amount of consideration when we are asked to repeal en bloc literally hundreds of laws by unanimous consent, and I have suggested to the chairman of the committee that he go to the Rules Committee and get a rule waiving points of order. This will save the committee clerk the necessity of printing all of these acts, in accordance with the Ramseyer rule, and we will at least have an hour or so to discuss them, so we can ask some questions and we will give the people to understand that we know what we are doing. We have had some very lamentable instances in the last 4 or 5 months when we legislated without knowing just what we were doing. I do not have the time, and I do not believe any gentleman on this floor has the time to go through all these statutes and look them all up and read them and compare them with existing law and, personally, I do not like to take the report of any joint committee or any committee clerk without at least asking some questions on it, because they are susceptible to mistakes and, after all, it is our responsibility.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPEALING OBSOLETE STATUTES AND IMPROVING THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9773, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in order that this bill may have the same status as those which we have just discussed, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

TRANSFERRING CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930 INTO THE UNITED STATES JUDICIAL CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3990, to transfer the essential language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930, into the Judicial Code of the United States and to provide for its reenactment as part of said Judicial Code, to take effect from the date of its passage, including the allowance to the judges of the United States Customs Court, Government counsel, and stenographic clerks as set forth therein for traveling expenses incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith to the extent of such inconsistency, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a new section be, and the same is hereby, added to the Judicial Code of the United States relating to the United States Customs Court, to be known as section 187 (a), to follow immediately after section 187, to read in the exact language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, as follows:

"SEC. 187. (a) United States Customs Court.

"The United States Customs Court shall continue as now constituted, except that the chief justice and the associate justices of such court now in office and their successors shall hereafter be known as the judges of such court. All vacancies in such court shall be filled by appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than five of the judges of such court shall be appointed from the same political party, and each of such judges shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. They shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment, and shall hold their office during good behavior. The offices of such court shall be at the port of New York. The court and each judge thereof shall have and possess all the powers of a district court of the United States for preserving order, compelling the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence, and in punishing for contempt. The court shall have power to establish from time to time such rules of evidence, practice, and procedure, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary for the conduct of its proceedings, in securing uniformity in its decisions and in the proceedings and decisions of the judges thereof, and for the production, care, and custody of samples and of the records of such court. Under such rules as the United States Customs Court may prescribe, and in its discretion, the court may permit the amendment of a protest, appeal, or application for review. One of the judges of such court, designated for that purpose by the President of the United States, shall act as presiding judge, and in his absence the judge then present who is senior as to the date of his commission shall act as presiding judge; and until any such designation is made the chief justice of the United States Customs Court now in office shall act as presiding judge. The presiding judge, or the acting presiding judge in his absence, shall have control of the fiscal affairs and of the clerical force of the court, making all recommendations for appointment, promotions, or otherwise affecting such clerical force; he may at any time before trial, under the rules of the court, assign or reassign any case for hearing or determination, or both, and shall designate a judge or division of three judges and such clerical assistants as may be necessary to proceed to any port within the jurisdiction of the United States for the purpose of hearing or of hearing and determining cases assigned for hearing at such port, and shall cause to be prepared and promulgated dockets therefor. Judges of the court, stenographic clerks, and Government counsel shall each be allowed and paid his necessary expenses of travel and his reasonable expenses, not to exceed $10 per day in the case of the judges of the court and Government counsel, and $8 per day in the case of stenographic clerks actually incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business. The judges of said court shall be divided into three divisions of three judges each for the purpose of hearing and deciding appeals for the review of reappraisements of merchandise, and of hearing and deciding protests against decisions of collectors. A division of three judges or a single judge shall have power to order an analysis of imported merchandise and reports thereon by laboratories or bureaus of the United States. The presiding judge shall assign three judges to each of said divisions and shall designate one of such three judges to preside. The presiding judge of the court shall be competent to sit as a judge of any division or to assign one or two other judges to any of such divisions in the absence or disability of any one or two judges of such division. A majority of the judges of any division shall have full power to hear and decide all cases and questions arising therein or assigned thereto. A division of the court deciding a case or a single judge deciding an appeal for a reappraisement may, upon the motion of either party made within 30 days next after such decision, grant a rehearing or retrial of such case when in the opinion of such division or single judge the ends of justice so require.

"The judges of the United States Customs Court are hereby exempted from so much of section 1790 of the Revised Statutes as relates to their salaries.

"When any judge of the United States Customs Court resigns his office after having held a commission as judge or justice of such court or member of the Board of General Appraisers at least 10 years continuously, or otherwise, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable to a judge of such court at the time of his resignation. Any such judge who is qualified to resign under the foregoing provisions may retire, upon the salary of which he is then in receipt, from regular active service as a judge of such court, and upon such retirement the President may appoint a successor; but such retired judge may, with his consent, be assigned by the presiding judge of such court to serve upon such court and while so serving shall have all the powers of a judge of such court."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provision of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

SEC. 3. That this act, including the provision for payment of the expenses of the judges of the Customs Court, Government attorneys, and stenographic clerks incurred while absent from New York on official business, shall take effect from the date of its passage.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, in line 25, after the word "court", strike out the words "stenographic clerks, and Government counsel."

On page 4, in line 2, after the word "day", strike out the word "in" and all of line 3 and the words in line 4 as follows: "and $8 per day in the case of stenographic clerks."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by striking out after the words "United States Customs Court" the following: "Government counsel, and stenographic clerks as set forth therein."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I did not understand whether the gentleman's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEOGH. Yes. It was simply an amendment to correct the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. And the committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

TO REPEAL AN OBSOLETE SECTION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7405, to repeal an obsolete section of the District of Columbia Code.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

To repeal an obsolete section of the District of Columbia Code.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 76 of title 18 of the District of Columbia Code (13 Edw. 1, ch. 31 (1285); Alex. Br. Stat. 126; Comp. Stat. D. C., par. 442, sec. 5) is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3920, to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have been informed that it is the purpose of the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] to suspend the rules in connection with this bill.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. That concludes the call of the Consent Calendar.

TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER ARLINGTON FARM, VIRGINIA

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 896 for the purpose of considering the bill (S 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdictions of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, since I am advised the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] will not insist on its going over.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the control and jurisdiction of the lands, buildings, and improvements constituting the Arlington Farm, as created by the act of Congress approved April 18, 1900 (31 Stat. 135), west of the Rosslyn connecting railroad, are hereby transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War, to take effect progressively as each area of said farm is turned over by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War: Provided, That the authority to remove such buildings, improvements, trees, and plants as shall be deemed necessary in order to promote the work of the Department of Agriculture shall remain in the Secretary of Agriculture until the transfer of the area involved is effected.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $3,200,000 to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or donation, of lands to provide a suitable site for the development and reestablishment thereon of the functions and activities of the Arlington Farm, and the construction and installation of such buildings, equipment, and utilities and appurtenances thereto, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary.

SEC. 3. There is also further authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $4,000,000 for the acquisition of adjacent lands and the construction and installation of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary for military purposes on the above-mentioned lands, including alterations, additions, and betterments to such existing improvements thereon as may be transferred by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. The control and jurisdiction of that portion of the Arlington Experimental Farm lying east of the Rosslyn connecting railroad is hereby transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Interior, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,000,000 for the acquisition of adjacent lands in order that the Secretary of the Interior may transfer to this enlarged area the propagating gardens, shops, heating plant, tourist camp, and other facilities that are now located between the Washington Monument grounds, the Thomas Jefferson Memorial, and the Potomac River. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior a right-of-way 200 feet wide extending from a point near the southeast corner of the Arlington Cemetery in a northeasterly direction to the Boundary Channel, in order to provide a scuth approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge and the construction of an adequate road within this right-of-way is hereby authorized. The plans for location and development of this approach road as well as the development plans for the enlarged areas east and west of the railroad for the uses herein authorized shall be subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The development plan for the area under jurisdiction of the Secretary of War shall provide for a connecting road adjacent to the Rosslyn connecting railroad between the highways north of the Arlington reservation and those south of said reservation, and upon the construction and opening of such road the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to close and abandon the present Military Road along the east boundary of the Arlington Cemetery.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "west of the Rosslyn connecting railroad";

Page 2, line 17, strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$5,000,000";

Page 2, line 24, after the word "War" insert: "If the purchase of additional lands authorized by this section meets the requirements of the War Department, the Secretary of War may allow the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the operation of Arlington Experiment Station at its present site."

Page 3, line 4, strike out all of section 4.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Va., to the jurisdiction of the War Department, and for other purposes."

ANNUAL LABOR ON MINERAL CLAIMS IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 916, H. R. 2747, relative to annual labor on mineral claims in the Territory of Alaska, and that the proceedings by which the bill was passed be vacated and the bill be restored to the calendar.

I am the sponsor of the bill, and the only amendment, not a committee amendment, was offered by the gentleman from Arizona, who has agreed that this procedure may be taken, if there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DISBURSING OFFICERS FOR THE CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION AND THE FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 848, for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9514), for the relief of certain former disbursing officers of the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was objected to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. I have had a conference with him and this procedure is agreeable to him.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY] a question or two regarding H. R. 9514. Several years ago we relieved the paymasters of P. W. A. funds, who were bonded, from overpaying funds amounting to almost $100,000,000 on the assumption that the money should not, or could not, be collected. The point I make is this: We should have more authority and ask better business methods be used in distribution of the taxpayers' funds.

I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland the following questions:

First. How much money does this charge off the books which was illegally paid out?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. About $40,000.

Mr. RICH. Second: Will the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration see to it that this does not happen again?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I sincerely hope they will.

Mr. RICH. Third: Will we permit any more funds to be paid out by any New Deal agency or any department of the Government that is not in accordance to the law? This is very important.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I trust not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3868, a similar Senate bill, be substituted for the bill H. R. 9514.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for payments made in good faith on public account from appropriations made available to the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for expenditure, notwithstanding the failure to comply with requirements of existing law or regulations: Provided, That the Commissioner of Work Projects or his duly authorized representative shall certify that the payments appear to be free from fraud or collusion on the part of the disbursing officer making the payment.

SEC. 2. No charge shall be made against the certifying officer for the amount of any payment for which credit shall be allowed under the preceding section where the Commissioner of Work Projects or his duly authorized representative certifies that the payment appears to have been made without fraud or collusion on the part of the certifying officer.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill, H. R. 9514, was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF WINNING DESIGN FOR PROPOSED SMITHSONIAN GALLERY OF ART

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 9806, to permit the Smithsonian Gallery of Art Commission to purchase a model of the winning design for the proposed Smithsonian Gallery of Art, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that bill sounds a little familiar. It seems to me that bill was on the Consent Calendar and was stricken.

The SPEAKER. It was stricken from the calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will reserve the objection temporarily.

Mr. KELLER. I want to call attention to the fact that the other day when I brought this matter up I was assured that it would be considered whenever I called it up provided the minority Member on the Library was agreeable to that.

The minority Member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], is agreeable.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the objection of the acting leadership at that time to the consideration of the bill was that no Member of the minority on the committee was present.

Mr. KELLER. Ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. There he is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand. Objection to consideration at that time was based on the ground that no Member of the minority was here. On my own responsibility, I am objecting to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not intend to bind anybody. My effort was to ascertain if it was satisfactory to minority Members on the committee, that if it was I would not object. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], one of the official objectors whose duty it is to understand these bills objects, I would not in any way attempt to bind him or anyone who does know.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman really knows the measure he would not object.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How much will this bill cost?

Mr. KELLER. It will not cost anything at all. The money is already appropriated. All we are asking is the right to pay it out.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How much are you going to pay out?

Mr. KELLER. Four thousand dollars. One man gets $800, another gets $700, and a third gets $2,500.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That is not much. I congratulate the gentleman. He ought to get his bill through.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin and hope he will intervene with the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX BILL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the conference report on the excess-profits tax bill will come up for consideration tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman set any time for the consideration of the tax bill? Ordinarily we would have but an hour on the report under the rules of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is something I have no control over.

Mr. MICHENER. May I ask the gentleman the necessity of convening at 11 o'clock if he does not intend to extend time for debate on the report?

Mr. McCORMACK. The reason for the request is that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a very honorable Member of the House and a very hard-working Member of the House, has a very important engagement that requires him to take a train at 1 o'clock. I understand, too, that the distinguished chairman of the committee is very anxious to leave tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that I, too, have a very important engagement that I have been putting off for the last 3 days in order to be here when the tax bill came up. Unless we have more than an hour on the report, I doubt very much if I shall be able intelligently to discuss the measure with my people. There are several things in the bill which I do not understand. I should like the gentleman's opinion on several phases of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. That opinion I shall be very glad to undertake to give to the gentleman tomorrow if I speak on the report.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, there are 435 Members of this Congress who have important engagements in the morning, too. I do not think we should inconvenience 434 Members for the convenience of 1. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHETSTONE DIVERSION CHANNEL, ORTONVILLE, MINN.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. By direction of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10518) granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Highways and the county of Big Stone, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Whetstone Diversion Channel at or near Ortonville, Minn.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. KELLER (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Department of Highways and the county of Big Stone, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Whetstone Diversion Channel, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Ortonville, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point on the subject of national defense.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the spectacular performance and maneuvers of more than 400 planes flying over Washington on the past Saturday were a striking demonstration of what might happen at the Capital of the Nation during the years to come. If each of the planes had represented a hostile bomber dropping 1,000-pound projectiles, and our defenses had been obliterated as recently happened in Poland, Holland, Belgium, and France, then the city of Washington would be a bloody shambles today instead of a thriving center of government.

The unbelievable has happened during the past 6 months, and the same could well happen again during the next 6 months. It is becoming increasingly evident that this is a vital time for clear thinking on part of both the Congress and the electorate. Promises of a new world, free from doles and debts, as made by Mr. Willkie in his Yonkers speech on Saturday, are mere idle vaporings unless accompanied by something more concrete than an appeal to spiritually hungry people to follow him.

To be more specific, for decades this Nation has been inclined to follow implicitly the financial and social economics of the British Empire, which in turn has dominated their military concepts and their defense program.

The totalitarian forces now sweeping over Europe have utterly subordinated the financial phase of defense in their struggle with Britain. All else has been sacrificed by the dictatorships to the industrial and engineering economics involved in the warfare. In other words, while democracies have been materially retarded in their defense preparations by lengthy financial negotiations having to do with the award and execution of contracts, Germany, Italy, and Japan have no such delays. Here the contractor or his labor may at any time indulge in a sit-down strike if the financial remuneration is uncertain or unsatisfactory. In the totalitarian regime both the plants and their manpower are commandeered and money payments become a secondary consideration. This fact, added to the new mechanized technique in fighting, has completely overthrown or changed practically all of the military precedents to which we are accustomed. Vast financial resources are no longer essential for the successful conduct of war, as has been proven by recent events. Much of our advantage is thus lost.

The efficiency of the totalitarian system is illustrated by the rapid conquest of Norway, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands, and France. The dictatorships have already planned a similar program for South America, Asia, and Africa. Britain is to be stripped to the bone and further sudden strokes are contemplated looking to more world domination.

There is no denying that the situation daily becomes increasingly critical.

In the light of recent experience it is evident that the future safety of the United States will primarily be based upon its acquiring numerous long-range heavy bombing planes and control of bases for air attack.

The second great necessity is an ample supply of nitrates for the manufacture of high explosives. In both of these items there now appears a marked deficiency. The present airplane manufacturing capacity of the country is largely devoted to the production of training and light pursuit planes, but the time is here when the need for heavy bombers should be most urgently stressed. I have flown many thousand miles in great multimotored ships of this type and know of their merits from personal observation. Fortunately the heavy transport type of airplanes of our commercial air lines, with little modification, can be adapted to serve as long-range bombers, so that the situation is not as bad as would appear from a superficial survey.

Coincident with the construction of bombing planes must come an increased facility for manufacturing high explosives. If my information is correct, the present installed nitrate capacity, after taking care of other demands for national defense, will furnish only twenty-five 1,000-pound bombs per year to each of a contemplated bombing fleet of 10,000 planes. It would appear that additional nitrate manufacturing facilities should be provided at an early date.

As the Tennessee Valley power is mostly allocated to other activities I strongly recommend to the Defense Council that the Boulder Dam area, as well as the facilities in the Northwest, be investigated, looking to the establishment of more nitrate plants. Heavy bombs are a far more effective defense than rifle or machine-gun bullets.

The grave menace to the preparedness program in 1917 and 1918 was that too many agencies were trying to do the same thing, causing numerous changes of production and design, and likewise a conflict of authority. Delays from red tape would then have precipitated a tragedy had we not had military supplies available from the Allies. There are indications that the difficulties of the past emergency are being duplicated today. For this reason the House has added provisions to the last defense appropriation bill requiring reports at stated intervals from the Secretaries of War and Navy, which will at least tend to reveal the bottle-necks in production and possibly prevent a repetition of the experiences of the last war.

ROLAND HANSON AND DR. E. A. JULIEN

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) entitled "An Act for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Doctor E. A. Julien," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$2,000" insert "$1,250"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3 and 4, and agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
H. H. SCHWARTZ,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160), for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

In consideration of this Senate bill, your Committee believed that the amounts recommended in the bill were insufficient, and therefore increased the amount to be paid to the legal guardian of Roland Hanson from $500 to $2,000. Roland Hanson is a minor who suffered certain injuries as a result of being struck by a United States Army truck. The Committee also increased the amount to be paid to Dr. E. A. Julien from $200 to $500. Dr. Julien rendered certain professional services to the said Roland Hanson.

At the conference an agreement was reached on a compromise in the amount of $1,250 for Roland Hanson, and the House conferees receded from their amendment on the amount to be paid to Dr. Julien.

C. Z. BUSH AND W. D. KENNEDY

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3481), for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3481) entitled "An Act for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$1,204.50" insert "$1,704.50"; and the House agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

PRENTISS M. BROWN,
H. H. SCHWARTZ,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3481), for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The bill as it passed the House provided for the payment of the sum of $2,500 to C. Z. Bush for personal injuries and $72.80 to W. D. Kennedy for property damage growing out of a collision involving the car in which they were riding and a truck of the Civilian Conservation Corps. The Senate reduced the amount to be paid to Mr. Bush from $2,500 to $1,204.50.

At the conference a compromise of $1,704.50 was agreed upon.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 3481, and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the statement in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement as above set out.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WARREN ZIMMERMAN

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4126) for the relief of Warren Zimmerman, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4126) entitled "An Act for the relief of Warren Zimmerman", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$304.08" insert "$580.26"; and the House agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
H. H. SCHWARTZ,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4126), for the relief of Warren Zimmerman, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

This bill as it passed the House provided for the payment of $877.09 for losses sustained because of the failure of the postmaster and postal employees at Lawrence, Kansas, to handle mail deposited in that post office in accordance with the understanding and agreement made with this patron.

Several items made up this total amount, and the Senate when passing the bill reduced the amount to $304.08, reporting one item alone, namely, postage.

At the conference the Senate conferees agreed to also allow an item of $276.18, representing stock used in the transaction. The compromise, therefore, was in the amount of $580.26.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4126) for the relief of Warren Zimmerman, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement as above set out.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORGANIZING STATE MILITARY UNITS

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10495), to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what the bill is?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, this is what is commonly known as the home guard bill, which comes to us upon the recommendation of the War Department. It has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget and the unanimous recommendation of the House Committee on Military Affairs. It is to provide for the organization of military units in local communities not a part of the National Guard. It is a very important and necessary bill in the present emergency.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, it is a very important bill and while I am sure it has plenty of parentage and recommendation back of it, I think the gentleman ought to explain in a general way what the bill does.

Mr. THOMASON. With the consent of the gentleman from Michigan, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], the author of the bill, who is more familiar with the details of it than I am.

Mr. ANDREWS. This merely authorizes the various States to have troops for local defense in lieu of their own National Guard units, once they are ordered into Federal service. Without the passage of this legislation and the section permitting the loan of equipment by the War Department, we would have men in the State armories without rifles.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. FISH. All this bill does, as I understand it, is to make rifles available for the home guard. Otherwise they would be using broomsticks to train with?

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it my understanding that the men who enlist in the home guard will enlist voluntarily and serve without pay?

Mr. ANDREWS. That is correct, under their own State statutes. Of course, they are paid by their own State.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. But it is no draft or conscription; it is simply a voluntary service?

Mr. ANDREWS. That is correct.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. This bill will simply reenact the World War statute, under which home-defense groups functioned during the World War period, and, of course, as the gentleman knows, such statute permitted the Government to loan these defense groups the necessary equipment.

Mr. THOMASON. And it is entirely voluntary.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right tc object, and I shall not object, I however want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: National defense is vital and it is important, and we must pass the necessary measures with due expedition. At the same time, we must not get into the habit of having a committee bring in a bill which, in substance, may set up an entirely new branch of our national defense—so far as State defense is concerned—and pass it unanimously without the House knowing anything about it, and then waking up the next morning to find we have granted a lot of powers and done a lot of things, even though in the best of spirits, that should not have been done.

Mr. THOMASON. I agree with all the gentleman has said, but may I add this bill meets with the approval of the adjutant generals of the various States; it has the enthusiastic support and endorsement of the War Department. In fact, it was initiated by them, but the committee gave very careful consideration and deliberate study to the suggestions made by the gentleman from Michigan and the committee has no desire to go contrary to the views expressed by him.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, there are Members here who do not always agree with everything that the War Department or an adjutant general of some State or even a constable of a State may say.

Mr. THOMASON. I have discovered that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill:

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"No State shall maintain troops in time of peace other than as authorized in accordance with the organization prescribed under this act: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as limiting the rights of the States and Territories in the use of the National Guard within their respective borders in time of peace: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance of State police or constabulary: Provided further, That the organization by and maintenance within any State of military forces other than National Guard is hereby authorized while any part of the National Guard of the State concerned is in active Federal service or during any national emergency declared by Congress or the President; however, no person shall, by reason of his membership in any such unit, be exempted from military service under any Federal law: And provided further, That the Secretary of War in his discretion and under regulations determined by him is authorized to issue from time to time for the use of such military units to any State, upon requisition of the Governor thereof, such arms and equipment as may be in possession of and can be spared by the War Department."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request I made a few moments ago that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3920) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act shall take effect on November 1, 1940, except that sections 2, 11, 25, 26, and 27 shall be effective as of July 1, 1940, and sections 19 and 20 shall become effective upon the approval of this act: Provided, however, That—

(a) A half-month which has begun prior to November 1, 1940, in accordance with the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations thereunder, and which includes such date, shall continue, and benefits with respect thereto shall be computed and paid as if this act had not been enacted;

(b) All benefit years current on October 31, 1940, shall terminate (1) on October 31, 1940, or (2) on the last day of a half-month which includes October 31, 1940, and November 1, 1940, whichever is later, and, for the purposes of section 2 (c) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended by this act, all benefits paid for unemployment in half-months begun subsequent to June 30, 1940, and prior to November 1, 1940, shall be deemed to have been paid for unemployment within the benefit year ending June 30, 1941;

(c) Benefits for unemployment in the first registration period, beginning after October 31, 1940, of an employee who has, subsequent to June 30, 1940, completed a waiting period under section 3 (b) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, shall be determined and computed as though such registration period were a subsequent registration period in the same benefit year.

SEC. 2. Subsection (g) of section 1 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1094), as amended June 20, 1939 (53 Stat. 845), is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits and the amount of contributions due pursuant to this act, employment after June 30, 1940, in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer or as an employee representative shall be disregarded."

SEC. 3. Subsection (h) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

(h) The term "registration period" means, with respect to any employee, the period which begins with the first day for which such employee registers at an employment office in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office; and thereafter each period which begins with the first day for which he next registers at an employment office after the end of his last preceding registration period and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office.

SEC. 4. Subsection (j) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended by inserting between the first and second sentences thereof the following: "The term 'remuneration' includes also earned income other than for services for hire if the accrual thereof in whole or in part is ascertainable with respect to a particular day or particular days."

SEC. 5. Subsection (k) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(k) Subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act, a day of unemployment, with respect to any employee, means a calendar day on which he is able to work and is available for work and with respect to which (i) no remuneration is payable or accrues to him, and (ii) he has, in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, registered at an employment office: Provided, however, That 'subsidiary remuneration,' as hereinafter defined in this subsection, shall not be considered remuneration for the purpose of this subsection except with respect to an employee whose base-year compensation, exclusive of earnings from the position or occupation in which he earned such subsidiary remuneration, is less than $150: Provided further, That remuneration for a working day which includes a part of each of 2 consecutive calendar days shall be deemed to have been earned on the second of such 2 days, and any individual who takes work for such working day shall not by reason thereof be deemed not available for work on the first of such calendar days.

"For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'subsidiary remuneration' means, with respect to any employee, remuneration not in excess of an average of $1 a day for the period with respect to which such remuneration is payable or accrues, if the work from which the remuneration is derived (i) requires substantially less than full time as determined by generally prevailing standards, and (ii) is susceptible of performance at such times and under such circumstances as not to be inconsistent with the holding of normal full-time employment in another occupation."

SEC. 6. Subsection (m) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the designation "(m)" and substituting "(l)" therefor.

SEC. 7. Subsection (n) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(m) The term 'benefit year' means the 12-month period beginning July 1 of any year and ending June 30 of the next year, except that a registration period beginning in June and ending in July shall be deemed to be in the benefit year ending in such month of June."

SEC. 8. Subsection (l) of section 1 of said act is hereby transferred to follow the subsection relettered as "(m)," and is amended to read as follows:

"(n) The term 'base year' means the completed calendar year immediately preceding the beginning of the benefit year."

SEC. 9. Subsection (a) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Benefits shall be payable to any qualified employee (as defined in sec. 3 of this act) (i) for each day of unemployment in excess of 7 during the first registration period, within a benefit year, in which he has 7 or more days of unemployment, and (ii) for each day of unemployment in excess of 4 during any subsequent registration period beginning in the same benefit year.

"The benefits payable to any such employee for each such day of unemployment shall be the amount appearing in the following table in column II on the line on which, in column I, appears the compensation range containing the total amount of compensation payable to him with respect to employment in his base year:

"Column I Total compensation	Column II Daily benefit rate
$150 to $199.99	$1.75
$200 to $474.99	2.00
$475 to $749.99	2.25
$750 to $999.99	2.50
$1,000 to $1,299.99	3.00
$1,300 to $1,599.99	3.50
$1,600 and over	4.00"

SEC. 10. Subsection (c) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) The maximum number of days of unemployment within a benefit year for which benefits may be paid to an employee shall be 100."

SEC. 11. Subsection (d) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) If the Board finds that at any time more than the correct amount of benefits has been paid to any individual under this act or a payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940), recovery by adjustments in subsequent payments to which such individual is entitled under this act or any other act administered by the Board may, except as otherwise provided in this subsection, be made under regulations prescribed by the Board. If such individual dies before recovery is completed, recovery may be made by set-off or adjustments, under regulations prescribed by the Board, in subsequent payments due, under this act or any other act administered by the Board, to the estate, designee, next of kin, legal representative, or surviving spouse of such individual, with respect to the employment of such individual.

"Adjustments under this subsection may be made either by deductions from subsequent payments or, with respect to payments which are to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes, by subtracting the total amount of benefits paid in excess of the proper amount from the actuarial value, as determined by the Board, of such payments to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes and recertifying such payments on the basis of the reduced actuarial value. In the latter case, recovery shall be deemed to have been completed upon such recertification.

"There shall be no recovery in any case in which more than the correct amount of benefits has been paid to an individual or payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940) who, in the judgment of the Board, is without fault when, in the judgment of the Board, recovery would be contrary to the purpose of this act or would be against equity or good conscience.

"No certifying or disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount certified or paid by him in good faith to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under the third paragraph of this subsection or has been begun but cannot be completed under the first paragraph of this subsection."

SEC. 12. Subsection (f) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) If (i) benefits are paid to any employee with respect to unemployment in any registration period, and it is later determined that remuneration is payable to such employee with respect to any period which includes days in such registration period which had been determined to be days of unemployment, and (ii) the person or company from which such remuneration is payable has, before payment thereof, notice of the payment of benefits upon the basis of days of unemployment included in such period, the remuneration so payable shall not be reduced by reason of such benefits but the remuneration so payable, to the extent to which benefits were paid upon the basis of days which had been determined to be days of unemployment and which are included in the period for which such remuneration is payable, shall be held to be a special fund in trust for the Board. The amount of such special fund shall be paid to the Board, and in the collection thereof the Board shall have the same authority, and the same penalties shall apply, as are provided in section 8 of this act with respect to contributions. The proceeds of such special fund shall be credited to the account. Such benefits, to the extent that they are represented in such a special fund which has been collected by the Board, shall be disregarded for the purposes of subsection (c) of this section."

SEC. 13. Section 3 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"QUALIFYING CONDITION

"SEC. 3. An employee shall be a 'qualified employee' if the Board finds that there was payable to him compensation of not less than $150 with respect to the base year."

SEC. 14. Paragraph (ii) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(ii) any of the 30 days beginning with the day with respect to which the Board finds that he failed, without good cause, to accept suitable work available on such day and offered to him, or to comply with instructions from the Board requiring him to apply for suitable work or to report, in person or by mail, as the Board may require, to an employment office;"

SEC. 15. Paragraph (iv) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(iv) any of the 75 days beginning with the first day of any registration period with respect to which the Board finds that he knowingly made or aided in making or caused to be made any false or fraudulent statement or claim for the purpose of causing benefits to be paid."

SEC. 16. Paragraph (v) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(v) any day in any period with respect to which the Board finds that he is receiving or has received annuity payments or pensions under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, or insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, or payments for similar purposes under any other act of Congress, or unemployment benefits under an unemployment-compensation law of any State or of the United States other than this act: Provided, That if an employee receives or is held entitled to receive any such payment, other than unemployment benefits, with respect to any period which includes days of unemployment in a registration period, after benefits under this act for such registration period have been paid, the amount by which such benefits under this act were increased by including such days as days of unemployment shall be recoverable by the Board: And provided further, That if any part of any such payment or payments, other than unemployment benefits, which is apportionable to such days of unemployment is less in amount than the benefits under this act which, but for this paragraph, would be payable and not recoverable with respect to such days of unemployment, the preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply but such benefits under this act for such days of unemployment shall be diminished or recoverable in the amount of such part of such other payment or payments."

SEC. 17. Paragraph (vi) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(vi) any day in any registration period with respect to which period the Board finds that he earned, in train and engine service, yard service, dining-car service, sleeping-car service, parlor-car service, or other Pullman-car or similar service, or express service on trains, at least the equivalent of 20 times his daily benefit rate."

SEC. 18. Subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"(vii) any day in any registration period comprising the last 14 days of a period of 28 days with respect to which period of 28 days the Board finds that he earned, in train and engine service, yard service, dining-car service, sleeping-car service, parlor-car service, or other Pullman-car or similar service, or express service on trains, at least the equivalent of 40 times his daily benefit rate;

"(viii) any day which is a Sunday or which the Board finds is generally observed as a holiday in the locality in which he registered for such day, unless such day was immediately preceded by a day of unemployment and immediately followed by a day of unemployment or was the last day in a registration period and was immediately preceded by a day of unemployment: Provided, That if two or more consecutive days are a Sunday and one or more holidays, then with respect to any employee such consecutive days shall not be considered as days of unemployment unless they were immediately preceded by a day of unemployment and immediately followed by a day of unemployment or the last of such days was the last day of a registration period and such days were immediately preceded by a day of unemployment."

SEC. 19. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 5 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows: "Each qualified employee whose claim for benefits has been denied in whole or in part upon an initial determination with respect thereto upon a basis other than one which is reviewable pursuant to one of the succeeding paragraphs of this subsection, shall be granted an opportunity for a fair hearing thereon before a district board."

SEC. 20. Subsection (c) of section 5 of said act is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"Any claimant whose claim for benefits has been denied in an initial determination with respect thereto upon the basis of his not being a qualified employee, and any claimant who contends that under an initial determination of his claim he has been awarded benefits at less than the proper rate, may appeal to the Board for the review of such determination. Thereupon the Board shall review the determination and for such review may designate one of its officers or employees to receive evidence and to report to the Board thereon together with recommendations. In any such case the Board or the person so designated shall, by publication or otherwise, notify all parties properly interested of their right to participate in the proceeding and, if a hearing is to be held, of the time and place of the hearing. At the request of any party properly interested the Board shall provide for a hearing, and may provide for a hearing on its own motion. The Board shall prescribe regulations governing the appeals provided for in this paragraph and for decisions upon such appeal.

"In any case in which benefits are awarded to a claimant in whole or in part upon the basis of pay earned in the service of a person or company found by the Board to be an employer as defined in this act but which does not comply with the provisions of this act and denies that it is such an employer, such benefits awarded on such basis shall be paid to such claimant subject to a right of recovery of such benefits. The Board shall thereupon designate one of its officers or employees to receive evidence and to report to the Board on whether such benefits should be repaid. In any such case the Board or the person so designated shall, by publication or otherwise, notify all parties properly interested of their right to participate in the proceeding and, if a hearing is to be held, of the time and place of the hearing. At the request of any party properly interested the Board shall provide for a hearing, and may provide for a hearing on its own motion. The Board shall prescribe regulations governing the proceedings provided for in this paragraph and for decisions upon such proceedings.

"Final decision of the Board in the cases provided for in the preceding two paragraphs shall be communicated to the claimant and to the other interested parties within 15 days after it is made. Any properly interested party notified, as hereinabove provided, of his right to participate in the proceedings may obtain a review of any such decision by which he claims to be aggrieved or the determination of any issue therein in the manner provided in subsection (f) of this section with respect to the review of the Board's decisions upon claims for benefits and subject to all provisions of law applicable to the review of such decisions. Subject only to such review, the decision of the Board upon all issues determined in such decision shall be final and conclusive for all purposes and shall conclusively establish all rights and obligations, arising under this act, of every party notified as hereinabove provided of his right to participate in the proceedings."

SEC. 21. Section 6 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Employers shall file with the Board, in such manner and at such times as the Board by regulations may prescribe, returns under oath of compensation of employees, and, if the Board shall so require, shall distribute to employees annual statements of compensation: Provided, That no returns shall be required of employers which would duplicate information contained in similar returns required under any other act of Congress administered by the Board. The Board's record of the compensation so returned shall, for the purpose of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits, be conclusive as to the amount of compensation earned by an employee during the period covered by the return, and the fact that the Board's records show that no return was made of the compensation claimed to be earned by an employee during a particular period shall, for the purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits, be taken as conclusive that no compensation was earned by such employee during that period, unless the error in the amount of compensation in the one case, or failure to make or record return of the compensation in the other case, is called to the attention of the Board within 18 months after the date on which the last return covering any portion of the calendar year which includes such period is required to have been made."

SEC. 22. Subsection (d) of section 11 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) So much of the balance in the fund as of June 30 of each year as is in excess of $6,000,000 shall as of such date be transferred from the fund and credited to the account."

SEC. 23. The first paragraph of subsection (l) of section 12 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "A person in the employ of the Board on June 30, 1939, and on June 30, 1940, and who has had experience in railroad service, shall acquire a competitive classified civil-service status if, after recommendation by the Board to the Civil Service Commission, he shall pass such noncompetitive tests of fitness for the position for which the Board recommends him as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe."

SEC. 24. Subsection (l) of section 12 of said act is hereby further amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a colon and adding the following: "And provided further, That, for the purpose of registering unemployed employees who reside in areas in which no employer facilities are located, or in which no employer will make facilities available for the registration of such employees, the Board may, without regard to civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, appoint persons to accept, in such areas, registration of such employees and perform services incidental thereto and may compensate such persons on a piece-rate basis to be determined by the Board. Notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 22, 1906 (34 Stat. 449), or any other provision of law, the Board may detail employees from stations outside the District of Columbia to other stations outside the District of Columbia or to service in the District of Columbia, and may detail employees in the District of Columbia to service outside the District of Columbia: Provided, That all details hereunder shall be made by specific order and in no case for a period of time exceeding 120 days. Details so made may, on expiration, be renewed from time to time by order of the Board, in each particular case, for periods not exceeding 120 days."

SEC. 25. Subsection (h) of section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 307) is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purposes of determining monthly compensation and years of service and for the purposes of subsections (a), (c), and (d) of section 2 and subsection (a) of section 5 of this act, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway labor organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount thereof is less than $3 and (1) such compensation is earned between December 31, 1936, and April 1, 1940, and taxes thereon pursuant to sections 2 (a) and 3 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 or sections 1500 and 1520 of the Internal Revenue Code are not paid prior to July 1, 1940; or (2) such compensation is earned after March 31, 1940.

SEC. 26. Section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. (a) If the Board finds that at any time more than the correct amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits has been paid to any individual under this act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or a payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940), recovery by adjustments in subsequent payments to which such individual is entitled under this act or any other act administered by the Board may, except as otherwise provided in this section, be made under regulations prescribed by the Board. If such individual dies before recovery is completed, recovery may be made by set-off or adjustments, under regulations prescribed by the Board, in subsequent payments due, under this act or any other act administered by the Board, to the estate, designee, next of kin, legal representative, or surviving spouse of such individual, with respect to the employment of such individual.

"(b) Adjustments under this section may be made either by deductions from subsequent payments or, with respect to payments which are to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes, by subtracting the total amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits paid in excess of the proper amount from the actuarial value, as determined by the Board, of such payments to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes and recertifying such payments on the basis of the reduced actuarial value. In the latter case, recovery shall be deemed to have been completed upon such recertification.

"(c) There shall be no recovery in any case in which more than the correct amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits under this act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 has been paid to an individual or payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940) who, in the judgment of the Board, is without fault when, in the judgment of the Board, recovery would be contrary to the purpose of the acts or would be against equity or good conscience.

"(d) No certifying or disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount certified or paid by him in good faith to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under subsection (c) of this section or has been begun but cannot be completed under subsection (a) of this section."

SEC. 27. (a) Subsection (e) of section 1532 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purpose of determining the amount of taxes under sections 1500 and 1520, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount there of is less than $3 and (1) such compensation is earned before April 1, 1940, and the taxes thereon under such sections are not paid before July 1, 1940, or (2) such compensation is earned after March 31, 1940."

(b) For the purpose of determining the amount of taxes under sections 2 (a) and 3 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount thereof is less than $3 and the taxes thereon under such sections are not paid before July 1, 1940.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill merely provides for the liberalization of a measure which we felt would require liberalizing when we passed it in 1938. You will recall that the unemployment-insurance law, passed in 1938, provided a tax of 3 percent. In order to make absolutely certain that the claims which might be filed would be paid without fail, we provided for benefits very much lower than would have been justified in the light of experience with the operation of the law as then enacted. Now, with the experience of 15 months behind us we find that there will be no trouble at all about paying benefits which are more reasonable. We have, therefore, provided for the increase in the number of benefit days from 80 to 100 in each year. We have liberalized the waiting period so as to require only 7 days instead of the time now required. We have also inserted a new section which is in the nature of a restriction rather than a liberalization. It will be section 22 of the bill because the committee has stricken out a section which preceded the new section to which I have referred.

This new section, 22, is intended to require the transfer as of the close of the last fiscal year and as of the close of each fiscal year thereafter of the assets of the administration fund in excess of $6,000,000. The purpose of this new section is to provide by statute instead of by administrative action for the transfer just mentioned. In all fairness, however, it must be said that the action of the Board in this respect has been wholly satisfactory. We are now providing by statute for the transfer as already explained.

A great deal of the present law is restated in this measure, and the main changes are few and simple.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. To what extent will this change affect the railroads themselves?

Mr. CROSSER. The railroads will not pay a penny more than they are paying now.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. This is merely an allowance out of what the railroads are paying. The same percentage of contribution will prevail?

Mr. CROSSER. If my colleague will permit, at the present time instead of there being a deficit in the fund as some originally feared when we did not know so much about railroad unemployment insurance, there is a surplus of $125,000,000, and it is stated that accurately calculated it will be a surplus of $160,000,000. In other words, we have that much of a reserve fund on the basis of the present tax.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. In the opinion of my colleague, then, the railroads would have no objection?

Mr. CROSSER. I should say that the railroads will offer little, if any, objection to the bill as it is now presented after certain elisions from the bill made in committee.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. I did not quite clearly understand the gentleman's motion to suspend. The bill as reported by the committee has sections 22, 25, and 27 stricken out of it.

Mr. CROSSER. Sections 22 and 24 are stricken from the bill. Section 27 is a new section, a rewrite of section 30.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Some representatives of the railroad brotherhoods, and of the railroads themselves, talked about the weekly amount received by beneficiaries of this unemployment act, and the statement has been made that railroad workers receive less per week of unemployment insurance than people employed in some other industries.

Mr. CROSSER. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I see nothing in the bill about the number of weeks or the number of days per year during which benefits will be paid. Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. CROSSER. I can tell the gentleman in a moment, the per diem benefit payment.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have seen those tables. As the change works out what will be the increase for each railroad worker, say?

Mr. CROSSER. The main increase is in the number of days for which insurance will be paid. This has been increased from 80 to 100 days per year, which is a very important gain. Also by virtue of the fact that the waiting period has been reduced substantially—the benefits have been increased.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The point I am trying to get at is that over the period of the past 15 months they have been able to determine the average benefit received by the unemployed railroad worker. What will it be under the amendments we are now considering?

Mr. CROSSER. We cannot tell because the percentage of unemployment varies greatly in different years.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think what the gentleman from Kentucky means is the amount of money per day.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I know what that is; I see that. Some of the railroad workers have talked to me about it. The average is not very much.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The average is $7.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Seven dollars a week.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Under this they will receive about $12.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. An average of about $12.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I might say for the benefit of the gentleman from Kentucky that at the present time the unemployed railroad man gets an average of about $7 a week; while on the other hand those under State unemployment insurance average $10 a week.

Mr. CROSSER. His average will be $11.48 per week.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. So the increase is from an average of $7 per week up to $11 plus per week?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. There is one other point I would like to ask the gentleman to bring out. This bill has been changed from the original bill so that it no longer carries the provision relative to railroad retirement pay, which was objected to by some of the railroads and employers over the country.

Mr. CROSSER. If I correctly understand what the gentleman means, that is true. Of course, the gentleman will remember that there is a provision in section 16 which reads as follows:

And provided further, That if that part of any such payment or payments, other than unemployment benefits, which is apportionable to such days of unemployment is less in amount than the benefits under this act which, but for this paragraph, would be payable and not recoverable with respect to such days of unemployment, the preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply but such benefits under this act for such days of unemployment shall be diminished or recoverable in the amount of such part of such other payment or payments.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is true.

Mr. CROSSER. But that is a different thing.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It strikes out the objectionable thing as to the railroad-retirement pay itself.

Mr. CROSSER. I do not say that it was objectionable, but it does strike out that to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Have the railroad workers agreed on this bill?

Mr. CROSSER. I think I can say without any reservation that the railroad workers are all satisfied with this bill. Of course, they would have preferred not to have had the carry-over provision stricken out, but they are all in favor of the passage of the bill as it stands.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is there any objection by the railroads to the bill? What I am trying to get at, is there a general agreement?

Mr. CROSSER. I think I may say that while the railroads would probably have liked to have had the tax reduced, their opposition to the bill has been practically removed as a result of eliminating the carry-over clause and certain other features of the original bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And are glad it was not raised?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. KUNKEL. What this actually does is to bring the original legislation up to date in light of the experience of the past 15 months?

Mr. CROSSER. That is correct. Now, I think I have covered the main features of the bill.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. May I ask the gentleman if we were not in constant communication with the railroad employees and the railroads during the hearings and if this was not carefully and painstakingly gone over with both groups before being reported?

Mr. CROSSER. That is correct.

Mr. PATRICK. And this bill has been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes. The committee was unanimous in its report.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This will stabilize the rate so there will not be changes in the near future?

Mr. CROSSER. I do not think there will be changes in the immediate future. You cannot tell what the experience of a few years may be. It is not the same thing as the retirement system, which has less variation in percentage of claims filed. You have sudden increases and decreases in unemployment. I do not think there will be any change in the immediate future.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I point out to the gentleman from Ohio that this particular piece of legislation is an adjustment of this act in the light of the experience that has been had with the original bill?

Mr. CROSSER. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. At the time the original unemployment and retirement law was passed for railroad workers it was not known how it would work out.

Mr. CROSSER. We had to experiment, and we had therefore to be very careful not to provide for too great benefits at first.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This legislation has been introduced in light of the experience had in the past 2 or 3 years?

Mr. CROSSER. That is correct.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The principal benefits enjoyed by the railroad men will be simply these: The waiting period will be cut down from 14 to 7 days, and the benefit will be liberalized to the extent of about 115 percent?

Mr. CROSSER. It increases the benefit days per year from 80 to 100 days. The percentage of liberalization is less than stated by the gentleman.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. The increase is not that great under the bill as it is before the House. The House committee struck out an increase that amounted to 25 percent in the carry-over of creditable days, which was 50 days as proposed, and this was carried over for certain senior employees.

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. LEA. The House committee cut that out.

Mr. CROSSER. That is true.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act was enacted in 1938. The provisions contained in the original bill were more or less speculative with respect to the total amount of income that would be received, under its provisions, from the railroads for support of the fund, and, likewise, uncertain was the amount that would be required to be paid out to employees as benefits under the terms of the act. In other words, the whole plan was experimental in character. It was necessarily so, because there was no definite factual information available upon which reliance could be placed that would enable anyone to assume that changes would not be possible or necessary in the future based upon the experience to be gained in the operation of the plan.

Fifteen months have now elapsed since the enactment of the legislation. During this time certain trends and conditions have been observed that seemed to require consideration and change to the end that the act might be improved from the standpoint of administration, and likewise to make available more adequate benefits to the employees.

The operation of the fund has demonstrated that the 3-percent tax paid by the railroads produces an income in excess of the amount that is necessary to pay the benefits that accrued to unemployed railroad employees under the rates and conditions contained in the bill. The amount of the surplus now in the fund is variously estimated up to as high as $150,000,000. While there may be some dispute as to what can properly be considered as the amount of the surplus, yet, in any case, it is a sizable sum. There is no dispute, however, that the present tax rate of 3 percent will in all probability at all times produce an amount greatly in excess of what will be necessary to make the necessary benefit payments to the employees under the rates now in effect. Thus, a question of policy now presents itself, namely, whether the tax should be reduced and thereby the income decreased to a point that more nearly approximates the amount necessary to pay the benefits now provided for by the act, or should the tax remain at the present level and the benefits to employees be increased to a point that would be justified on the basis of present income; or should there be an intermediate point agreed upon that would enable a reduction of the rate to be paid by the railroads which at the same time would not prevent an increase of benefits to the employees.

All of the possible solutions, as above enumerated, were considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. After hearing witnesses produced by both management and men and giving the matter careful and serious consideration the committee has reported the bill now under consideration. The bill, as reported, adopts the premise that the tax as originally fixed should remain, for at least the present, and that the provisions of the original act should be amended to provide more adequate benefits to the employees.

In support of the action taken by the committee, the testimony shows that a 3-percent tax is the universal rate fixed by the legislation of the several States for the maintenance of industrial unemployment insurance funds. The tax of 3 percent fixed by the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is therefore in accord with that paid by industry for similar purposes. It may be that future experience might reveal that a decreased or graduated tax would be possible without destroying the benefits this bill now before the House seeks to give employees. In such event, of course, further consideration can be given to the matter. The basic theory of all such legislation is, as it should be, that the tax income should not exceed the amount necessary to provide adequate benefits to the employees, and to provide solvency and stability for the fund under all the varying economic changes that come in the course of years.

With respect to the adequacy of benefits now being received by railroad employees under the provisions of the law as now in effect, it would seem, from the testimony presented to the committee, that in some respects the provisions of State laws provided a better rate of compensation for unemployed industrial workers than the Federal act provided for railroad workers. To adjust what seemed to be inequities in this respect, the committee has provided by this bill, first, an increase in daily rate of benefits; second, increase in the number of days of compensable unemployment in each registration period; third, increase in the number of days of benefit to be paid in the benefit year; and, fourth, reduction in the waiting period requirements. The time at my disposal in the limited debate that is possible under the rules of the House precludes my giving in detail the respective changes. Suffice it to say, however, they do provide a substantial increase of benefits to unemployed railroad workers and at the same time the solvency and adequacy of the fund are preserved.

The committee has also recommended administrative changes that it is believed will prove beneficial to all parties in interest. It is unnecessary to give any further explanation of such than has already been given and as appears in the committee report.

Whatever additional changes may be necessary or advisable with respect to the tax to be paid by the railroad, benefits to be received by the employees or in the administrative features of the act will depend upon the experience gained in the operation of the fund upon the basis of the changes now made. It can be certainly said that the original Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is greatly improved by the changes provided for in this bill and the purpose and interest of that act, to provide compensation to unemployed railroad workers, is greatly strengthened. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] such time as he may desire.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative in Congress of approximately 25,000 railroad employees in the Twenty-third Congressional District of Pennsylvania, I desire to heartily approve S. 3920 which amends the existing Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act of 1938. These amendments will increase present benefits and at the same time reduce the waiting period from 15 days to 7 days in establishing eligibility.

At the same time, I want to briefly explain the amendment which I hope to offer to this bill. This amendment is very simple and is designed to correct an injustice to the unemployed railroad men of this Nation resulting from an administrative regulation prescribed by the Railroad Retirement Board and not by the Congress of the United States.

At the present time an unemployed railroad man must report to a designated agency of the Railroad Retirement Board every other day in order to be eligible for unemployment-insurance benefits. My amendment simply lengthens the time of reporting to a minimum of once in every 3 days. However, if the Railroad Retirement Board should find it feasible to restrict the reporting to once in 4 days or weekly, it is permissible. But in no case can they require an unemployed railroad man to report more often than once in every 3 days.

To cite the injustice under the present regulations of the Railroad Retirement Board that require an unemployed railroad man to report every other day, let me give you an illustration. For the sake of comparison, let us change places for a moment with the average unemployed railroad man. You reside in a railroad town which invariably is the only industry in that community. You are employed in the railroad shop as a machinist or boilermaker, and have spent the best years of your life in learning your trade. You know little of any other type of industry.

At the end of your day's work you receive notice that due to a lull in business it will be necessary to reduce the force until such time as business resumes a normal stride. You are an average individual with a wife and two or more children and either renting or buying a home. You are faced with providing a livelihood for your family every day in the week and absorbed in plans to properly educate your children if at all possible.

But—you have no work tomorrow. In order to meet your obligation to your family you apply for railroad unemployment-insurance benefits by filing an application with your foreman or supervisor. After waiting 15 consecutive days you receive your first weekly compensation check which, according to statistics for the year 1939, averaged $7 weekly. Let me remind you at this moment that if you were eligible to State unemployment-insurance benefits under the Social Security Act you would receive an average of $10 weekly.

To comply with the present regulations of the Railroad Retirement Board you have reported seven times which means you have made a total of seven trips from your home to a designated agency of the Railroad Retirement Board during the 15-day waiting period. Possibly you own a car, or use a streetcar, or you may by lack of choice be compelled to walk. Nevertheless, as an average railroad man you either drive or use the streetcar and as a result have an expenditure of at least 75 cents weekly. When you are only receiving $7 weekly you are in no position to have your unemployment compensation benefits reduced by approximatcly 10 percent.

Turning our attention from the cost of these frequent reporting trips, let us for a moment consider the hardship in being compelled to remain at home to comply with the regulation of reporting every other day.

You cannot visit your relatives or friends, should they live in an area where there is no reporting agency. You cannot rest for a few days, visit the mountains, or go fishing. You are not permitted to forget the shop because of this frequent reporting regulation. Gentlemen, I worked in a railroad shop and no doubt many of you too have worked behind a shop fence day in and day out.

This bureaucratic regulation of reporting every other day is the brain-child of the Railroad Retirement Board, and not the decree of Congress.

Remember, I asked you to consider yourself as a machinist or boilermaker in a railroad shop. Your next door neighbor is a coal miner, and under a recent amendment adopted by this Congress coal miners employed in railroad-owned coal mines were transferred from the provisions of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act to the provisions of the Social Security Act, and likewise under the State Unemployment Insurance Act, a part of Social Security.

Your neighbor, like yourself, finds himself unemployed due to a lull in business. He makes application for State Unemployment Insurance Benefits but instead of reporting every other day he is required to report weekly as are all other workers in the nation who come under the provisions of the Social Security Act.

Is there any sane reason for requiring the railroad man to report every other day while his neighbors report once a week?

The Railroad Retirement Board insists that this regulation is necessary to avoid chiseling and to protect the Railroad retirement fund. When the Retirement Board uses the term "chiseling" they have in mind the unemployed railroad man being tempted to take another position during his lay-off period.

Gentlemen, in the average railroad community there is no other job for the railroad man. If chiseling is such an evil to be feared that it requires reporting every other day, why does not the State unemployment insurance departments of the various States require all workers under social security to report every other day?

Gentlemen, this reporting regulation of the Railroad Retirement Board is rank discrimination against a class of workers of whom I am proud to be a member.

May I respectfully remind you that my amendment establishes a minimum of reporting once in every 3 days. It does not ask that the reporting be confined to once weekly. In short, it simply places a check-rein on the regulations for reporting as prescribed by the Railroad Retirement Board by limiting the period to once every 3 days.

Gentlemen, I speak for the 25,000 railroad men in my district. We have appealed to the regional office of the Retirement Board without success, and as a last resort carried our case to the Railroad Retirement Board in Washington. Our pleas fell on deaf ears, and our only recourse now is to the Congress of the United States.

Gentlemen, I beseech you in simple justice to the railroad men of America to correct this bureaucratic exhibition of rank discrimination.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] such time as he may desire.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter signed by the national legislative representatives of four railroad brotherhoods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the railroad employees are industrious, loyal, and patriotic American wage earners. There are no Communists or Nazis or alien agitators among them. I am glad of this opportunity to vote for legislation that will provide better and more substantial unemployment insurance for scores of thousands of railroad employees and to safeguard their economic status in periods of depression. The American people are entitled to efficient and safe service, and modern equipment on the railroads.

I am convinced that the best way to promote employment on the railroads is to give them a chance to make reasonable profits and to employ labor at American standards of wages. I understand that this proposed legislation does not call for any further tax from the railroads as they are already taxed almost to death, and many of them are in the red. The Congress should protect the railroads against unfair competition from motortrucks and busses and other unregulated competition that diverts traffic from them and assures them of a fair opportunity to survive under private ownership. Representing a district in which there are thousands of railroad employees, I am naturally glad to support this measure or any proper legislation that is beneficial to them. [Applause.]

I am appreciative and am grateful for the endorsement of the undersigned brotherhoods after my long service in Congress and their members can always depend on a square deal from me. My slogan is better and bigger railroads, more railroad employees, and passing prosperity around. The railroads are the truest barometer of prosperity, and employment and prosperity are always one and inseparable.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 25, 1940.

To the Officers and Members of the B. of L. E., O. R. C., B. of M. W. E. and B. of R. S. of A., Twenty-sixth District of New York.

DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: In this time of national stress our present political campaign assumes unusual importance. It is clear to all that in protecting the vital rights and interests of the American people decisions of profound importance must be made by the Members of Congress who will be elected next November. In this connection may we again commend to your favorable consideration Hon. HAMILTON FISH, who has represented the Twenty-sixth District of New York since 1919. His whole career in Congress during 10 terms of loyal service has been characterized by complete devotion to the public interest. While he is a powerful friend of all who toil, in whatever field, he is equally fair to all legitimate interests. Invariably we have found him ready to speak and vote in support of worth-while legislation, and just as ready to vigorously oppose dubious measures framed for the benefit of special interests in conflict with the welfare of the common people. In short, on his exceptionally fine record he richly merits the strong support of every voter in the Twenty-sixth District, regardless of party or other affiliations.

We feel in duty bound to urge that all take an active and personal interest in the reelection of Representative FISH to the position he so ably and impartially fills. He now has the outstanding advantage to his constituents and the Nation of 20 years of active experience and intensive training in the complex work of national legislation, which, in conjunction with the high esteem in which he is held by his colleagues, have placed him as ranking minority member of the powerful Committee on Rules and the equally important Committee on Foreign Relations. He has never failed the brotherhoods in time of need, or whenever we have called upon him, and now is our one opportunity in 2 years to demonstrate our appreciation for his unfailing friendship. We trust that you will handle this matter with all expedition and efficiency to the end that all our members, their families, and friends, as well as other working men and women in the Twenty-sixth District, go to the polls and vote on election day, and return our good friend to Congress.

Fraternally yours,

J. CORBETT,

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at the point where I offered an amendment to the bill S. 2103 during its consideration this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us (S. 3920) has for its purpose the amendment of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939. This is a very meritorious bill and should receive the unanimous approval of this House. It was understood at the time the original act was passed in 1938 that the bill would need amendment after a sufficient time had passed to enable its sponsors to ascertain its weaknesses, the purpose being to provide adequate protection for those railway employees unfortunate enough to become unemployed. It is now known through experience under the act that the 3-percent contribution levied under it is amply sufficient to increase the benefits under the existing act. Two courses were open to the committee—one to lower the contribution levied upon the railroad; the other, to keep the contribution as it is and increase the benefits. The latter course was adopted. Under the bill before us, as explained by members of the committee, the waiting period is lessened and the period of payment is lengthened, which results in very material benefit to the unemployed coming under the provisions of the act. I urge all Members of the House who are interested in giving adequate relief to railroad employees to support this bill.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I believe the provisions of this bill have been satisfactorily presented to the House. Perhaps no further outline of the bill is required. However, I do want to comment on the fact that our colleague, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], is with the President in making a visit to certain defense activities in the gentleman's State, including the Glenn Martin Aircraft plant, and is unable to be with us. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] is interested in this bill and if present would support it.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I may say also that the gentleman from Maryland would support this legislation as reported without any hesitation. I am sorry he is not able to be here.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISABLED VETERANS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 6450, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6450

A bill to provide for the issuance, by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, of regulations providing for more liberal policies in determining the service connection of disabilities, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to include, in the regulations governing proofs and evidence pertaining to service connection of disabilities, additional provisions requiring: That, in each case where a veteran is seeking service connection for any disability, consideration shall be given to the places, types, and circumstances of his service as shown by his service record, the official history of each organization in which he served, his medical records, and all medical and lay evidence; that, where the veteran is shown to have been engaged in combat with an enemy of the United States, or during service in some war, campaign, or expedition, to have been subjected to other arduous conditions of military or naval service, such disability as can reasonably be considered to have been due to or aggravated by the conditions of all of his active military or naval service, shall be determined to be directly due to or aggravated by such service in line of duty, under all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, unless it shall have been clearly established by clear and unmistakable evidence that any such disability was not originated in or aggravated by his military or naval service; and that the reasons for granting or denying service connection in any case considered under this law shall be recorded in full in each such case.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, what is this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. It is a veterans' bill and all the Members on the gentleman's side of the House who are members of the Veterans' Committee favor it.

Mr. FISH. It is a unanimous report, and under the rules has not the gentleman an opportunity to explain the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I will explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that some gentleman demand a second.

Mr. FISH. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second is considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this measure really explains itself. The object of it is to give the veteran more the benefit of the doubt in those cases where the records are not entirely clear or where the records are not available. We have had a great deal of difficulty about the records of disabled World War veterans who were suffering from service-connected disabilities, and especially is that true with reference to veterans who served overseas.

As a result, we attempted in 1924 to take care of the situation by establishing what we call a presumption of service-connected disability for all veterans who broke down prior, I believe, to January 1, 1925. Unfortunately, there were large numbers of them, and especially among the overseas men, who had not made any claim up to that time. Many of them did not know of their disabilities, many of them thought they could overcome their disabilities as time went on, but in that many of them have been disappointed.

There were literally thousands who were not familiar with the veterans' laws at that time, and did not know they had a right to make their claims and did not find it out until the time limit had expired. As a result there are many thousands of these veterans who are entitled to have their disabilities declared service-connected, but who have not been able to do so for the reason that the burden of proof has been placed upon them, and in many instances the records were lost, destroyed, or incomplete.

Many overseas veterans had their records lost. Many times in line of duty they did not have an opportunity to have these records kept, and when they came home and applied for compensation on the ground that they were entitled to have their disabilities declared service-connected, the burden of proof was on them and they did not have the records to substantiate their claims.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me first finish my statement.

We not only have large numbers of these men who are entitled to compensation as service-connected victims of the World War, but many of them have passed away and their widows and orphans have been denied a single penny because they were unable to substantiate their claims. I am going to refer to one if I may have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I am going to refer to one statement made in the report with reference to the situation in my own State of Mississippi, and I will say to the gentleman from New York that if he will make the same investigation he will find the same conditions prevailed in other States. The report shows that on an investigation it was found that there were 2.93 percent of the 15,904 white overseas veterans who were found at the time of discharge to be suffering from service-connected disabilities, whereas there were found to be 11.26 percent of the veterans who did not go overseas suffering from service-connected disabilities. Now, why was that? That was because the overseas veteran did not have an opportunity, he did not have access to the records, and in many instances those records were lost or in the haste of the conflict of movement to the front they were unable to keep those records, whereas in the home camps they were able to keep the records and the veterans had access to them, and they were not in such a rush to get through and get away as were the men returning from overseas.

If you will investigate the records of other States, as I have said, you will find the same condition prevailed, and this bill, I may say to the gentleman from New York, is for the purpose of correcting those injustices to enable these men to make their applications, and after they have made out what we call a prima facie case, to place the burden of proof on the Veterans' Administration.

I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for a second.

Mr. FISH. I think it was very wholesome that the gentleman should give such an able presentation to the House, but there are some Members here who would like to speak.

Mr. RANKIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. FISH. That has already been ordered, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. A second has been ordered. Does the gentleman from Mississippi reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], a member of the committee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that this legislation will pass. In my opinion, it does not go far enough, but I believe it will be helpful in indicating to those of the Veterans' Administration, and to General Hines in particular, because he makes the regulations, that cases should be rated where there is indication that the disability of a man who served overseas and who was in combat came from war service. We all know that many records made overseas were destroyed. We all know that very many were lost. We all know that many men served in engagement after engagement where there was gas, and yet on their A. G. O. reports there were no records of those gas attacks, and there was no record that the veteran was gassed. And many veterans have died who could have made affidavits to prove that their comrades were gassed.

I remember in one instance a man came out of a hospital with no disability marked on his discharge from service. That man had given both his legs in the service. Of course, in that case the record could easily be corrected, because there was visible evidence that he had lost both his legs in the service.

Clearly, this bill should pass. There is too much left to the discretion of the Veterans' Administration personnel in connection with the decision of service connection in combat injuries and disabilities.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the type of service rendered by men overseas is today having its effect upon the physical structure of such men, and still there is no notation in the service record of these men showing that type of service?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is absolutely true. We all know men who served overseas, who were undoubtedly badly shell shocked, but the men went back to their organizations and to their outfits before they were able to go back, and no record was kept of their having been shell shocked. Today many of those men are able to carry on a gainful occupation, and most of them have been unable to prove service connection for their disability, although there were many engagements where terrific explosions took place, and they had every reason to become shell shocked.

Mr. KUNKEL. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. Would not this cover a situation where a veteran's compensation depended on securing evidence from a hospital abroad, say, in England? I mean, there would be the supposition that he had received injury abroad, without direct evidence from the hospital?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Oh, yes; that is absolutely true. His service, the type of service, would be considered and he would be given service connections unless there was testimony to prove afterward he did not receive it overseas.

Mr. KUNKEL. The reason I make that point is because it is increasingly difficult to obtain evidence from hospitals in England, due to conditions over there, to prove this fact.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is true.

Mr. KUNKEL. And therefore we should transfer the burden of proof, as is done by this bill?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; and it is impossible to receive evidence from our own American hospitals in France, and also of course from the French hospitals.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to ask if the language of this bill under the gentlewoman's understanding is such that this will help in establishing entitlement to insurance payments as well as compensation, provided the required degree of disability is shown?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It certainly ought to.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] that if a veteran is totally and permanently disabled he would be entitled to his insurance, whether that disability is service-connected or not?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman will find that in certain cases this would be very helpful also in an insurance case.

Mr. RANKIN. It would be helpful where a veteran's insurance had lapsed for lack of payment of premium, and it would be found that he was entitled to compensation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And he had been nervous all during that time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is the type of case I had in mind—the case where a veteran's insurance had lapsed, but where you believe that he was totally disabled before it lapsed. I have worked on some of these cases where the insurance had finally lapsed, but prior to the time of that lapsing the veteran had seemed to me to be entitled to payment. The rule, however, that threw the burden of proof onto the veteran, and the rules as to the kind of evidence that would be considered, have made it very difficult to establish entitlement prior to the lapse of the insurance. I note that the language of the bill provides that the Veterans' Administration shall consider the circumstances attending the veteran's service in its demands for evidence and that this applies to "all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration." I feel sure that this could be of material assistance in establishing the sufficiency of evidence in some technically difficult but obviously meritorious cases.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There are various cases of that kind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how the time stands?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, in the report on this bill the following brief statement is made:

> The general purpose of the bill is to place the combat veteran more nearly on a par with the home-service veteran insofar as the opportunity for establishing service connection of disabilities is concerned.

In a nutshell this is what the bill is for. I do not know how many Members of the House caught the full purport of what the gentleman from Mississippi said when he submitted the figures from his own State. So as to be sure everybody will get it I wish to repeat them. The figures of the Veterans' Administration show the following to be true: That of all veterans of the World War from the State of Mississippi 2.24 percent of those who served overseas were noted on the date of discharge to have disabilities resulting from service, but 14.007 percent of those who did not go overseas were shown to have disabilities resulting from service. Is it not perfectly obvious to any Member of the House that the reason for this is not because the men who served overseas had an easier time of it, but because the records of those men were not as nearly complete as the records of those who served in this country.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman complete his comparison by telling the House that 50 percent of the men who served in our armed forces during the World War served in the United States and the remaining 50 percent overseas?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The same situation that prevails with reference to the veterans of Mississippi prevails likewise with respect to the veterans of all the States of the Union.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Of course, it does. I intended to make that very plain. I just used Mississippi for purposes of illustration.

Now, to sum up what the bill does. The bill in the first place directs that in considering the determination of service connection consideration must be given to the places, types, and circumstances of a man's service as shown by his service record, the official history of each organization in which he served, his medical records, and all medical and lay evidence. That is the first thing it does. It says that you have got to consider not only the proof that a man can bring in in the form of affidavits and things of that sort but you have got to consider the history of his outfit and his experience in the service.

The second thing is that where the veteran is shown to have been engaged in combat with an enemy of the United States, or during service in some war, campaign, or expedition to have been subjected to other arduous conditions of military or naval service, such disability as can reasonably be construed to have been due to or aggravated by the conditions of all of his active military or naval service shall be determined to be directly due to or aggravated by such service in line of duty. In other words, if the history of this man's service indicates that his disability can be reasonably expected to have resulted from that history then it will be presumed to be service connected.

The third thing it does is to make that point very clear by saying:

> Unless it shall have been clearly established by clear and unmistakable evidence that any such disability was not originated in or aggravated by his military or naval service.

In other words, it places the burden of proof to show that a man whose service record would indicate that his disability could reasonably have been expected to have resulted from that experience upon the Government and not upon the veteran; and it is among the veterans who served overseas whose records are lost or may not even have been kept that we find the greatest difficulty in establishing service connection, not among the men whose records of service in this country are available. I am sure the passage of this bill is no more than a matter of justice to the combat veteran.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN], a member of the committee.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, out in my district, near Dayton, Ohio, is located what is familiarly known as the central branch of the National Military Home. It is now officially called the Veterans' Administration facility. It has a population of somewhere between 5,000 and 6,000 veterans. I mention this fact because, while I realize that nearly all of us are in contact with veterans of the World War who will be affected by this legislation, I have a fairly good share by reason of the veterans' facility being located in my home county.

In addition to that, for some 3 or 4 years I served the Government in war-risk insurance legislation, and in connection with that work I came in contact with hundreds, perhaps I could say truthfully thousands, of files of the veterans who had served overseas, as well as those who had served in this country in encampments. Let me mention two things. I should like to have the Members understand in connection with my previous statements that my observation has been that a great many of the veterans who are now suffering from total or permanent disability or are deserving of increased compensation or pensions are men who do not have sufficient record evidence, men who served overseas. They are the ones who are the worst off so far as records are concerned.

The reason is that as they went toward or served at the front there was greater chance of the record being incorrect or of the record being lost or of they themselves not reporting sick because they were too patriotic, and they stayed on the job because they wanted to go over the top the next day regardless of injury or illness from which they were at the time suffering.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not also true that many of the doctors who went overseas lost their lives, many of their comrades lost their lives, so they could not secure affidavits as to their injuries?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. That is true. There is in many instances an entire lack of supporting evidence for those veterans who were in actual combat overseas. They are the ones who have suffered the most injustice, merely by reason of the lack of record evidence.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Looking into the handling of these veterans' cases I found that in the courts in trying these insurance cases the veteran really had no real examination when he left over there. He was anxious to get home and they passed him through the line, turned him out, and gave him a discharge saying, "Your physical condition is good." There were thousands of those cases and, of course, when it gets to the Veterans' Bureau, they say, "Your discharge states your physical condition was good." This bill will help that condition?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. It will. I am glad the gentleman from Kentucky has brought out that point. It is very true that the veterans were anxious to get out of Germany, France, or wherever they were at the time of the evacuation, and they did not have the same opportunity at the time and place of discharge that those who served in this country had to obtain a thorough physical examination, with the result that the records of their discharge militate against them.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. With the average age of the veteran today at 47 years and 6 months, it becomes more difficult day by day for the veteran to search the country for his soldier friends to secure affidavits in order to prove he was disabled in the front lines.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. That is true. I would like to add this one further observation: I know what these combat veterans have experienced. While they were serving their country over there in the mud of Flanders or on some other front, wherever it may have been, they incurred disabilities from which they are suffering today. It is only just and fair, therefore, that their actual service, their hardships, exposures, and dread experience should be given consideration as evidence of probative value and worth.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL],

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, in my district, in Portland, Oreg., we have a veterans' hospital. We have a great many cases similar to those that have been discussed here today, particularly by my colleague who just left the floor. During my service here in the House a great many cases have come to my attention, where veterans with service-connected disabilities have been unable to prove their claims, which have convinced me, as a lawyer, that this bill is exceptionally meritorious. I believe one thing we should do is to deal fairly with the men who were injured during the World War. This bill will permit that to be done. We now have before us legislation under our preparedness program, where we will have many more cases, new ones coming up, under the program we are initiating. Our first duty is to take care of those who were injured during the last World War. I am very happy indeed to support this legislation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that everyone in Congress and outside Congress wants to do justice to those veterans disabled particularly by gunshot wounds in the American Expeditionary Force. All this bill does is to liberalize the law, maybe to lean over backwards a little bit and to give some advantage to those who were wounded overseas by enabling them to prove their records where papers have been lost or destroyed in the war, or eyewitnesses killed.

The very fact that we still have unknown soldiers of the World War proves there are many cases where these records are lacking. I know in my own outfit, for example, on the 15th day of July, when we were moving out of our front-line positions, I ordered my own orderly, who had been gassed, to be taken out by the stretcher bearers. They had proceeded about 25 yards when a big shell landed in the middle of the stretcher, killed my orderly and three of the stretcher bearers immediately, actually blowing them to bits. We moved out immediately, and I have not the faintest idea what became of them or where their remains were buried. There were many cases like that throughout the Army, and there are also many cases where records were lost or destroyed on account of gunfire or changing positions without warning.

This is a perfectly fair proposition, and I hope the bill will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I am wholeheartedly in support of this measure. It pleases me greatly that the other day this House passed a bill granting a charter for the organization of the Purple Heart, which has its headquarters at Tucson, Ariz.

Two or three gentlemen have spoken of having veteran facilities within their districts or counties. The State of Arizona has two such facilities, and I know from the thousands of letters in my office that this bill will be helpful to worthy veterans in distress, and I am for it.

In view of the fact that Arizona now has so many more ex-service men living within her borders than Arizona ever furnished to the wars, due to our remarkable sunshine and climate—and the thousands of communications in my office indicate that ex-service men are having greater difficulty in showing service connection of their disabilities, more than any one other problem—all convinces me of the need and justice of this legislation. I know of many pathetic cases where it is absolutely impossible to show service-connected disability when there is not the shadow of a doubt but that the veteran's disability was really service-connected and had its origin in the war. Of course, we cannot assume that all disabilities of ex-service men came about through their Army service, but surely if a veteran was actually in combat, the presumption is great, and ought to be resolved in his favor, that what he thinks to be service-connected is actually service-connected and so dealt with.

In our desire to legislate for the country's defenders, we must fairly take middle ground between opposite extremes. One extreme would be to be willing to vote no further financial benefits for veterans and their widows and orphans. The opposite extreme would be to open up the Treasury and vote anything and everything on the assumption that nothing is too good for those who have given military service for their country. Obviously, justice lies some place between these extreme attitudes. I recall that on May 13 we passed a bill benefiting widows and orphans as a matter of belated justice, but it must have gone through the minds of many Members of this House at that time that the poor fellow who actually was disabled from wounds or gas or some other bitter experience which he had gone through in actual combat was more in need of our sympathetic consideration than anyone else. This bill supplements the one we passed on May 13, and I feel that it also is an act of belated justice to those men who have been ruled outside by our present legislation. Accordingly, I ask the support of every Member for this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is a very meritorious bill because it places the burden of proof upon the Government or on the Veterans' Administration officials. It takes it off the poor fellow who has lost his records and who cannot put his finger upon the evidence he needs to prove up his claim, and this is exactly what we should do. Why should we force these fellows who went out and offered their lives and served their Nation with all they had within them to prove that they received wounds when we know that they received them, and to prove that they are entitled to what the Government says they should have if certain conditions were fulfilled by them? In many cases they are not only disabled, and so unable to hold a job, but they cannot find employment in competition with younger, more physically fit men.

If we pass this bill it puts the burden of proof on the Government where it should be. They can afford to hire attorneys; the starving ex-service man cannot. I think the bill should go through the House and through the Senate without opposition, because it is badly needed.

I made a radio broadcast a few days ago regarding this very situation and I received hundreds of letters from all over the Nation from men who are unable to prove service connection although they have every proof in their own minds, but they cannot get together the evidence required by the Veterans' Administration. They begged me on every hand to aid them in getting the benefits to which they are entitled under the laws we have passed for them. This bill, if it is passed, will help cure that situation, and will change the thing around so that the presumption will be that their disability is service connected, and the Government will have to prove that it is not. I can think of nothing fairer than that and I think this bill should go through unanimously. If we are sincere and really in earnest about helping the veteran to get some of the justice due him, here is our opportunity to do it. Let us grasp it now and at once. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I want to thank the gentleman, who is the chairman of our committee, for what he has done about this bill, and I think I should say publicly that but for his efforts the bill would not be here today, and I want personally to tell how much it has meant to me to serve on his committee and how much I appreciate what he has done with respect to this measure.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I want to thank the gentleman for his work and to thank the committee for bringing this bill up. I would like also to inquire if there is any estimate as to the number of soldiers this bill will affect and what it will cost?

Mr. RANKIN. No; we have no such estimate, but I am sure the cost will not be great.

I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his kind words. I also wis hto express my gratitude to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] for his kind expressions and also for the splendid service he has rendered on the Veterans' Committee. It has not been a political committee. The members on that committee have worked diligently trying to arrive at just conclusions and bring out legislation that was justified and that would benefit the disabled veterans and their dependents. It has been a harmonious committee, and I am delighted to return not only to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] but to all the members of the Veterans' Committee my sincere thanks for their patience, their kindness, and their untiring efforts in behalf of the disabled veterans and their widows and orphans.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill, as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRE, MARINE, AND CASUALTY INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9722) to provide for the regulation of the business of fire, marine, and casualty insurance, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell the House whether or not the minority Members are agreeable to bringing this up at this time and concurring in the Senate amendments?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. I may say that I have discussed it with the ranking minority Member the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and other Members on the minority side. The gentleman from Illinois conferred with them, and we are all agreeable to the Senate amendments and believe that the bill should be passed in this form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPLANATION

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from Pennsylvania, Mr. MCDOWELL and Mr. CORBETT, were unavoidably detained today. They asked me to announce that had they been present they would have voted for the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act and its amendments.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROUTZOHN, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

PAN-AMERICAN OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time that I might call the attention of the House to the inspired efforts of the newly organized Pan American Olympic Games Committee to arrange for a great Olympic sport carnival to illustrate the solidarity and unity of the 21 American republics. The pan-American games, as a means of creating good will and friendlier relations, is not a new idea. It has been floating around for years, but conditions existing elsewhere have only served to focalize attention on their importance and need. For that reason a group of public-spirited citizens of this and other pan-American countries have unselfishly banded together, unmotivated by thought of personal glory or promise of pecuniary gain, to promote sportsmanship, fellowship, and friendship among the Americas, on a scale never before attempted.

The pan-American games, based on the principle of sound understanding and abounding confidence, as engendered by competitive athletics, is a noble one and it was with great pleasure that I gladly accepted the invitation to be a member of that distinguished Committee.

I am convinced that if such a program were placed on a permanent basis with games alternating between the United States and the Latin American countries it would fit in perfectly with the good-neighbor policy of the President and of Mr. Hull, our distinguished Secretary of State.

In recent conversations with the heads of missions to this country, representing most of the South American governments, enthusiastic endorsement has been given to the proposed games and further they state that their people would be happy for the opportunity to visit the United States to compete with the splendid athletes of this country.

Washington, our Nation's Capital, has been selected as the site for inauguration because it is peculiarly and especially equipped. It is not only the capital of the greatest and wealthiest nation on earth, the capital of political ideology and intellectual attainment, it is also the hub around which revolves the spirit of pan-American unity and friendship.

So, with your cooperation and the cooperation of all Americans, I look forward with anticipation to a new era of friendly competitive athletic relations between the Americas and to that great spectacle of amateur sport, the pan-American Olympic games.

I will have more to say on this subject at a later date and will keep the House advised as to the progress of this plan.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLY and Mr. COSTELLO, by unanimous consent, were granted permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

BOLINROSS CHEMICAL CO., INC.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8868) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc., with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "alleged unlawful."

Page 2, line 2, after "on", insert "or about."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Harold L. Ickes, with reference to a bill that I introduced concerning Bonneville and Grand Coulee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COULEE DAM

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, on account of the fact that in the House only one Member can sponsor a bill, I have introduced a duplicate measure to that offered by the gentleman from Washington, Judge LEAVY. Because of the fact that Coulee Dam is in the northern part of my district and Bonneville in the lower part of my district, I am very much interested in having those two great projects united so as to give cheap electric power to the people of the State of Washington.

AMENDMENT TO THE MOTOR CARRIER ACT

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 10398) to amend part II of the Interstate Commerce Act—the Motor Carrier Act, 1935—as amended, so as to make certain provisions thereof applicable to freight forwarders, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, so as to make certain provisions thereof applicable to freight forwarders

Be it enacted, etc., That part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding after section 228 the following section:

"SEC. 229. The terms 'common carrier by motor vehicle,' 'common carrier of property by motor vehicle,' 'motor carrier,' and/or 'carrier' wherever used in sections 216 (b), 216 (c), 216 (d), 216 (e), 216 (f), 216 (g), 216 (h), 216 (i), 217, 219, 222, and 223 of this part, as now in effect or as hereafter amended, shall include freight forwarders, who are hereby defined to be all persons, except carriers otherwise subject to this act, who in the performance or discharge of an undertaking as a common carrier to transport property, or any class or classes thereof, for the general public in interstate or foreign commerce for compensation, utilize or employ the instrumentalities or services of another common carrier by railroad, water, motor vehicle, or express, or any combination thereof: Provided, however, That any common carrier subject to this act, without making application for or obtaining a certificate, may either directly or by means of a subsidiary corporation or other agency, engage in and conduct forwarding operations subject as to such operations to the same provisions of this act as respectively apply to freight forwarders."

SEC. 2. Such section 229 shall become effective 30 days after the date of enactment of this act, except as to rates, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices contained in tariffs voluntarily filed or adopted by any freight forwarder and filed prior to said effective date, with respect to all of which the provisions of such section shall be held to have become effective as of the date of the filing of such tariffs; and such section 229 shall cease to be effective on August 1, 1941. No freight forwarder shall be held to be criminally liable, under any provision referred to in such section 229, on account of any act done or omitted to be done prior to the date of enactment of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH] is recognized.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I think the membership pretty well understands what this bill undertakes to do.

Prior to the enactment of the Motor Carriers Act in 1936, certain so-called forwarding companies had been performing a valuable service to the shipping public. The railroads and other common carriers were not unfriendly toward them. After the enactment of this legislation—that is, the Motor Carriers Act—the forwarders entered into joint or combination rates with the railroads and other carriers. The question then came before the Interstate Commerce Commission as to whether they were indeed common carriers and had the right to enter into such rates. The Commission held that they did not have this right. The matter then went to the lower courts and finally to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court upheld the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in holding that these forwarders did not have the right to enter into combination or joint rates.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has suspended from time to time the taking effect of this holding. The legislation now under consideration, if passed, would further defer the taking effect until August 1, 1941.

Mr. Eastman testified at some length before the committee of the Senate. He also appeared before the House committee, at which time this matter was under consideration, and Mr. Eastman agreed with our committee that this whole question of forwarder legislation should receive considerable study before permanent legislation is enacted.

This legislation, if passed, will retain the status quo, so to speak, until August 1941, and of course at that time it will expire regardless of whether permanent and well-considered legislation may have been enacted.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. May I ask what would be the situation if this bill should fail to pass at this session of Congress?

Mr. SOUTH. I think Mr. Eastman can best answer what the effect would be I may say to the gentleman from Arizona. His statement on this point is brief and I should like to read it:

As I have stated, if the motor carriers are obliged, after July 20, to charge their local less-carload rates on forwarder traffic, there is every reason to believe that not only the forwarders but many shippers in the smaller communities and hundreds of motor carriers of the smaller type will suffer. Nor will there be any benefits from the change to offset the harm done.

Mr. Eastman further testified:

The so-called freight-forwarding companies constitute a third group of agencies for specialized service in connection with package freight. There is an apparent tendency in some quarters to regard them as pariahs. I can see no justification for such an attitude. While there are blots on their escutcheon, their rapid growth is the result of the fact that they have given the general shipping public a service which it wanted and needed and was entitled to have. As the Commission, which certainly had no predisposition in favor of the forwarders, said in Freight Forwarding Investigation (220 I. C. C. 301):

"There can be no doubt that the forwarder method of handling traffic has made for itself an important place in the traffic field."

Their original service was a simple one. They provided a medium through which shippers of packages between the larger communities could concentrate their shipments into carloads. The forwarder took charge of the concentration at origin and of the distribution at destination, and shared the benefit of the lower carload rate with the shippers. The great growth of the forwarders, however, came with the development of over-the-road motortruck transportation. Such transportation, for the shorter hauls at least, is undoubtedly a more flexible, convenient, and economical means of transporting package freight than the railroad, particularly where the latter must use way-freight train service. By the use of trucks, the forwarders found that they could extend their operations beyond the larger centers into the smaller communities and give the latter the benefit of the concentrated carload movement between the centers. This coordination of motor and rail transportation gave the shippers at these smaller communities quicker, more convenient, and more dependable service than they could get from the railroads alone. For some hauls the forwarders used the truck all the way from origin to destination. Their service became very popular.

The result would be that about 50 percent of the work now being done by the forwarders would be stopped and the loss would be largely on off-line points, that is in the interior or small towns, and small shippers would suffer, whereas the shippers up and down the main lines would continue to get the benefit of these reduced rates.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman's statement is in keeping with the correspondence I have had that matters would be thrown into great confusion and that loss would result to businessmen.

Mr. SOUTH. I thank the gentleman, and I think that is absolutely true.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I have had a couple of inquiries from my State with reference to this bill and there seems to be some misapprehension on the part of the writers of these communications that this bill has something to do with the long-and-short-haul clause of the fourth section. From what the gentleman says I assume the bill has nothing to do with the long-and-short-haul clause.

Mr. SOUTH. Not at all. This bill regulates forwarders only and the question of the long-and-short-haul clause does not enter into it, I may say to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize the thought that the purpose of this act is nothing more or less than an effort to maintain in a sense of the status quo of forwarders engaged in interstate commerce.

Under the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, certain operations or practices of so-called freight forwarders were declared contrary to law. The Interstate Commerce Commission has, since the Supreme Court decision, granted a stay of its cease-and-desist order to a future date to enable consideration to be given to the subject matter by the Congress before the business of said forwarders should be adversely affected by the order to which I have already made reference.

The present bill does not seek to provide permanent legislation on the subject. To do so would require long hearings and careful consideration. As it was not possible to conduct such hearings and give the necessary consideration in the closing hours of this session, it seemed best to recommend "stopgap" legislation to be effective only until August 1, 1941.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, so as to make certain provisions thereof applicable to freight forwarders."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Fred W. Catlett, member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, on the history, purpose, and accomplishments of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, before the National Association of Mutual Insurance Agents at the Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D. C., on September 25. This slightly exceeds the limit, but I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Milwaukee Journal.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a few remarks about Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma). Under a previous special order the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

DEBT—INFLATION—CONFISCATION

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am fully aware of the great unpopularity in Congress and about Washington of discussing forthrightly and realistically the subject matter that I am presently considering—particularly with that portion relating to the public debt. I am also fully cognizant of the danger to any Member who attempts such a discussion before this body of being charged by innuendo, if not openly, of being against adequate military preparedness, if not something even worse. It appears this subject now has become almost taboo in this Chamber—indeed that it is little short of sin to admit it to our councils. There has even developed a belligerency against it.

This sentiment is, of course, both baseless and unfair, because there is nothing to substantiate the idea that those of us who would keep watch on the Treasury are any less desirous of supplying adequate defense, or that our motives are less patriotic than those with whom we may not always see eye to eye. Conserving the national credit in time of peace, as well as in time of war, always has been one of the major tasks of statesmen. Financing defense or war so as to achieve maximum results and do the least amount of harm to the internal economy, as reference to history will show, has always been their guiding motive. The wisest and best of them never failed, under any circumstances, to guard with the greatest concern, the resources entrusted to their care.

With respect to the military they have ever been keen in realizing that it can never exceed in strength and effectiveness its source of supply, the Treasury. Here perhaps in time of peace, and certainly in time of war is likely the basic protection of every people, and assuredly their first line of defense against external attack. So self-evident and basic is this principle that it should be unnecessary for anyone now to restate it.

What appears to me to be even more serious is the passive attitude of mind which apparently prevails in the Congress toward the question of our Federal finances and debt. It seems to me a feeling of resignation, of giving up trying to do anything about it, of defeatism itself, is now almost controlling here. This to me is a deplorable situation, and should not be.

This Congress should snap out of all this. It is our duty and responsibility to face this problem squarely. This much is demanded of us.

In my judgment the most essential need of the hour is a forthright recognition by the Congress and the people throughout the country that our rapidly mounting public debt and disordered currency and credit are becoming increasingly serious and menacing. Whatever hope the Congress may have of being able to take in hand and get under control this situation, we cannot defer action much longer. Either we will get it under control quickly or our Nation will become bankrupt, and the whole matter will be left to be settled by forces, which, judging from past experience, will have the most dire consequences to our people.

The menace is doubly aggravated by the new defense problem. We are involved in a vicious process—a weak and disorganized economy threatened with national bankruptcy, yet the need of spending large sums for defense, which are being raised by more deficit financing which in turn results in a further increase in the debt and more aggravation of the distressed economy, and so, caught in the mangling Charybdis, we go on round and round and down and down in this vicious cycle.

Since the strength of our military is dependent on the soundness of our economy, and since this process operates every moment to weaken still further our basic means of supply, there is all the more reason why we should get our finances under control.

The very need of spending large sums for defense demands this.

It is no part of this discussion to lay the blame for our trouble to any particular party. It has its root causes so deep in the past that it is now impossible to trace all of them to their sources, much less locate them in individuals or political parties.

This study is divided into three main parts, namely, first, that relating to the growing Federal debt; second, the condition of the bank credit, more particularly with respect to inflation possibilities; and third, the political confiscation of the produce of labor and its arbitrary redistribution by means of grants, payments, subsidies, and so forth.

Bringing together these three separate studies under one general head gives us a clearer picture of the diseased condition of our economy as a whole. Deficit financing, credit inflation, and political redistribution of wealth are, as I shall try to show, a part of the same general process. Therefore, the studies under each of these headings should be considered from this standpoint.

MOUNTING FEDERAL DEBT

Table A relates to the state of the Federal finances. In studying this table it is of the utmost importance to constantly bear in mind the important fact that the figures for the depression period relate entirely to peacetime and that they do not include expenditures for the new defense program, except a comparatively small amount for 1940.

It should also be constantly kept in mind that the Treasury Department debt figures pertaining to the depression-year period do not include items involving substantial amounts which should be included. This phase will be discussed more fully later.

Column 3 shows the World War rise in the annual interest charge on the pre-war debt from $22,900,869 in 1916 to $1,020,251,000 in 1920; its drop to $559,276,000 the early part of the depression in 1932; its rise again in peacetime to $1,041,000,000 in 1940.

Column 4 shows the World War rise in the annual amount of ordinary receipts from the pre-war level of $782,534,000 in 1916 to $6,694,565,000 in 1920, its drop to $4,177,941,000 in the first year of the depression in 1930, and its sharp and great drop from this point to $2,005,725,000 in 1932, and, finally, its rise again in peacetime to $5,925,000,000 in 1940.

Column 5 shows the wartime rise in total ordinary expenditures from the pre-war level of $734,056,000 in 1916 to the high mark of $18,514,879,000 in 1919; their drop from this high point to $4,535,147,000 in 1932—they had in 1927 reached the post-World War low of $2,974,029,000—then a temporary drop to $3,863,544,000 in 1933, and a sharp rise again over the next 7 years of peacetime to $9,537,000,000 in 1940.

Column 7 shows the rise of the pre-World War debt of $1,225,145,000 in 1916 to the highest World War debt of $25,482,034,000 in 1919; its drop from the latter figure to $16,185,308,000 in 1930; and, finally, its rise to the all-time high during peacetime to $42,967,531,000 in 1940.

Column 8 shows the rise of per capita ordinary receipts from the pre-World War level of $7.92 to the highest World War figure of $63.33 in 1920; the drop from this latter figure to $15.74 in 1932; and thence the rise again to $44.88 in 1940.

Column 9 shows the rise of the pre-World War per capita debt of $11.96 in 1916 to the highest World War figure of $240.09 in 1919; the gradual drop from the latter figure to $131.49 in 1930; and, finally, its steep rise to $325.53, in 1940, the all-time high.

Column 6. The data presented here are highly significant. Their importance will be made more apparent when they are considered in connection with ordinary receipts and expenditures and divided with reference to three periods of time—that of the 4 heavy World War years, 1917–20, the 3 first deficit years of the depression, 1931–33, and that of the 7 years of the depression, 1934–39, as follows:

	4 heavy World War years, 1917–20	3 first deficit years of depression, 1931–33	7 deficit years of depression, 1934–40
Total receipts	$16,635,728,000	$7,275,060,000	$34,160,302,000
Average annual receipts	4,158,932,000	2,425,013,000	4,880,043,000
Total expenditures	39,592,605,000	13,364,000,000	56,501,926,000
Average annual expenditure	9,898,151,000	4,444,000,000	8,071,703,000
Total deficit	23,044,771,000	6,089,463,000	24,035,217,000
Average annual deficit	5,761,192,000	2,029,821,000	3,433,602,000

NOTE.—The separation of the depression years int two periods is not made to emphasize the increase of expenditures of this over the previous administration. It is made primarily to show that the sudden great increase in expenditures in 1934 and the final abandonment of the gold standard and orthodox financing took place at the same time. The heavy deficit financing since then could, of course, not have taken place had we remained on specie payment.

From this arrangement, first by comparing the figures of the 7-peacetime-year period with those of the 4-wartime-year period and second, comparing the 7 last deficit-year period of the depression with the 3-first-deficit-year period of the depression, the following important deductions appear—chargeable against ordinary receipts.

The average annual expenditure of the 7-peacetime-year period was 81 percent of that of the 4-year World War period.

The average annual deficit of the 7-peacetime-year period was approximately 60 percent of that of the 4-year World War period. Note also that receipts during the 7-year period averaged annually 17 percent more than during the 4-year World War period.

While the average annual receipts in the 7-last-deficit-year period of the depression were more than double those of the 3-first-deficit years of the depression, the average annual expenditure also doubled and the average annual deficit increased nearly 70 percent.

The total deficit of all administrations up to the end of the fiscal year 1930, covering a period of 141 years, which included the costs of all our wars, all our previous panics and depressions, was $26,655,000,000.

The total deficit from the end of the fiscal year 1930 to the end of the fiscal year 1940, covering a period of only 10 years, all peacetime and including a comparatively small part of the costs of the added defense program, was $30,124,680,000, or about 13 percent more than that of the 141-year period.

The total net deficit, as reflected in the gross public-debt figure, of the 141-year period was $16,800,000,000, while the total net deficit, as also shown in the public-debt figure, for the 10-year period was, roundly, $26,500,000,000, or nearly 58 percent more than the 141-year period.

The total cost of the Federal Government through 1930, including all wars, depressions, and panics, 141 years, was, roundly, $100,000,000,000. Congress has spent, appropriated, and authorized to be spent since 1930 to the present time a little more than 10 years, more than $90,000,000,000.

But, as stated, the debt figures as shown on Treasury statements do not reflect certain items which should be included. An instance is $800,000,000 appropriated to the United States Housing Authority—see analysis of operations of the United States Housing Act, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 24, 1939, page 3482, by the Honorable FREDERICK C. SMITH.

Perhaps nothing reveals more clearly the deplorable state of our national finances than the daily statement of the United States Treasury of the general-fund balance.

As of August 31, 1940, this was given as $2,610,565,371.14. Actually on that date the general-fund balance stood at $907,775,285.65. Table B at the end of the text is an analysis of the general-fund balance, which was made for me by the General Accounting Office. Of this $907,775,285, $142,816,382.16 was increment of gold; that is, so-called gold profit from devaluation, and $590,457,103.09 silver coined at $1.29 an ounce.

Let us admit for the sake of argument this gold increment to be worth the amount given in the Treasury statement. But we cannot admit even this much for the value of the silver. We are positive silver is now worth no more than 35 cents an ounce, for that is the price the Treasury is paying for it in the world market. Therefore, at 35 cents an ounce instead of $1.29 an ounce, the silver figure in the operating-fund balance should be about $160,300,000, which would reduce the balance to, roundly, $303,000,000, instead of the Treasury's daily statement figure of $2,610,565,371.14. This analysis of the general-fund balance actually shows the Treasury was carrying $1,544,000,000 liabilities as assets.

Confronted with findings in the Treasury of such irregular transactions as this, what possibility is there of knowing what the real debt status is?

The Treasury figure placed the public debt as of July 2, 1940, at $42,967,000,000—Treasury press release, July 2, 1940. To this, as we have already seen, would have to be added the $800,000,000 U. S. H. A. appropriation which brings it up to $43,767,000,000 as of that date.

As of July 31, 1940, in addition to this amount, the Government had outstanding liabilities in the form of guaranteed Federal securities amounting to $5,548,904,930—includes accrued interest.

It is true the thirty-some political lending agencies which have issued these obligations claim to have an excess of assets over liabilities of $4,250,423,831—combined statement of assets and liabilities of Government corporations and credit agencies of the United States Treasury, July 31, 1940. Daily statement of the United States Treasury, August 31, 1940. But this statement is of little value since there has not been any audit of the operations of these lending agencies by the General Accounting Office or any other independent agency.

Five of these agencies with assets, other than interagency assets, of $4,878,769,000, which is more than a third of the assets of all the agencies, are only "partially subject to audit"—Senate Document 172—by the General Accounting Office, four of which are subject to such partial audit only by Executive order—Senate Document 172—which the President could withhold at will.

Fifteen of them, with assets, other than interagency assets, of $6,725,861,000, which is more than half of all the agencies, are not subject to audit at all by the General Accounting Office.

Thus far we have considered the debt only up to the end of the fiscal year 1940. This has included no part of the cost for the new or added defense, except a comparatively small amount of 1940. What of 1941? What will be this year's deficit?

Senator BYRD estimated the deficit for the fiscal year 1941 will be "at least eight billions and perhaps more—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 12191, September 14, 1940. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congressman RICH, estimated it would be $6,192,602,706—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9803, August 1, 7940. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated the deficit for 1941 would be about $5,700,000,000"—Statement by Secretary Morgenthau before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, Friday, August 9, 1940. However, neither he nor the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] included in their estimates the additional $1,800,000,000 appropriation and authorization for defraying the cost of training conscripts and National Guard men.

From these and other available figures we can be reasonably certain the public-debt figure will reach the $50,000,000,000 mark by the end of the fiscal year 1941. This will be a per capita rise in the Federal debt for 1941 of $50.25 and will bring the total per capita debt up to $378.78.

For defense alone this Congress at this session has appropriated and authorized to be spent, roundly, $16,572,000,000.—Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, third supplemental deficiency appropriation bill report. In addition, about $7,000,000,000 has been appropriated for the regular operating costs of the Government. This totals $23,572,000,000. It is most likely more appropriations will be made for the fiscal year 1941.

Not all of the amount appropriated and authorized will be spent this fiscal year, but in all probability most of it will be spent by the end of 1942.

From these data I believe it is safe to say the Federal debt will reach sixty billions by June 1942. This does not include contingent liabilities, and so forth. This rise in 2 years of the public debt will increase the annual interest charges by $425,000,000. The estimated increase in 1942 will raise the per capita debt by $68.76, or to a total of $454.76.

The new taxes voted, about one billion, are too piddling to even be taken into consideration. Considering the mood the administration and Congress are in, it may be expected additional appropriations in sufficient amount to absorb all the new taxes that have been levied or will be levied this year will be forthcoming.

But this is not all that is looming before us. Let us consider for a moment the probable cost of conscription and the two-ocean Navy when they are in full operation. In 1939 our Navy cost us, roundly, $673,000,000. It is estimated it will cost upward of $2,000,000,000 for operating and maintaining the two-ocean Navy when it is entirely completed.—Christian Science Monitor, August 1, 1940. Surely this estimate is not too high, considering the great expansion in naval bases, and so forth, that are involved. This would be an increase in our annual Navy cost of $1,327,000,000.

What will peacetime conscription cost annually? Referring to our armed forces, the Statesman's Year Book—1940 edition, page 501—says, "The actual strength at the end of June 1939 was 187,893, all ranks," exclusive, of course, of the National Guard, Officers' Reserve Corps, and Organized Reserve Corps.

The total cost of the War Department in 1939 was, roundly, $696,000,000. Dividing this figure by 188,000, the number of men then in the Army, we get the figure $3,700, the cost per soldier. This, of course, includes all Army costs, including those of the guard, Officers' Reserve Corps, and so forth. But I believe it may be reasonably assumed that the costs of the guard and all other units outside of the Regular Establishments will in this new program not be decreased, but more than likely greatly increased. But assume they remain the same.

Now, the conscription program contemplates the addition of no fewer than one and one-quarter million men to the forces we had in 1939. Certainly the program provides for a standing Army in peacetime of no fewer than a billion and a half men. But let us assume only 1,250,000 conscripts are added.

At the rate our Army cost us in 1939 the total annual cost for the additional men will be $4,625,000,000. Surely tanks, airplanes, guns, ammunition, and all the other supplies and material that go with a soldier will not cost any less in the future than in the past; neither is it likely the obsolescence will be less; the cost will probably be more and the obsolescence greater.

Adding the additional cost that will result from the two-ocean Navy, $1,327,000,000, to the cost of the conscript Army, we have a total added annual cost of $5,925,000,000. To this sum, however, must be added the $425,000,000 increased cost of service charges that will result from the increased debt. Adding this figure to the above we have a total of $6,379,000,000.

The large defense appropriations that have been made will supply the Army with material and supplies for sometime to come. But it may be expected that within a few years, as new equipment and supplies are needed, this will be the annual cost to the taxpayers for these additions.

Now, let us see where this will bring our annual Federal expenditure. The average for the 7-year period, 1934–40, was roundly eight billions. The addition of $6,379,000,000 will bring it up to $14,379,000,000.

How much of this amount can be met with current taxes?

This year the amount to be taken in is estimated at $6,367,000,000. With expenditures running at $14,379,000,000 annually it will be necessary to collect each year $8,000,000,000 additional taxes to merely balance the Budget.—Secretary of the Treasury Release, August 9, 1940.

The question is, How much of this $8,000,000,000 that is needed in addition to the amount already being collected will be forthcoming? Does anyone believe all of it will?

How much will be the deficits from here on out? How long can the debt continue to increase? What is the limit of the amount it will stand?

What will be the total annual Federal, State, and local governmental costs? Estimating State and local costs on the basis of tax collections, these amounted in 1939 to $7,630,000,000.—1939 Industrial Conference Board Almanac, page 341. To which add $14,379,000,000 Federal Government costs and we have the figure $22,000,000,000 which will be the annual cost to the producing population of the United States to maintain their several governmental subdivisions. Can we do it?

Wage earners, small-salaried employees, farmers, and the other lower-income groups pay at least 85 percent of all taxes.

Where will their standard of living go when they have to pay more than $18,000,000,000 a year in taxes?

Can there be any doubt that our Federal finances are out of control and that we are now seriously threatened with national bankruptcy?

CONDITION OF BANK CREDIT AND INFLATION POSSIBILITIES WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE POSITION OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

An act to provide for the establishment of Federal Reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes.

So reads the preamble to the Federal Reserve Banking Act which was passed in 1913.

The chief purposes of the banking and currency bill is to give stability to the commerce and industry of the United States, prevent financial panics or financial stringencies; make available effective commercial credit for individuals engaged in manufacturing, in commerce, in finance, and in business to the extent of their just deserts; put an end to the pyramiding of the bank reserves of the country and the use of such reserves for gambling purposes on the stock exchange.

So reads Report No. 133—page 7, part 2, Sixty-third Congress, first session—of the Senate Committee on Finance, which had under consideration the bill to create the Federal Reserve Banking System. Then the report goes on to say further:

In order to accomplish these results there are certain fundamentals recognized by all experts as essential and necessary, to wit:

First. The proper concentration of the bank reserves of the country under the control of the bank themselves safeguarded by governmental supervision.

Second. A suitable banking capital as a margin of safety.

Third. Placing the larger part of the Government funds with such banks, where they may be used in the service of the national commerce.

Fourth. Authorizing the issuance of elastic currency against liquid commercial bills under proper safeguards.

Fifth. Establishing an open market for liquid commercial bills, by providing through the Reserve banks a constant and unfailing market for such bills at a steady rate of interest.

Sixth. Finally, protecting the gold reserve of the United States by the same methods adopted in Europe, to wit, raising the rate of interest through the Federal reserve banks and authorizing such banks to acquire foreign bills when gold shipments are anticipated and taking other precautionary measures.

In the preamble and the few words quoted from this report are stated practically all of the basic purposes of the Federal Reserve Banking Act. The decentralization of banking was another promise held out.

To what extent these alleged purposes and promises were achieved and fulfilled is now too well known to require much review.

We need but glance at the accompanying table, No. C, to see how some of the major provisions are now being carried out. The System was to serve primarily as a pool, or reservoir, of redundant bank credit. By this process it was thought such credit might be better conserved and made more readily available for general use where it was in demand.

In the table C, column 2, it will be noted that during the World War period it did serve in a large measure the purpose of supplying credit to member banks, and to a lesser extent from then on until 1932. But from 1932 to the present time this function has been almost wholly dormant.

Reference to column 4 shows that practically all the credit facilities of the Reserve banks have been switched from serving the needs of member banks and private enterprise to serving the credit demands of the Federal Government incident to the heavy deficit financing.

Columns 14 and 15 of this table show how the required reserve balance has risen from a little less than $2,000,000,000 in 1931 to approximately $13,500,000,000 in 1940, and how excess reserves climbed from minus $33,000,000 in 1931 to $6,417,000,000 in 1940. These tables will be referred to again later.

The extent to which the other promises and alleged purposes of the act have been fulfilled is seen in the record of the thousands of bank failures in the twenties and in the most disastrous financial stringency and depression our Nation has ever experienced.

At least one purpose of the act, however, that of providing an "elastic currency," appears to have been fulfilled. It is with this that we are mainly concerned here.

Three principal means were provided for creating and regulating elastic currency, namely, control over the reserve requirements, control over the discount rate, and provision for open-market operations. These were the three principal levers that were to be used to put elasticity into the currency and cause it to increase in volume when the demand for credit slackened too much, and to take the elasticity out of the currency and cause it to shrink in volume when the credit demand became excessive. In perfect synchronization, these credit-control levers were to be used separately or collectively—pushed, now forward, and then backward—to supply everybody who desired credit according to their "just desserts" and "to prevent financial panics or financial stringencies," and to put an end to gambling with bank reserves.

If the demand for credit became dangerously low, the discount rate was to be lowered, reserve requirements might be reduced, and open-market buying by the Federal Reserve banks possibly instituted, one or all of which would increase the credit supply and relieve a currency stringency.

If the demand for credit became dangerously excessive, the discount rate was to be raised, reserve requirements might be increased, and open-market selling by the Federal Reserve banks possibly instituted, one or all of which would alleviate the excessive credit expansion.

Let us examine these "elastic currency" producing and regulating levers and see just how they are working, if in fact they are now working at all. We have already stated that there is no demand by the banks for loans from the Federal Reserve System. Primarily this demand is absent because the supreme political authority confiscated our gold money, thereby abolishing our standard unit of value, and forced our Nation under the domination of irredeemable paper currency. It being impossible under this moneyless system to write or make contracts in terms of any fixed value, the investment market for new capital, especially with reference to long-term agreements, has been almost completely destroyed, and naturally is in the process of being totally destroyed. New capital for investment incorporations averaged annually from 1932 to 1940, inclusive, only about 14 percent of that in the years of 1923–31, inclusive.

Another reason why people have stopped investing in venture capital what savings they still may be able to accumulate is the terriffic political onslaught against private enterprise that has taken place in the last few years, the many totalitarian, restrictive, regulatory, discriminatory, and punitive laws that have been enacted, and the inordinate increase in taxation and bureaucratic growth and control that have been foisted upon us. Still another is the enormous amount of arbitrary confiscation, taxation, and mortgaging of property that is being indulged in by the supreme political authority, and the use by it of those vast resources to redistribute the wealth of the Nation.

Still another cause of private lending institutions being driven out of existence is the recent creation of the enormous political "lending" bureaucracy. This scheme has already seriously intruded upon the whole field of private lending. There are now more than 30 of those agencies, all of which, excepting only 1, have been established since beginning in 1932. They have already usurped a substantial part of the lending business that normally belongs to private lending institutions. Their activities extend into practically all fields of endeavor, private and corporate. As of June 1939 they had made a gross amount of loans totaling about $25,000,000,000, about 15½ of which had been repaid and about 9½, including accrued interest, of which was still outstanding.—Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, Senate Document 172, part 1, table 9, page 11.

Their lending activities are on the increase. Within the last year the Export-Import Bank of Washington alone has been authorized to increase its lending capacity from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 and later to $700,000,000. At the same time this latter increase was made, the lending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was increased a billion dollars in addition to the amount of increase granted the Export-Import Bank.

The amount of encroachment of political banking upon private banking may be better appreciated when it is reflected that the total amount of loans, discounts, and overdrafts, including rediscounts, outstanding of all the commercial and savings banks in the United States as of December 1939 was only $22,130,000,000.—Assets and liabilities of operating insured banks, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation report. Thus it will be seen the amount of political loans outstanding by these most recently created Federal bureaus was in 1939 approximately 43 percent as much as that of the total of all loans in all commercial and savings banks of the same year. It should be borne in mind that private banking is the product of hundreds of years of development, while the political banking here being considered is mostly the product of the last 8 or 10 years.

Several important and controlling factors are responsible for the rapid progress these political lending bureaus have made in usurping the business of private lending institutions. First is the fact that the requirements for adequate security for loans is in general not as stringent with the former as the latter. The matter of adequate security cannot possibly be of as much concern to the individuals who operate a political lending agency as they are to those who operate a private lending agency. One important reason for this is that undue losses caused by lack of adequate security in the one case must be paid by the taxpayers, while in the other they must be paid by the individuals who made the blunder. An abundance of evidence has already accumulated in the operations of these political lending bureaus which shows there is a great laxity in requiring adequate security for loans. To see the truth of this one needs but to read the record as it is shown in some of the annual reports of these agencies, and especially in the report made by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to Senate Resolution 150.—Senate Document No. 172, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session.

The greater laxity of the political lending agencies in security requirements undoubtedly is a strong factor in creating demand from them for certain kinds of loans.

Loans made by these lending agencies on certain kinds of security, especially on real estate, are made particularly attractive because they are offered for a much longer period of time than those of private lenders.

Still another contributing factor here is the interest rate. The political lending agencies take a certain type of business away from private lending institutions because they charge the individual borrower a lower rate of interest than is charged by private banks.

Still another important factor that contributes powerfully to depress the private lending market is the great volume of Government obligations to finance deficits that is being forced into the credit market. With the venture capital market practically dead, such savings as still exist have no place to go but to Government securities. Having destroyed the contract and, hence, all private long-term investment possibilities, the political authority, through its present medium of deficit financing which is essentially a process of forced lending now has an extensive monopoly of credit.

Sixty percent of all Government obligations are held by the banking system and the Government itself.—Bulletin of the Treasury, March 1940, page 20. We are here dealing with one of the most serious pathologic processes that can afflict our economy. As just stated, the raising of funds to meet the huge deficits of the Federal Government is largely a matter of forced lending. The obligations that are put out by the Government are mostly not paid for out of savings resulting from productive enterprise. The process is essentially one of creating fiat credit. The costs of the World War were to a great extent financed by the same process, and it was the fiat credit created thereby which was one of the principal underlying causes of the great inflation in the twenties that led to the disastrous collapse in 1929. Fundamentally there is no difference whatever between this process of creating fiat credit and that used by Germany and which ultimately caused her great inflation.

Every dollar's worth of Government securities that has been put out since the depression for which there does not exist a dollar's worth of actively producing needed enterprise is just so much fiat credit. Surely it should require no argument to prove so simple a proposition as this. Billions upon billions, as we all know, have been spent on objects for which there is now nothing to show but debt.

Of the more than twenty-seven billions of Government obligations held by the banking system and the Federal Government itself, the latter holds almost six billion. This is listed under "Federal Agencies and Trust Funds."—Bulletin of the Treasury, March 1940, page 20. An idea of what this involves is made clear if we examine the Treasury transaction pertaining to pay-roll taxes. These taxes are collected along with other revenues and become a part of the ordinary receipts. They are not earmarked for any specific purpose but are used along with other revenues to pay the costs, ordinary and extraordinary, of the Government. Then the Treasury enters on the debit side of its ledger the amount of pay-roll taxes spent which is merely its way of formally and legally acknowledging that the taxpayers of the United States, which includes the more than 34,000,000 people who paid in the pay-roll taxes in the first place, owe so much debt, the money for which they must dig up when it comes due.

That simple little Treasury bookkeeping transaction has received the designation "trust fund." The dictionary defines trust fund as "money, securities, or other like property settled or held in trust."

If Webster is correct, and I presume he is still good authority, I cannot see wherein this Treasury transaction even remotely conforms to this definition. It neither settles or holds anything in trust. It spends the money. Then it pledges the faith of the supreme political authority to at some time in the future lay a tax or place a mortgage on all the people to raise the money it spent, and some more, too, euphemistically called interest, and to pay it all back to the appropriate beneficiaries when it comes due. And this transaction is termed "investment." Divestment, it appears to me, would be more fitting.

So far, however, as the obligations held by the Treasury which are supposed to be representative of pay-roll trust accounts are concerned, the transaction represents nothing more than a promise by the supreme political authority to use the taxing power of the Federal Government in the future to levy sufficient taxes upon all the people to replace the amount of the pay-roll taxes spent, plus the additional amount erroneously called interest. The same is, of course, probably true of all other so-called trust accounts since the Budget became unbalanced and the present system of deficit financing was begun. This most unhealthy process is possible only because of the continued deficits. Surely a balanced Budget should be of primary concern to the group that pays the pay-roll taxes.

The table below is interesting in showing some important features of the present credit situation.—Statement prepared for me by Federal Reserve Board.

[000 omitted]

	Total deposits [1]	Total investment, U. S. Government securities	Total loans	Total commercial loans [2]
June 30, 1930	$45, 557, 000	$5, 497, 000	$40, 497, 000	$15, 795, 000
Dec. 31, 1939	58, 344, 000	19, 402, 000	22, 169, 000	11, 466, 000

[1] Deposits, excluding interbank deposits.
[2] Figures for "commercial loans" for all banks each year and for member banks through 1935 include all customer and open-market loans other than loans on securities and on real estate.

The totals in this table have reference to all banks in the United States.

Column 1 shows that total deposits increased by $12,787,000,000 in the last 9 years.

Column 2 shows that during the same time total bank holdings of Government securities increased by $13,905,000,000.

Column 3 shows that the total amount of loans outstanding decreased during the same time $18,330,000,000.

Column 4 shows that total commercial loans decreased $4,330,000,000 in this 9-year period.

Whatever may be the causes and their relative importance in destroying private lending and borrowing, we know they exist and we also know that they are sufficiently strong to prevent the Federal Reserve Board from effectively using any of its powers to change or counteract them. The statutory authority it has to regulate discount rates to effect the volume of credit is wholly useless. Here we have a rather outstanding demonstration of the natural laws of finance catching up with politically planned finance. Here we have revealed to us in lines so clear and distinct that none should fail or be unable to see them one of the basic fallacies which underlies nearly all legislation, namely, that it will operate as its framers intend it shall on the "all other conditions remaining the same" naive assumption.

Little did those who wrote the Federal Reserve Banking Act dream of the possibility of a time when the banks would be bulging with billions to lend but no borrowers, and interest rates would at the same time be so low that they were approaching the vanishing point. How would the act read if they had foreseen that excess reserves, which at the time it was written were hardly known to exist, would rise from minus $73,000,000—official figures—and the high interest rate on prime commercial paper of 6½ percent in 1929 to more than $6,000,000,000 and a low interest rate on the same paper of 0.5 percent—National Industrial Conference Board, Economic Almanac, 1940, page 137—in 1939.

Now let us consider another control, that of bank reserves. We shall here consider only the function this particular banking device was supposed to perform in preventing overexpansion of credit, "to curb the use of credit speculation,"—the Federal Reserve System, 1939, Board of Governors of Federal Reserve, page 42—and to "put an end to pyramiding of bank reserves of the country and the use of such reserves for gambling purposes."—Senate Report 133, Committee on Finance, Federal Reserve Act, page 7.

So there can be no mistake whatever as to this one purpose of this means of control, we quote the following:

> In August 1936 the Board of Governors had raised reserve requirements for member banks by 50 percent in order to absorb a part of the $3,000,000,000 of reserves in excess of requirements held by members banks. Under the law the board has the responsibility of changing reserve requirements in order to prevent injurious credit expansion or contraction and the board had acted to eliminate from the credit base a part of the redundant reserves accumulated through a large volume of gold imports.
> The Board's action was in the nature of a precautionary measure to prevent uncontrollable expansion of credit in the future.[1]
> Member banks at present have excess reserves of $3,600,000,000, and this total may be doubled in the future. To absorb these reserves the System has the power to raise reserve requirements by $800,000,000 and to make sales out of its portfolio of United States Government obligations, which amounts to $2,560,000,000. The use of the available means of absorbing reserves, to the extent that it may be in the public interest to do so, would still leave the banks with a volume of excess reserves upon which it would be possible for an injurious credit expansion to develop.
> The ability of the banks greatly to expand the volume of their credit without resort to the Federal Reserve banks would make it possible for a speculative situation to get under way that would be beyond the power of the System to check or control. The Reserve System would therefore be unable to discharge the responsibility placed upon it by Congress or to perform the service that the country rightly expects from it.[2] As of September 12, 1940, excess reserves of member banks amounted to $6,540,000,000.

If the Board of Governors found it necessary in 1936, when excess reserves were only $3,000,000,000, to raise Reserve requirements "by 50 percent * * * to prevent uncontrollable expansion of credit," why do they not in this year of 1940, when excess reserves are up to $6,540,000,000, find it necessary to raise reserve requirements "to prevent uncontrollable credit expansion?"

If a reduction of $3,600,000,000 excess reserves by $800,000,000 plus an additional substantial reduction by open-market selling of bonds out of their portfolio of $2,560,000,000 of Government's "would still leave the banks with a volume of excess reserves upon which it would be possible for an injurious credit expansion to develop," then what are we to think of the possibilities of injurious credit inflation with excess reserves standing at the present high figure? The $6,540,000,000 excess reserves if fully utilized could be expanded into rounding $40,000,000,000 deposit liabilities.

Though the Federal Reserve Governors heretofore, when the excess reserves were less than half of what they are now, took measures to reduce them because they regarded them as being a menace to our credit structure, yet they fail now to avail themselves of these measures. Why is this? Why do they not ask Congress for authority to increase the reserve requirements in order that they might reduce the enormous volume of excess?

In the first place, the old causes that operated to produce excessive bank reserves, those which were present when the Reserve Act was written, have, as I have already indicated, ceased to operate. But what is at the moment more to the point is that entirely new causes for creating abnormally excessive bank reserves, causes wholly undreamed of by the men who wrote the act, have in recent years made their appearance. No control levers could, of course, be provided for these unforeseen conditions.

Foremost of these are the gold and silver purchasing program. They are altogether new and powerful means for building up bank reserves. Every dollar of gold bought creates $1 of base credit in the banking system. This $1 is expandable into $6 of deposits. Since the gold-purchase program began we have imported in round numbers about fourteen billions of gold. That created fourteen billion base dollars, which under the Reserve plan could be expanded to eighty-four billion.

More than one and a quarter billion silver-dollar certificates have been issued at the rate of $1.29 an ounce against silver which on an open world market today might fetch as little as 10 cents an ounce.

Every one of these silver-dollar certificates represents one base deposit dollar. Here we have the possibility of an additional six billions of deposit liabilities.

As these enormous amounts of gold credit dollars and silver-dollar certificates are deposited and pyramided in the banking system they, of course, build up huge reserves, so great that any controls provided in the Federal Reserve Act for keeping them within the limits of safety would perhaps be wholly inadequate and ineffective even if the attempt were made to utilize them.

But the amount of reserves that may be created by the accumulation of primary credit deposits through the initial purchase alone of gold and silver is but a comparatively small part of that which may be created through other ways and means. Here in addition to those stated are some of these, and the amounts of deposit liabilities that could, theoretically, at least, be produced by them.

Although under present reserve arrangements credit can be pyramided to nearly seven times the amount of the original or base deposit, the multiplier six is being used to be conservative.

	Base deposits	Possible deposit liability
Thomas inflation amendment	$3,000,000,000	$18,000,000,000
Excess member-bank reserves	[1] 6,540,000,000	39,240,000,000

[1] Board of Governors, Federal Reserve press release, Sept. 12, 1940.

[2] As of Feb. 26, 1940. At that time there was outstanding in Federal Reserve notes $5,162,468,000. Under the Federal Reserve Act only 40 percent gold reserve is required as security for Federal Reserve notes. But actually the Federal Reserve notes outstanding were secured by more than 100 percent gold. The excess of 100 percent gold security was slight and is disregarded in the figures here presented. However, 60 percent of the gold dollars securing the Federal Reserve notes, or $3,097,480,000 would be available for additional Federal Reserve note issues, and would produce 2½ times that amount of Federal Reserve notes, or $7,743,701,000.

Excess gold reserves held by the Federal Reserve banks could be used as 40 percent security for Federal Reserve notes in the amount of	[3] 28, 227, 500, 000	169, 365, 000, 000
Silver [4]	1, 000, 000, 000	6, 000, 000, 000
Total	46, 511, 201, 000	279, 067, 206, 000
To which could be added, if the President used the powers he now has to "devalue" the gold and silver dollar to the limit allowed by law:
Gold as 40 percent security against Federal Reserve notes	9, 310, 527, 500	55, 863, 165, 000
Silver as security for silver certificates	5, 000, 000, 000	30, 000, 000, 000
Total	60, 821, 728, 000	364, 930, 368, 000

[3] The amount of excess gold reserves is as of this date (information received from Mr. Scudder of the Federal Reserve) $11,291,000,000. As 40 percent reserve for Federal Reserve notes this amount of gold would produce 2½ times $11,291,000,000 or $28,227,500,000 Federal Reserve notes.

[4] As of January 1940. Silver continues to accumulate.

The above figures do not take into consideration the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund which could be used in many ways to produce credit inflation. Nor do they include the further possibilities of credit inflation from the continued influx of gold and silver.

It is, of course, impossible for the mind to grasp anything like the full import of this situation, if indeed it can grasp any part of it. We are here apparently in the realm of the infinite. Judged by past monetary and credit standards, and some of the classical money and credit debauchments, that of Austria, in the latter part of the eighteenth and the forepart of the nineteenth centuries, of France in the nineties of the eighteenth century, of our own during colonial days, and that of Germany recently, it would appear to me that our money and credit are at present in a state of utter chaos. Certainly it will not be contended, and this is the point we wish to bring out here, that there is even a sign of any possible control by the Federal Reserve banks, by the Treasury, or any other agency, over the present credit situation.

THE POLITICAL CONFISCATION OF THE PRODUCE OF LABOR AND ITS ARBITRARY REDISTRIBUTION BY MEANS OF GRANTS, PAYMENTS, SUBSIDIES, ETC.

Tables 1, 3, and 4 at the end of the text are very important in connection with the present study. They reveal in measurable physical terms a part of the effects of the taxing, mortgaging, and spending process that is involved in the heavy deficit financing. As already indicated the process of disintegration of the economy and confiscation of private property is taking place on a large scale in many parts of the economic body. However, those changes cannot always be measured as easily, nor their implications as readily understood, as is possible in this particular field. Here we see it is possible to accurately measure in terms of money value the amount of property involved in the transfer and to see how this takes place from one State to another. It will be noted that the shift is mainly from the more easternly States westward, and to the Southern States.

It must not be thought, however, that this shift takes place only with respect to States. The process involves as well a transfer from individuals and groups to other individuals and groups within each State.

It is very important that we understand clearly what is meant by the term "wealth," that it is simply the produce of labor. Hence, by shifting of wealth we mean the taking away, by taxation, of the produce of labor from some States, groups, and individuals, and giving it to other States, groups, and individuals. In between, of course, is the political machine which in this process is now taking a toll of about a billion dollars a year.

Table 1 relates to grants, payments, subsidies, and so forth, received by each State, cost of same, and so forth, from June 30, 1933 to June 30, 1939.

A study of this table will show that in the 6 fiscal years, 1934–39, the first 30 States on this list have paid in taxes and obligated themselves by being mortgaged by the Federal Government for about $5,270,000,000 but have received in the same period of time $11,113,000,000, or in other words have had all taxes and debt returned to them and a bonus of $5,843,000,000 in addition.

The 18 remaining States have paid and obligated themselves for $35,227,000,000 and have received $15,000,000,000 in grants and subsidies, which means they have paid and obligated themselves for $20,000,000,000 more than they received. Which all adds up to this: The 30 States have had all costs refunded, hence the Federal Government has cost them nothing during this 6-year period and they have made a clear profit of nearly $6,000,000,000 while the other 18 States have had to pay all Government costs, assume the whole burden of the added debt, pay their own subsidies, and give the 30 States the $6,000,000,000 bonus.

Thirty-seven percent of the population lives in the first 30 States listed in table 1. They paid in taxes and obligated themselves about 13 percent of Federal costs and received 42.5 percent of the grants and subsidies.

The remaining 18 States with 63 percent of the population paid in taxes and obligated themselves for 87 percent of the cost and received only 57.5 percent of the grants and subsidies.

The 30 States received 42.5 percent of grants and subsidies of $11,113,126,069. Had they received grants and subsidies in proportion to the taxes and debt thus assumed they would have received 13 percent of the total grants and subsidies or $3,401,383,687. The excess these 30 States received in proportion to the taxes paid was $7,711,742,382, which represents the shift in wealth from the 18 States to the 30.

Note the extremes in this table. The highest per capita gain over the per capita cost was $682 in Nevada.

At the other extreme is Delaware where the per capita loss was $1,686.

Table 3 relates to farm-benefit payments for the 6-year period 1933–39. Here is shown also the inequitable distribution of farm-benefit payments. Note particularly, North Dakota obligated herself in Federal taxes and debt for the funds disbursed under this program for roundly $1,000,000 but received as her share roundly $117,000,000; or $117 received for every dollar paid.

At the other extreme New York obligated herself under this program in taxes and debt for roundly $639,400,000 and received as her share roundly $11,700,000; or she paid out about $54 for every dollar received.

Twenty-eight States obligated themselves in taxes and debt under this program for roundly $500,000,000 and received in farm-benefit payments roundly $2,400,000,000. Thus, these 28 States received roundly $1,900,000,000 more than they paid in.

The remaining 20 States obligated themselves in taxes and debt under this program for roundly $2,460,000,000 and received in farm-benefit payments roundly $500,000,000. Thus, these 20 States paid in roundly $1,900,000,000 more than they received.

The actual total amount of farm benefits received by the farmers themselves in this 6-year period was roundly $2,828,000,000—see footnotes under table. I have estimated, on a population basis, the farmers' share of the increase of the public debt in the 6 corresponding years is about $4,400,000,000. Thus, in these 6 years they have had their farms mortgaged for about a billion and a half more than the subsidies they received. On a population basis the farmers must pay $100,000,000 a year interest on their share of the increase in the Federal debt. On a population basis the farmers are themselves paying in taxes or debt—practically all debt—about 25 percent of the farm payments they receive.

These are some of the things the politicians do not tell the farmers.

Table 4 relates to the percentage of farm-benefit payments each State received of its farm-land valuation.

Note again the two extremes: Mississippi and Arkansas farmers received in farm-benefit payments an amount equal to 23.8 percent of their farm-land value.

One could buy a farm in Mississippi or Arkansas and pay for it almost entirely in about 24 years, except the interest on the principal, with the farm-benefit payments.

On the other hand if one bought a farm in Rhode Island and depended on farm-benefit payments to pay for it, it would take 2,000 years to get it paid off.

Thus far we have considered mainly effects, or what might be called symptoms, of deeper, underlying disease processes. Back of all the conditions discussed here at least one of these can be identified—namely, the destruction of the standard unit of value by completely confiscating all our monetary gold and forcing our Nation under the domination of irredeemable paper currency; the debasement of the gold dollar, by reducing its content; the coining of silver, which is worth perhaps no more than 20 cents an ounce, at the purely arbitrary figure of $1.29; the gold and silver purchase program at fixed prices way above the market value; the use by the Treasury of the "stabilization" fund for bolstering foreign economies by supporting their currencies; the Thomas inflation amendment which permits the Executive to print three billions of greenbacks; and the complete destruction of the contract by the Supreme Court gold-clause abrogation decision.

Look at the condition of our Federal debt and finances, of the credit situation, the stagnation of industry, long continued mass unemployment, the strong and increasing tendency of fixing prices by law and otherwise regimenting the people, the further tendency of substituting government by men for government by law, in fact the whole general trend toward government absolutism which is now so manifestly evident in our Nation.

Compare these conditions and movements with the experiences of Austria in the latter part of the eighteenth and forepart of the nineteenth centuries; of France in John Law's time, and later again in the nineties of the eighteenth century, and also with our own in colonial days.

Every one of the troubles we are now having was present in their experiences.

Now, I think there is a general agreement by all historians and students of money that inconvertible paper currency played a major role in causing the distressed condition of those countries during those periods and our own before the Revolution. How, then, can we possibly escape the conclusion that our own irredeemable paper is a major factor in causing our present financial and economic trouble?

It should be remembered that there are but two basic kinds of economy, the moneyless and the money economy.

The moneyless economy is the crude and primitive process of barter, which in organized societies vests the supreme political authority with unlimited power to fix all values.

The money economy is the refined and refining process of trading by means of a common standard unit of value. Here prices are fixed by the simple laws of demand and supply with the precious metals, gold and silver, circulating freely as coins and bullion at their intrinsic value.

Our Nation is now definitely under the moneyless economy.

The supreme political authority, which includes the Congress, has complete and unlimited power to regulate the purchasing power of the currency. Being without any standard unit of value there is, of course, no other alternative. As long, therefore, as we remain without a common standard unit of value, as long, in other words, as we remain on irredeemable paper currency, the supreme political authority must continue at an accelerating rate to fix by decree all wages, all prices, all values. Which brings us to the crux of this study. Says Andrew Dixon White in his "Fiat Money Inflation in France":

> It is easily seen that these maximum laws were perfectly logical. Whenever any nation entrusts to its legislators the issue of a currency not based on the idea of redemption in standard coin recognized in the commerce of civilized nations, it entrusts to them the power to raise or depress the value of every article in the possession of every citizen. Louis XIV had claimed that all property in France was his own, and that what private persons held was as much his as if it were in his coffers. But even this assumption is exceeded by the confiscating power exercised in a country, where, instead of leaving values to be measured by a standard common to the whole world, they are left to be depressed or raised at the whim, caprice, or interest of a body of legislators. When this power is given, the power of fixing prices is inevitably included in it.

And said the great Ricardo in the House of Commons in the classical debate on resumption:

> One principle was clear, it was of the utmost importance in the consideration of this subject, it was this, that those who had the power of regulating the quantity of the circulating medium of the country, had the power of regulating the rate of exchanges, and the price of every commodity.

The scales were definitely tipped to the left over the center in 1933 and 1934 when our standard unit of value was taken from us completely and we were forced under the domination of irredeemable paper currency.

Dictatorship—totalitarianism—is not a man. It is a system, impossible in a money economy, inevitable under a moneyless economy.

These are the facts as I see them. I regard the situation as being grave, and that it demands our most prompt and earnest attention. In this critical hour, we should spare no effort to get our national finances under control with the view of eliminating every item of cost that can possibly be dispensed with, and when this is done provide for the raising of more revenue so as to work toward a balanced Budget.

The circumstances demand this. They also demand that the Congress act as promptly as possible to restore our Nation to the money economy. This must be done to break the vicious cycle we are now in. The emergency makes this imperative.

I am introducing a resolution asking the Speaker to appoint a committee to work toward this end.

[3] This $40,496,756,336 does not represent the entire cost of the 6-year period. In the operation of the Treasury there are sources of income that cannot be credited directly to the various States. Also a study of the "Report submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate of the United States pursuant to S. Res. 150" indicates that a true accounting and audit of the operations of the numerous agencies with which this report deals would show heavy losses. Eventually all costs must be borne by the States in proportion to the taxes they pay.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT ON H. R. 10098

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on the bill H. R. 10098.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in reference to the subject No Third Term.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein decision of the Department of Justice regarding the deportation of certain aliens, so-called Czechoslovakians, who were employed, or supposed to be employed, as instructors in the Bata shoe plant at Belcamp, Md.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a year ago last July, I believe it was, I brought publicly to the attention of the country the permission to enter granted by the Department of Labor of some 100 so-called instructors from Czechoslovakia, which was then under German domination, to be employed by the Bata Shoe Co. at Belcamp, Md. Some 89 workers actually came into the country.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the Department of Labor should not have allowed those people to enter the country in the beginning. After it did allow them to enter the country these workers did not live up to their promise, and they should have been deported immediately. I took this matter up with the Department of Labor and received at first some cooperation. Later I received a good deal of cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, at no time in the history of our country has communism, nazi-ism, and various other "isms" hostile to our form of government, so flourished as during the past 8 years. I am bringing to the attention of the House again the very objectionable activities of the Bata Shoe Co., and I call the attention of the Members of the House to the speeches I made on January 13, 1940; March 13, 1940; March 19, 1940; and September 4, 1940.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I want to congratulate the gentlewoman from Massachusetts in trying to prohibit the importation of labor that replaces American labor. I was sorry to see in the paper news items that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts was being threatened because she is trying to prohibit people from coming here to take the jobs of American labor. I hope the gentlewoman will have the same support by the American people in trying to protect them as she gave in trying to protect American labor.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very sure I shall have their protection. The Department of Justice has made a public statement in reference to the activities at Belcamp, and I understand that further statements may be made, which, I believe, will result in more protection.

I want to remind the House again that a year ago last October an effort was made to bring in an additional 500 so-called instructors, not only in the shoe industry, but in various other industries, such as glass, and so forth. I feared at that time that permission for entry would be given. Finally after some work I was promised that they would not be allowed to enter this country.

Mr. Speaker, as a part of my remarks I would like to include an article by Mr. Drew Pearson and Mr. Robert Allen appearing in the Times-Herald of Friday, September 27, and I should like also to include as a part of my remarks a statement released from the United Shoe Workers of America, C. I. O., regarding General Jackson's action and opinion.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to give great credit to Mr. Leo Goodman, of the C. I. O.—he is, I believe, its research director in Washington—for his work in trying to prevent the un-American activities at Belcamp, Md., from continuing. Mr. Goodman has backed up with affidavits every one of his statements. He has made a great contribution in protecting not only the labor of the United States but the people of the United States from nazi-ism and the various isms that are hostile to our form of government.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] will be granted.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

BATA SHOE PLANT TIE-UP WITH HITLER BARED BY UNITED STATES—DEPORTATION OF 59 MARYLAND WORKERS REVEALS RESULTS OF SECRET PROBE

(By Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen)

Attorney General Robert Jackson had plenty of grounds for his announcement yesterday that 59 alien workers and executives of the Bata Shoe Co.'s branch at Belcamp, Md., would be deported.

Jackson could have given newsmen a much more sensational story had he divulged the contents of the confidential report on the Czechoslovakian concern compiled by United States immigration agents. This document charges flatly that the Bata firm has a direct tie-up with the Nazi Government.

PERSONA GRATA AT BERLIN

"There is no definite evidence that the company or its affiliates in the United States are, at the present time, engaged in subversive activities here," the report states, "but there is considerable evidence indicating that Jan A. Bata (president) and his officials are persona grata with the German Government.

"Further, there is every reason to believe that the Bata organization in this country is a part of the Nazi economic plan for trade expansion and that the Bata Co. and its affiliates serve as a source of foreign exchange for Germany."

Bata at first opposed the Nazis after they invaded Czechoslovakia and seized his main plant at Zlin, the report states, but apparently had a change of heart later. It relates of a conference between Bata and the American consul general at Prague in which the shoe tycoon stated that conciliatory gestures had been made to him by the Nazis.

NAZIS FORGAVE BATA

Representatives of the German ministry of economics approached him, Bata told the American diplomat, and agreed to "condone" his anti-Nazi utterances prior to March 15, 1939, if he would return to Zlin and continue operation of the plant there.

He was offered a written guaranty of personal safety, signed by Herman Goering, but returned voluntarily. Bata further told the consul that it would be "extremely difficult" to make shoes at Zlin for the American market because of the high countervailing tariff imposed by the United States on imports from Germany or nations under its control.

Later, two representatives of the Bata Co., Dr. Joseph Lewinsky and Miroslav Schubert, visited the American Chargé de'Affaires at Berlin and urged the former United States-Czecho trade agreement be revived. They indicated that the German Government was willing to approach the United States Government to negotiate such an agreement.

FOREIGN STATUS PROVED

Jan Bata claims that his Belcamp, Md., plant is an American concern and not connected with the Nazi-controlled Zlin plant. In evidence to the contrary, the immigration report reveals:

"A Bata agent in Guatemala, claiming to be a representative of an American corporation, applied to the American legation for assistance this year when the Central American republic refused permission for Bata to open a factory there in competition with local industry.

"The request was submitted to the State and Commerce Departments in Washington, where it was held that although Bata was incorporated under the laws of New York, the company was not an American concern, but a subsidiary of a Czech organization, and, therefore, a foreign firm."

MYSTERY IN FOREIGN CASH

In this same connection, the report states that in the last 18 months Jan Bata and his affiliates have received approximately $2,500,000 from mysterious foreign sources, chiefly in Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and Holland.

"There is nothing to indicate," the report states, "that any of this money came from Germany; however, if any funds were remitted through German agents, they naturally would be sent through a bank of a neutral country."

The Bata Co. received $572,000 in bank credits from abroad from February to August, 1940, and in the same period of last year the Belcamp, Md., plant sent over $288,000 to Zlin, indicating a close financial tie-up with the Nazi-dominated parent factory.

Ever since the Belcamp plant was established 18 months ago it has had a consistent running battle with American labor unions. Concerning Bata labor practices, the report declares:

"In most countries where the organization has established or tried to establish factories or stores there has been strenuous objection from labor, industry, and trade associations because of the Bata policy of cheap labor, speed-up production methods, and cut-rate competition."

Both the Wage and Hour Division and the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department have records of prosecutions against the company. On May 7, 1940, the company pleaded guilty in the United States District Court at Baltimore to a violation of the Wage and Hour Act and was fined $8,000.

WORKER REGIMENTATION

At the same time the company was ordered to pay back wages, totaling $8,090, to employees for its failure to comply with the minimum-wage and overtime compensation sections of the act. The Children's Bureau also entered an injunction against the firm last June, restraining the employment of children after it was found that Bata was employing 69 youths under 18, 5 of whom were under 16.

The Maryland factory is almost an exact replica of the parent one in Zlin. A high wire fence surrounds the property. Workers lead a semimilitary existence, arising at the same time each morning, eating the same food, engaging in the same recreations, and buying their necessities from company stores.

"FOREIGN TOWN" CHARGED

The feudalistic motif is carried out in the real-estate plan of the community. Workers live in matchbox bungalows, built by Bata, overlooked by a bluff on the "lace curtain" side of the town, on which are located the domiciles of company executives. Bata's house, a three-story dwelling with a solarium, is at the crest of the bluff, overlooking everything.

"It is generally believed by persons in the area that the company intends to make Belcamp a 'foreign town,'" the report says, "that it intends to exploit American labor, keep the workers under subjugation by paying them small wages and requiring them to buy from company stores and invest their money in a company bank.

"Investigators found that Bata hires only persons under 25 years of age and has a speed-up system that borders on slave driving. They said the company charges workers $30 a month for a four-room house which could be rented for less in the vicinity."

[Press release from United Shoe Workers of America, of the C. I. O., Washington, D. C.]

Upon hearing of Attorney General Jackson's action in refusing to extend the permits of the Bata Shoe Co. employees and executives James J. Mitchell, general secretary-treasurer of the C. I. O. shoe union said: "The United Shoe Workers have continued to point out the danger that this company's policies have been and are to the American shoe industry for over a year and a half.

"We are glad that the Department of Justice after a thorough check has confirmed our contentions and taken steps which will prevent this company from throwing the American shoe industry into chaos as they have done in every country in which they have been established.

"Shoe manufacturers as well as shoe workers throughout the country can now feel more confident that the industry and labor standards which they have developed will not be suddenly wiped out by the chiseling low-wage competition of this firm.

"The United Shoe Workers for over a year have contended that this firm which operated for the benefit of the Nazi economy, aids the continuation of Hitler's war.

"We congratulate the Attorney General and hope that his action today will bring an end to the antisocial policy of this company throughout the Western Hemisphere."

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
September 26, 1940.

Attorney General Robert H. Jackson today announced that the Department of Justice has denied the requests of 47 alien workers and 12 alien officers of the Bata Shoe Co., of Belcamp, Md., for renewal of their visitors' permits for an additional 12 months. Upon expiration of their present permits, the Attorney General said, all 59 aliens must leave the United States within a reasonable period or be deported.

The Department's action was based upon the recommendations of Maj. L. B. Schofield, Special Assistant to the Attorney General in charge of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, following a thorough investigation of applications for renewal of visitor's permits submitted by the Bata workers and officers. This investigation disclosed that 78 workers admitted as "instructors" for the Bata Shoe Co. plant at Belcamp under a blanket permit, dated June 7, 1939, were for the most part not engaged in the work for which they were admitted; that in requesting such blanket permit the Bata Shoe Co. misrepresented the character of the work to be performed by the alien employees and the methods of manufacture at the Belcamp plant; and that their employment, rather than of a temporary nature as specified in the application for admission, was actually permanent.

The blanket permit, issued on June 7, 1939, authorized the admission of not more than 100 aliens to train American workers in the production methods of the Bata Shoe Co. In applying for this permit, the company represented the work to be done as of so unique a character that American workers could not act as instructors but must first themselves be instructed by aliens. The investigation disclosed, however, that with one possible exception, the manufacturing methods of the company were not unique and required little or no special training of the employees. It was further ascertained that the work done by a majority of the alien instructors was actually competitive in character and that there was nothing in the production methods of the company that made it impossible or impracticable for American workers to perform the work after a very short period of instruction.

For this reason, it was found that 8 of the 47 alien workers, who were actually engaged in instructing American workers at the time of the investigation, should have completed their instruction within the 12-month period of the permit and should leave the country at the expiration of that period or be deported. It was also found that the remaining 39 workers and 12 officers of the Bata company and affiliates were not bona fide visitors under terms of their permits and should also leave the country at expiration of the permit period or be deported.

The remaining 31 alien workers admitted under the June 7, 1939, blanket permit have not yet applied for extensions. Some have already left the United States; others are now preparing to leave or are subject to deportation. The permits of others have not expired.

All the aliens involved are natives of Czechoslovakia, with departures guaranteed by a bond for $10,000 furnished by the company.

BACKGROUND

On May 5, 1939, the Bata Shoe Co. applied for permission to import 100 Czechoslovakian citizens to act as instructors at a shoe-manufacturing plant to be erected at Belcamp, Md. Permission was sought under section 3 of the 1917 Immigration Act, which excludes contract labor but provides that skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if similar workers cannot be obtained in this country.

The company alleged that the alien workers were necessary because of the unique features of the "Bata method" of shoe manufacture. This was held to involve use of the "conveyor" system, as opposed to the "rack" method of American factories, requiring substantially different training of workers; and use of Bata machinery, which, made abroad, could not be operated by American workers without instruction by trained Bata experts.

On June 7, 1939, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization issued a formal order permitting blanket importation of not more than 100 such instructors.

This was followed by protests from a large number of labor organizations, particularly the United Shoe Workers of America, a C. I. O. affiliate, charging that (1) the permit had been obtained by misrepresentation of the "Bata method," and (2) the imported instructors were actually to be engaged in production work as craftsmen or foremen.

As a result of these protests, two investigations were made by the Immigration and Naturalization Service—on September 18, 1939, and on November 27, 1939. The first of these was inconclusive because only one small production unit of the Belcamp plant was then in operation.

However, the second and more extensive investigation, including interviews with most of the imported Czech instructors, resulted in these findings:

1. In addition to manufacturing ordinary shoes—the only operation specified in the Bata application—the company was also making a combination shoe with leather uppers and rubber soles, rubbers, rubber boots, and house slippers.

2. In all these operations, with a single exception, there was no essential difference between methods of the Bata Co. and those of American shoe factories, so far as the workmen themselves were concerned.

3. The "conveyor system," much emphasized by Bata in its application, was found to differ from ordinary American "rack method" of plant operation only in the manner of feeding material to the workmen. It in no way affected the actual labor performed in making shoes.

4. With the exception of a "pulling over" machine, there was no machinery in the Bata plant which skilled American shoe craftsmen could not immediately operate or could not teach others to operate. The "pulling over" machine was, in fact, mastered by American workers within a few days.

5. Only in the manufacture of the combination leather uppers-rubber soled shoes was there any unique operation. A vulcanizing system used in making these shoes might, it was found, require outside instruction before American workers could operate it, and this instruction could not be obtained from skilled American workers.

6. Of the 78 aliens imported under the blanket permit of June 7, 1939, not all were actually engaged in instructing the 700 American workers in this Bata method, and those so engaged did not spend all their time at instructing but also operated machinery or served as craftsmen, supervisors, inspectors, or foremen.

7. Some of the 78 imported instructors were actually engaged entirely in office or administrative work.

8. Officers of the Bata Co. or its affiliates who were admitted as temporary visitors under individual permits were employed on a permanent basis.

As a result of these findings, the investigators recommended that the company be permitted to retain 10 instructors for the vulcanizing process and for work on certain machinery, and that in all other respects the blanket permit of June 7, 1939, be revoked. They also recommended that 10 of 14 Bata executives admitted on individual permits be granted extensions until June 30, 1940.

These recommendations were embodied in an order by the Commissioner dated December 26, 1939, though effective date of the order was postponed until February 1, 1940, at the request of the company.

Briefs were then filed by the company and by the United Shoe Workers of America. The company admitted that 40 of the 78 alien instructors were actually engaged in management work, but contended this was vitally necessary. The Commissioner in consequence reclassified 15 of this group of 40 as administrative workers and on January 26, 1940, granted permission for a total of 25 of the 78 aliens to remain in Bata employ until the expiration of the permit. All others were notified on February 1, 1940, that if their employment were not immediately terminated deportation proceedings would be instituted.

The company thereupon brought suit in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to restrain the revocation order on the ground it was arbitrary and illegal, and would cause irreparable injury to an investment of $1,800,000 in the Bata plant. Each of the aliens affected also claimed that loss of his job would result in irreparable injury.

On June 11, 1940, Judge Morris, of the district court, handed down an opinion upholding the Government's motion to dismiss the suit. The court held that the plaintiffs had adequate remedies at law either in deportation proceedings or in defense of criminal prosecutions.

In his decision announced today the Attorney General denied the requests of 47 alien instructors and 12 company executives for extension of their vistors' permits and ordered that they leave the country within a reasonable period or be deported.

The following are the alien instructors whose jobs were reclassified by the Commissioner on January 26, 1940, allowing them to remain in Bata employ until expiration of their visitors' permits on the dates shown below:

Alois Pikula, September 9; Joseph Hejmanck, August 17; Joseph Vachek, August 17; Ludvik Cerbec, August 11; John Dolezal, August 10; Joseph Hybner, August 10; Oldrich Klatil, August 10; Joseph Kolarik, August 10; Karl Novotny, August 10; Karel Ordau, August 10; Frank Smedek, August 10; Joseph Komarek, August 4; Alois Lata, July 6, 1940.

The following are the alien workers permitted, under the reclassification order of January 26, 1940, to continue as instructors in the vulcanizing process until expiration of their permits on the dates given below:

Hynek Zacek, September 9; Ladislav Zajic, September 9; Bozena Volcikova, August 28; Joseph Zboril, August 17; Joseph Fejfar, August 10; Frank Kovar, August 10; Stephanie Ondrova, August 10; Bozana Smigurova, August 10, 1940.

The following are the alien workers whose visitors' permits were revoked by the order of January 26, 1939, and who must leave the country within a reasonable time or be deported, regardless of the date of expiration of their original visitors' permits: Frank Polasek, Ladislav Vagner, Joseph Sevcik, Jerome Svec, Charles Dancak, Joseph Varek, Vladimir Javora, Francis Krizova, Vlasta Pavelkova, Bohumil Soupal, Julie Palarcikova, Francis Indrychova, Peter Biela, Charles Stastny, Jerome Svetlik, Hermina Husakova, Jerome Stefanik, Jerome Jurca, Antonin Javora, Karel Hlobil, Joseph Polasek, Frank Koncak, Lillian Svehlakova, Jerome Vasicek, Aneska Kocianova, and Anna Siskova.

The following are the executives of the Bata Shoe Co. or affiliates whose individual visitors' permits expired on June 30, 1940, and who must leave the country within a reasonable period or be deported: Gustav Blodig, Solomon Landesmann, Josef Polasek, Frantisek Ricica, Zikmund Skyba, Frantisek Smid, Karel Bara, Anton Ulehla, Robert Podzemny, Josef Cernovsky, Stepan Blaho, and Karel Aster.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I hope that constant reference will be made to the un-American activities of the Belcamp, Md., shop and any other shop in the United States that engages in such un-American activities, which are not only detrimental to the workers but to the very life of our country.

The United States, in my opinion, is in grave peril from subversive movements of that sort, and every human being in the country should work to the end that if there are aliens within our gates engaging in un-American activities they should be immediately deported. If, by chance, some of these people happen to be American citizens, something very drastic should be done to them. I am sure the House will join me in pushing this to its utmost conclusion. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED EXECUTIVE CIVIL SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 960, extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the bill that has caused so much discussion in the Senate?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It was under discussion for several days in the Senate and passed the Senate last Thursday.

Mr. MICHENER. I am familiar with the bill as it was when it was in the House. Have the Senate amendments done anything to remove any of the partisan part of the bill as it left the House? Have they attempted to make it more as a genuine civil-service bill should be?

Mr. RAMSPECK. My answer to the gentleman about that is that in my judgment it had no partisan matter in it when it left the House, and has none now.

Mr. MICHENER. I admire this about the gentleman: He is one of the outstanding and dependable Members of the House, and has always been frank about his civil-service bills. He has always admitted on the floor that the party in power would take advantage in enacting civil-service laws for its own benefit. I have seen the gentleman stand here, and heard him say that a bill did that, and he did not attempt to deny it. I believe that is true of this bill. It does seem to me, though, that where we are covering in 200,000 people or affecting 200,000 people who have been appointed within the last 7 years on political recommendations, there should be a competitive examination in order that all the eligible people in the country should be able to share in these jobs, regardless of their religion, their politics, or their hope for the future. These employees are paid out of taxpayers' money, and should be selected through genuine civil service. Covering these politically appointed employees into life jobs, without competitive examination, is not civil service.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we had Government employees to the number of about 560,000 in March 1933. On June 30 of this year we had over 1,066,000, and they have probably added 100,000 since then. No doubt we will have 1,300,000 by the end of the year. How long does the gentleman believe we can keep adding to the Government pay-roll employees by the hundred thousand and continue to keep this country from going into bankruptcy?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows as much about that as I do.

Mr. RICH. I know the country cannot go very long that way. Does not the gentleman believe we ought to try to stop it? We ought to put something in these civil-service bills prohibiting the Congress from establishing any more bureaus, and try to eliminate some of the Government employees. There will not be anyone back home shortly to do any work. They will all be down here in Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. FRIES, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, and Mr. REES of Kansas.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, October 1, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.
